

Safeway Recalls Potato Salad Due to Salmonella Risk

by John Demas on 03/04/10 at 4:02 pm

Many of us have decided to save ourselves some time and purchase items from a grocery store deli that are already prepared. Delis in supermarkets have become much more prevalent in recent years, and as a result of the increased demand from consumers there are many more choices available. Unfortunately, one of those choices appears to be unsafe, as Safeway recalled potato salad due to concerns regarding salmonella.

According to the Associated Press:

“Safeway Inc. said Thursday it is voluntarily recalling potato salad products over concerns about possible salmonella contamination.

Safeway said the two red potato salad with dill products were sold in its deli department at Safeway, Vons, Pavilions and Carrs stores in 10 states in the West.

Customers who purchased the products are asked to discard them or return them for a refund.

Safeway said it is recalling the product after Reser’s Fine Foods, the source of the products, announced its own voluntary recall.

Salmonella is an organism that can cause serious and sometimes fatal infections in young children, frail or elderly people and others with weakened immune systems.”

There are innumerable different types of recalls, but food recalls are perhaps the most risky for consumers because of how quickly they tend to be eaten after purchase, particularly if those items are from the deli and ready to serve. If you or someone you love has been harmed by defective food, you need the help of Sacramento defective products lawyers who have a long track record of holding even large corporations accountable for the harm they’ve caused. Contact Demas & Rosenthal today to schedule a free initial consultation.