

UNIFIED and Project Counsel Launch eDiscovery/eDisclosure Document Review Center in London

September 29, 2020 | By Gregory P. Bufithis, Esq.

LONDON (September 29, 2010) – UNIFIED OS Ltd and Project Counsel SCS announced today the launch of their new document review center in London. The center is located in heart of the city in the UNIFIED corporate headquarters.

The center provides an extremely secure, high capacity environment from which off-site support is provided to all legal and corporate clients of UNIFIED and Project Counsel. The relationship brings together two industry recognized experts in their respective fields to provide a comprehensive and robust managed review service to provide for the rapidly growing demand in this area. Staffed by experienced document review attorneys who are highly trained, multilingual, and fully vetted, UNIFIED and Project Counsel also ensure they are qualified in the jurisdiction of the particular matter to be reviewed in order to provide familiarity and compliance with local disclosure rules and obligations.

A full reporting platform developed by UNIFIED completes the service offering with 24 hour on demand client access to overall project progress, productivity, accuracy and cost. In terms of technology the center operates a particularly flexible and scalable infrastructure with extremely short lead times for commencement of new projects and highly flexible review platform configuration to tailor to the most demanding and complex workflow requirements. The service can provide an ‘end to end’, ‘collection to review service’ including all technology and resource in a bundled and therefore predictable price (measured by document reviewed or by other agreed metric). In line with the flexibility of the rest of the service this can be unbundled to meet the client requirements with alternative review platforms and/or a subset of services, for example ‘review without processing’ being available.

“Our comprehensive range of legal technology and outsourced support services has been specifically designed to support law firms, corporations and public sector agencies. The growing demand of our clients for us to manage the complete eDisclosure process led us to develop our managed review offering. Having worked successfully with Project Counsel on such projects it was a natural progression for us to formalize and extend our capacity to provide what we believe to be a market leading document review center. The key to successful review projects is without doubt the three C’s: communication, co-ordination and collaboration between the law firm, corporate client and ourselves and we found that with a reliable partner such as Project Counsel providing unrivalled access to the most important component, high quality people, we cemented the firm foundation of our service. ” said Paul Mankoo, Chief Executive Officer of UNIFIED. “We can handle the smallest as well as the largest, most complex project in a robust, defensible and timely manner to an extremely high and consistent quality”.

For Project Counsel the center marks a further and exciting expansion. “We have been staffing e-discovery document reviews in Brussels, Frankfurt, London and elsewhere in Europe (and Asia) for over three years as in-country review has taken hold”, said Gregory Bufithis, Esq., founder and managing director of Project Counsel. “We have a review center in Brussels with one to open soon in Hong Kong but we thought it be best to have a review center in London in partnership with a premier technology partner that has the in-depth experience to deliver a highly specialised, bespoke service. Our database of highly trained lawyers, interpreters, translators, and researchers with multi-language abilities and multi-discipline backgrounds works perfectly with the needs of UNIFIED and our own clients”.

Bufithis added: “We will also be joining with UNIFIED, to offer basic e-discovery training ... a sort of ‘E-Discovery 101’ as it were ... at our document review center. This was driven by discussions with our corporate clients as well as our aim to expand the pool of qualified and experienced attorneys in the London market. We’ll be releasing more details in a subsequent press release”.
