

San Francisco Pursuing Additional Study of “Congestion Pricing”

Posted In Climate Change, News, Public Policy

12-22-2010

On December 14, the San Francisco County Transportation Authority Board unanimously approved its Mobility, Access and Pricing (MAPS) Final Report, and voted 8–3 in favor of pursuing additional study of the concept, excluding the Southern Gateway scenario.

The Study finds that congestion pricing would be a feasible way of meeting San Francisco’s goals for sustainable growth, but San Francisco is still in the early stages of exploring pricing. A decision on whether or not to implement congestion pricing is still at least 2–3 years away, following additional study and outreach. If that decision is made, congestion pricing would not likely be implemented in San Francisco before 2015.

For more information, please visit the Transportation Authority website:

<http://www.sfcta.org/content/view/301/147/>

Please contact Michael Patrick Durkee or Thomas P. Tunny for more information.

<http://www.sustainablecommunitieslaw.com/>