

Possible probation violations in Mesa Arizona

By: Jeremy Geigle, Attorney at Law

A probation violation can occur in Mesa Arizona, or any other city in the Phoenix metro area, when a person does not follow the requirements of their court ordered probation. Arizona courts that impose probation hope that the restrictions will help the probationer learn how to act as a law abiding citizen. These restrictions clearly define the things that a probationer can and cannot do during the length of their probation. Some of the different types of probation violations that people in Arizona can be punished for are:

- Failure to pay fines
- Failure to pay restitution to the victim
- Failure to enroll in or complete rehabilitation or community service
- Possession of illegal drugs or weapons
- Associating with known criminals

This is not an all-inclusive list, as there are other types of probation violations depending on the circumstances of a particular case. Therefore, people should make sure to strictly follow all of the requirements of their probation. Breaking the rules is never a good idea, especially when it comes to probation. Arizona courts are not usually very lenient when it comes to probation violators. Therefore, anyone in Arizona who is facing charges for a probation violation should promptly hire a Mesa Arizona criminal defense attorney.
