

Construction Law Musings Turns One!

I looked at the calendar today and realized that Construction Law Musings turned one last Friday. I put up the first post at the blogger version of this blog on a whim on December 11, 2008 and it has been quite a ride. I want to make sure that I thank all of you who read and comment here on a regular basis. You know who you are and I appreciate each and every one of you.

Also, since that first post, I have made new friends across the country and even here in Richmond. The Guest Posts here on Fridays have also been a wonderful and surprising treat. The volunteer efforts to post here and the things I've learned are invaluable. I hope that you all have enjoyed them as much as I have.

I also want to thank the folks at Solo Practice University, particularly @scartierliebel, this is an opportunity of a lifetime that I would not have gotten if I hadn't taken the plunge and entered the great Web 2.0 world. I also want to thank @yahyahenry at Ariba and @jamesbedell at Build2Sustain for their interest and the opportunity to be a part of two great operations.

I had no idea a year ago that anyone would want to read about Construction Law when I started this blog, but the opportunities, referrals and business that have grown from this small corner of cyberspace are amazing. I wouldn't change my decision to start writing here at Construction Law Musings for the world.

Thank you again, and here's to another year!

Please check out my Construction Law Musings Blog for more on Virginia construction law and other topics.