Small Business Report Indicates Credit Still Tight in 2010

The worst of the recession may be behind us, but we're not out of the woods yet.

2009's economic meltdown is still sending shock waves, and hitting people where it hurts most - their wallets.

The issue is credit.

Many people - particularly business owners - still can't get it.

According to a small business report survey, roughly 34% of small businesses are unsure if they'll be able to access credit in 2010.

Even worse, 15% said that a lack of credit will prevent them from hiring more employees.

This report is a good indicator of what lawyers and other business professionals are up against this year, especially as it relates to clients and prospects.

Money is tight. Business and revenue are still a concern.

The good news?

We're all in the same boat.

After you read this small business report, you'll realize that ALL OF US face the same hurdles.

Challenging times though call for a plan of attack!

What's yours?
