

1 JEFFREY S. BUCHOLTZ
Acting Assistant Attorney General
2 CARL J. NICHOLS
Deputy Assistant Attorney General
3 DOUGLAS N. LETTER
Terrorism Litigation Counsel
4 JOSEPH H. HUNT
Branch Director
5 ANTHONY J. COPPOLINO
Special Litigation Counsel
6 ALEXANDER K. HAAS
Trial Attorney
7 U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division
8 Federal Programs Branch
20 Massachusetts Avenue, NW
9 Washington, D.C. 20001
Phone: (202) 514-4782
10 Fax: (202) 616-8460

11 Attorneys for the Defendants

12 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
13 NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

14)	No. M:06-CV-01791-VRW
15	IN RE NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY)
16	TELECOMMUNICATIONS RECORDS)	DEFENDANTS' REPLY IN SUPPORT
17	LITIGATION)	OF SECOND MOTION TO DISMISS
18	This Document Solely Relates To:)	OR, IN THE ALTERNATIVE, FOR
19	Al-Haramain Islamic Foundation et al.)	SUMMARY JUDGMENT IN
20	v. Bush, et al. (07-CV-109-VRW))	Al-Haramain Islamic Foundation et al.
21)	v. Bush et al.
22)	Date: April 23, 2008
23)	Time: 10:00 a.m.
24)	Courtroom: 6, 17 th Floor
25)	Honorable Vaughn R. Walker

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1
2		PAGE
3	INTRODUCTION.....	1
4	ARGUMENT.....	2
5	I. PLAINTIFFS FAIL TO ESTABLISH STANDING FOR PROSPECTIVE
6	RELIEF OR ANY WAIVER OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY FOR DAMAGES.	2
7	A. Plaintiffs Fail to Establish Their Standing for Prospective Relief.....	3
8	B. Plaintiffs Fail to Demonstrate that Sovereign Immunity Has Been
9	Waived as to Their Damages Claim.	4
10	II. PLAINTIFFS’ CONTENTION THAT THE FISA PREEMPTS THE STATE
11	SECRETS PRIVILEGE IN THIS CASE IS MERITLESS.	8
12	A. The State Secrets Privilege Is a Constitutionally Based, Common Law
13	Privilege that Cannot be Preempted by Congress Absent a Clear
14	and Direct Statement.	8
15	B. Plaintiffs Are Wrong that the FISA Speaks Clearly or Directly to Preempt
16	the State Secrets Privilege.	10
17	1. Section 1806(f) Applies to the Use or Admissibility of Evidence
18	Related to Acknowledged Surveillance.....	11
19	2. Amici Plaintiffs’ Contention that Reference to “Motions to 20	Discover Materials Related to Electronic Surveillance” In
21	Section 1806(f) Was Specifically Intended to Apply in Civil
22	Litigation to Preempt the State Secrets Privilege Is Without
23	Foundation.	14
24	3. Proceedings Under Section 3504 of Title 18 Underscore that
25	Section 1806(f) Applies to the Admissibility of Evidence and
26	Acknowledged Surveillance.	17
27	4. Section 1810 Would Not Be Rendered a “Nullity” By Application
28	of the State Secrets Privilege.	21
	III. THE COURT SHOULD AVOID THE SERIOUS CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES THAT WOULD ARISE FROM CONCLUDING THAT FISA
	SECTION 1806(f) PREEMPTS THE STATE SECRETS PRIVILEGE	22
	CONCLUSION.	25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES	PAGE(S)
ACLU Foundation v. Barr , 952 F.2d 457 (D.C. Cir. 1991).....	19
Adams v. City of Battle Creek , 250 F.3d 980 (6th Cir. 2001).	4, 5
Alderman v. United States , 394 U.S. 165 (1969).....	21
Al-Haramain Islamic Foundation v. Bush , 507 F.3d 1190 (9th Cir. 2007).....	passim
American Foreign Service Association v. Garfinkle , 490 U.S. 153 (1989).....	passim
American Foreign Service Association v. Garfinkle , 732 F. Supp. 13 (D.D.C. 1990).	3
Asmar v. Dept. of Treasury , 680 F. Supp. 248 (E.D. Mich. 1987).	6
Bowsher v. Synar , 478 U.S. 714 (1986).....	23
City of Los Angeles v. Lyons , 461 U.S. 95 (1983).....	3
City of Milwaukee v. Illinois , 451 U.S. 304 (1981).....	8, 10
Clift v. United States , 597 F.2d 826 (2d Cir.1979).	22
Clift v. United States , 808 F. Supp. 101 (D. Conn. 1991).	22
County of Oneida v. Oneida Indian Nation , 470 U.S. 226 (1985).	10
Davis v. Michigan Dept. of Treasury , 489 U.S. 803 (1989).	11
Department of the Navy v. Egan , 484 U.S. 518 (1988).....	9
Dep't of Energy v. Ohio , 503 U.S. 607 (1992).	4, 6
El-Masri v. United States , 479 F.3d 296 (4th Cir.), cert. denied , 128 S. Ct. 373 (2007).....	9
Fitzgibbon v. CIA , 911 F.2d 755 (D.C. Cir. 1990).	14
In re Grand Jury Investigation (Doe) , 437 F.3d 855 (9th Cir. 2006).	18
In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Garcia-Rosell) , 889 F.2d 220 (9th Cir. 1989).....	18
In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Garrett) , 773 F.2d 1071 (9th Cir. 1985).	18
In re Grand Jury Witness (Whitnack) , 544 F.2d 1245 (9th Cir. 1976).	18
Halpern v. United States , 258 F.2d 36 (2d Cir. 1958).....	22
Hudson River Sloop Clearwater, Inc. v. Dep't of the Navy , 659 F. Supp. 674 (E.D.N.Y. 1987).....	14

1 In re Hanford Nuclear Reservation Litig., 497 F.3d 1005 (9th Cir. 2007). 10

2 Kasza v. Browner, 133 F.3d at 1159 (9th Cir. 1998).. 9, 21, 22

3 Multi Denominational Ministry of Cannabis v. Gonzales,
 4 474 F. Supp. 2d 1133 (N.D. Cal. 2007).. 4

5 National Fed’n of Federal Employees v. United States,
 6 688 F. Supp. 671 (D. D.C. 1988).. 2

7 Nuclear Control Institute v. NRC, 563 F. Supp. 768 (D.D.C.) 14

8 Organizacion JD LTDA v. United States Dep’t. of Justice, 18 F.3d 91 (2d Cir. 1994).. 6

9 Organizacion JD LTDA v. United States Dep’t. of Justice, 124 F.3d 354 (2d Cir. 1997).. 6

10 Pittman v. Oregon, Employment Dept., 509 F.3d 1065 (9th Cir. 2007). 5

11 Rochon v. Gonzales, 438 F.3d 1211 (D.C. Cir. 2006).. 7

12 In re Sealed Case, 310 F.3d 717 (For. Intel. Surv. Ct. Rev. 2002). 23

13 Smith v. SEC, 129 F.3d 356 (6th Cir. 1997). 6

14 Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env’t, 523 U.S. 83 (1998). 2

15 Tyler v. Cain, 533 U.S. 656 (2001). 11

16 United States v. Alter, 482 F.2d 1016 (9th Cir. 1973).. 18, 19

17 United States v. Hamide, 914 F.2d 1147 (9th Cir. 1990).. 19

18 United States v. Hubbell, 530 U.S. 27 (2000). 9

19 United States v. Morton, 467 U.S. 822 (1984).. 11

20 United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974).. 8, 9

21 United States v. Nordic Village, 530 U.S. 30 (1992).. 4

22 United States v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1 (1953). passim

23 United States v. Texas, 507 U.S. 529 (1993).. 10

24 United States v. Tobias, 836 F. 2d 449 (9th Cir. 1988).. 18

25 Vermont Agency of Nat. Resources v. United States, 529 U.S. 765 (2000).. 5

26 Will v. Michigan Dept. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58 (1989). 5, 7

27 Worthington v. United States, 799 F.2d 1321 (9th Cir, 1986).. 18

28 Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952).. 23

1 STATUTES

2 18 U.S.C. § 2520. 5

3 18 U.S.C. § 2707(a). 6

4 18 U.S.C. § 2712. passim

5 18 U.S.C. § 3504. passim

6 50 U.S.C. § 402. 25

7 50 U.S.C. § 403-1(i)(1). 23

8 50 U.S.C. § 1801(b). 5

9 50 U.S.C. § 1801(m). 5, 6, 7

10 50 U.S.C. § 1806(a). 7, 20

11 50 U.S.C. § 1806(a)-(e). 12

12 50 U.S.C. § 1806(f). passim

13 50 U.S.C. § 1806(g). 13

14 50 U.S.C. § 1809. 4, 7

15 50 U.S.C. § 1810. passim

16

17 LEGISLATIVE MATERIAL

18 H.R. Rep. No. 95-1283 Pt. I. passim

19 H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 95-1720, 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4048. 7, 17

20 S. Rep. No. 95-701, 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3973. 19, 20, 21

21 S. Rep. No. 95-604, 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3954. 19, 20

22

23 FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE

24 Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(i)(3), (m). 8

25

26

27

28

INTRODUCTION

1 Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss or, in the Alternative, for 2 Summary Judgment ("Pls. Opp."), fails to establish that the Court has jurisdiction in this case or,
3 even if there were jurisdiction, that the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, 50 U.S.C. § 1801
4 et seq., preempts the state secrets privilege. Plaintiffs relegate to the last pages of their brief any 5 discussion of the Court's jurisdiction and suggest that the Court need not even consider the 6 question. But it is hornbook law that a federal court must satisfy itself, at every stage of the 7 proceedings, that it has jurisdiction. It is apparent now that the Court lacks jurisdiction for both 8 the prospective and the retrospective relief sought by Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs' assertion that they 9 still have standing to obtain prospective relief because the President has not disclaimed his 10 constitutional authority as to foreign intelligence surveillance is clearly wrong, and Plaintiffs also 11 fail to show that Congress has expressly waived sovereign immunity to permit their damages
12 claim under 50 U.S.C. § 1810.^{1/}

13 Assuming the Court proceeds to consider whether the FISA preempts the state secrets
14 privilege, neither Plaintiffs nor their Amici demonstrate that Section 1806(f) reflects a sufficient 15 clear and direct intent to preempt the privilege; indeed, Plaintiffs' arguments (like those of their 16 Amici) rest on parsed phrases from the statute and legislative history pulled well out of context.
17 Notably, however, Plaintiffs "do not advance" the radical argument that Section 1806(f) permits
18 discovery into whether a person has been subject to surveillance. See Pls. Opp. at 17. Instead, 19 Plaintiffs argue that the sealed document inadvertently disclosed to them establishes their 20 standing to proceed under Section 1806(f), see id., and they ask the Court to "recognize the mere 21 fact" that they have been subject to alleged surveillance based on that document, see id. at 23.
22 But Plaintiffs' position, as we have previously established, rests on nothing more than conjecture
23 and speculation, and the Government's in camera, ex parte submissions show that the serious
24 harms to national security recognized by the Ninth Circuit continue to be at stake in any attempt
25

26
27 ¹ Defendants refer to particular FISA sections based on the section designations in Title 28 50 of the U.S. Code, for example Sections 106(f) and 110 of the FISA will be referred to as
"Section 1806(f)" and "Section 1810" respectively.

to proceed under Section 1806(f). See Dkt. 17 (07-CV-109), Def. MSJ at 22-25.

ARGUMENT

I. PLAINTIFFS FAIL TO ESTABLISH STANDING FOR PROSPECTIVE RELIEF OR ANY WAIVER OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY FOR DAMAGES.

The Court cannot address the question remanded by the Ninth Circuit unless the Court has jurisdiction, and Plaintiffs point to no authority for the proposition that this issue can be ignored. See Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 94-95 (1998) (the requirement that jurisdiction be established is ‘inflexible and without exception’).^{2/} Indeed, in an analogous case that concerned whether Congress could restrict the Executive’s authority over national security information, the Supreme Court directed the district court to consider whether changed circumstances had affected the Court’s jurisdiction to grant equitable relief in order to avoid a serious constitutional question. See American Foreign Serv. Ass’n v. Garfinkle, 490 U.S. 153 (1989) (“AFSA”).

At issue in AFSA were statutory restrictions imposed by Congress on a confidentiality agreement required by the Executive branch before access is granted to classified information. See id. at 157. Plaintiffs challenged the Government’s compliance with those restrictions, and the district court held that the statute unconstitutionally interfered with the President’s constitutional authority to protect national security information. See National Fed’n of Federal Employees v. United States, 688 F. Supp. 671, 683-85 (D.D.C. 1988). Upon a direct appeal, the Supreme Court vacated and remanded “[i]n spite of the importance of the constitutional question of whether [the statute] impermissibly intrudes upon the Executive’s constitutional authority to regulate the disclosure of national security information—indeed partly because of it” See AFSA, 490 U.S. at 158. The Court directed the district court on remand to “decide first whether the controversy is sufficiently live and concrete to be adjudicated and whether it is an appropriate case for equitable relief,” and only then to consider whether the statute and Executive action could be reconciled and, if not, to consider the constitutional question. See id. This Court should ² At the last case management conference, the Court did not appear to foreclose Defendants from raising these issues. See Tr., 2/7/08 at 19 (THE COURT: “I’m going to let you make your argument with respect to all of these other issues and you may persuade me.”).

1 proceed similarly, starting with the issue of jurisdiction.^{3/}

2 A. Plaintiffs Fail to Establish Their Standing for Prospective Relief.

3 Plaintiffs devote a mere paragraph to why they may obtain prospective relief as to a 4 presidentially-authorized activity that lapsed nearly 15 months ago. Plaintiffs do not (and could 5 not) contend that the Terrorist Surveillance Program (“TSP”) is ongoing. Instead, they assert 6 only that there is some possibility that it might be reinstated sometime in the future because the 7 Government maintains that it was lawful and that the President continues to have authority to 8 direct foreign intelligence surveillance. See Pls. Opp. at 27. But a statement of the Executive 9 branch’s position on principles of constitutional law simply does not establish that an alleged 10 injury is “actual or imminent,” City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 101-02 (1983), or that 11 Plaintiffs face a “real and immediate threat” that an alleged prior injury would recur, id. at 105;
12 see also id. at 108 n.8 (“It is the reality of the threat of repeated injury that is relevant to the 13 standing inquiry, not the plaintiff’s subjective apprehensions.”). Moreover, the question of 14 whether a jurisdictional prerequisite for prospective injunctive relief exists is not an issue of 15 mootness or an exception to the mootness doctrine. As the Court held in Lyons, “[t]he equitable 16 doctrine that cessation of the challenged conduct does not bar an injunction is of little help in this 17 respect, for [plaintiffs’] lack of standing does not rest on the termination of the [challenged]
18 practice but on the speculative nature of his claim that he will again experience injury as the 19 result of that practice even if continued.” 461 U.S. at 108 (emphasis added).^{4/}

20 Because the Court lacks jurisdiction over Plaintiffs’ claims for prospective relief, 21 Plaintiffs must demonstrate that the Court has jurisdiction over their damages claim.

22
23 ³ On remand, the district court in AFSA found that the statute and legislative history were 24 inconclusive as to whether the Executive’s use of the confidentiality agreement had been barred
25 by Congress and noted that the Government’s reading of the statute at issue “allowed this Court
26 to follow the Supreme Court’s directive and to avoid the constitutional issue.” American 27 Foreign Serv. Ass’n v. Garfinkle, 732 F. Supp. 13, 16 (D.D.C. 1990).

28 ⁴ The Court in Lyons also observed that the “capable of repetition” exception to mootness is “likewise inapposite” in this situation, since it applies “only in exceptional situations, and generally only where the named plaintiff can make a reasonable showing that he will again be subjected to the alleged illegality.” Lyons, 461 U.S. at 108.

B. Plaintiffs Fail to Demonstrate that Sovereign Immunity Has Been Waived as to Their Damages Claim.

1
2 Plaintiffs are simply wrong that the cause of action on which they base their claim for 3 damages against the United States—50 U.S.C. § 1810—waives the United States’ sovereign
4 immunity. See Pls. Opp. at 24-26. But the text of that provision makes clear that it does not 5 authorize damages suits against the United States. If there were any doubt on the question, as the 6 Court is aware, waivers of sovereign immunity must be explicit. Multi Denominational Ministry
7 of Cannabis v. Gonzales, 474 F. Supp. 2d 1133, 1140 (N.D. Cal. 2007); see also Dep’t of Energy
8 v. Ohio, 503 U.S. 607, 615 (1992) (waiver of sovereign immunity must be “unequivocal”).
9 Ambiguous statutory language is not sufficient to waive sovereign immunity, nor is the existence
10 of even a “plausible” interpretation that the statute might subject the United States to suit.
11 United States v. Nordic Village, 530 U.S. 30, 34-37 (1992). Plaintiffs fail to meet this burden;
12 indeed, their own argument, which is based entirely on inferences and deductions, establishes 13 that Section 1810 is, at best, ambiguous on the matter.

14 Section 1810 authorizes a civil cause of action for damages based on violations of Section 15 1809, which an aggrieved person may bring against any “person” who committed the violation.
16 See 50 U.S.C. § 1810. Plaintiffs argue that the definition of “person” in the FISA includes the 17 term “entity;” that “entity” encompasses the United States; that Section 1810 does not expressly 18 exclude the United States from the cause of action as do some statutory clauses; and thus that 19 Section 1810 authorizes suits against the United States. See Pls. Opp. at 24.

20 Plaintiffs’ argument is replete with errors. In the first place, Plaintiffs turn the established 21 rule on its head: instead of an unequivocal waiver of sovereign immunity to permit suit against 22 the United States, Plaintiffs contend that Congress must expressly exclude the United States from 23 suit. This is not the law. Nordic Village, 530 U.S. at 34-37.

24 Second, Plaintiffs’ contention that the term “entity” in the FISA definition of “person”
25 must include the United States because, in other contexts, the term “entity” has been construed to 26 include governmental entities, is without merit. The case on which Plaintiffs principally rely for 27 this proposition, Adams v. City of Battle Creek, 250 F.3d 980 (6th Cir. 2001), holds simply that

1 municipal governments are among the entities that may be sued under 18 U.S.C. § 2520, and 2 does not address or concern whether the term “entity” includes, and therefore would waive the 3 sovereign immunity of the United States.^{5/} See id. at 985-86; see also Pittman v. Oregon,
4 Employment Dep’t, 509 F.3d 1065, 1072 (9th Cir. 2007) (municipalities not entitled to sovereign
5 immunity in federal court). That the FISA definition of “person” would include the entities listed
6 makes sense in the context of other provisions of the FISA not related to the civil cause of action.
7 For example, the definition of an “agent of a foreign power” uses the term “person” which, as 8 defined, would cover the entities listed as well. See 50 U.S.C. § 1801(b). Thus, including 9 various entities among the definition of “person” serves a different purpose in the Act than 10 subjecting the United States to suit.^{6/}

11 Third, Plaintiffs’ contention that the term “person” as used in the FISA includes the 12 United States also runs up against the general presumption that the term “person” does not 13 include the sovereign. See Vermont Agency of Nat. Res. v. United States, 529 U.S. 765, 781
14 (2000). This presumption may be overcome “only upon some affirmative showing of statutory 15 intent to the contrary.” Id.; see also Will v. Michigan Dep’t of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 64
16 (1989). Thus, the question here is not whether the term “entity,” standing alone, could be read to 17 include a governmental entity, but whether the inclusion of the term “entity” within the definition 18 of “person” is sufficient to overcome the general presumption that “person” does not include the

19 ⁵ In any event, the statutory provision at issue in Adams differs from the FISA in an 20 important respect. Under Section 2520 at the time of the Adams decision, a civil damages action
21 could have been brought against a “person or entity.” See Adams, 250 F.3d at 985 (citing 22 amendment to 18 U.S.C. § 2520 adding “entity”). Section 1810, however, is limited to suits
23 against any “person”—and the term “entity” is included within the FISA’s general definition of 24 “person” that applies to all provisions of the Act. See 50 U.S.C. § 1801(m) (“person” means 25 “any individual, including any officer or employee of the Federal Government, or any group, 26 entity, association, corporation, or foreign power”).

27 ⁶ The report of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence for the Foreign 28 Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 indicates that the term “person” was “intended to make explicit that entities can be persons where the term “person” is used—in particular that “entities” could be targeted as agents of a foreign power—and specifically states that “[w]here it is intended that only natural persons are referred to, the term “individual” U.S. person or “individual” person is used.” See H.R. Rep. No. 95-1283, Pt. 1, at 67, 95th Congress, 2d Session (Exhibit No. 1 submitted herewith).

sovereign. This analysis must occur in deciding whether sovereign immunity has been

1 “unequivocally” waived, Dep’t of Energy, 503 U.S. at 615—meaning that the presumption that 2 “person” does not include the sovereign is even stronger in this particular context.
3

4 Fourth, as we established in our opening brief, where Congress did intend for the United 5 States to be subject to civil liability for violations of the FISA, it said so expressly. See 18
6 U.S.C. § 2712 (authorizing suit against “the United States”). And the fact that Congress has 7 expressly excluded the United States from causes of action under the Electronic Communications
8 Privacy Act, see 18 U.S.C. § 2520 and § 2707, as Plaintiffs note, see Pls. Opp. at 24, reinforces 9 the conclusion that prior versions of these provisions, which authorized suit against a “person or 10 entity,” were not intended to waive the sovereign immunity of the United States. See Asmar v.
11 Dep’t of Treasury, 680 F. Supp. 248, 250 (E.D. Mich. 1987).⁷

12 Plaintiffs’ separate argument that the presence of the phrase “any officer or employee of 13 the Federal Government” in Section 1801(m) constitutes a waiver of sovereign immunity, see 14 Pls. Opp. at 25-26, is likewise untenable. The phrase “any officer or employee of the Federal 15 Government” is included within the meaning of term “individual” in the FISA definition of 16 “person.” See 50 U.S.C. § 1801(m). It would be passing strange to conclude that there has been a 17 waiver of sovereign immunity, and thus that the sovereign (which, according to Plaintiffs, is an 18 “entity”) can be sued for damages, simply because Congress defined an “individual” to include
19 federal officers. Permitting individual capacity suits—that is, suits against such officers
20 themselves—makes complete sense when it is considered that civil liability under Section 1810

21 ⁷ The Ninth Circuit has not “rejected” Asmar, as Plaintiffs contend. See Pls. Opp. at 25
22 (citing Adams v. City of Battle Creek). Adams is a Sixth Circuit decision that has never been 23 cited by the Ninth Circuit. Similarly, Organizacion JD LTDA v. United States Dep’t. of Justice, 24 18 F.3d 91, 94-95 (2d Cir. 1994), which purports to hold that a cause of action against a “person 25 or entity” under 18 U.S.C. § 2707(a) may be brought against a federal agency, also failed to 26 address the sovereign immunity issue, and has never been relied upon by the Ninth Circuit. The 27 Second Circuit later upheld dismissal of that case without considering the sovereign immunity 28 issue. See Organizacion JD LTDA v. United States Dep’t of Justice, 124 F.3d 354 (2d Cir.
1997). In addition, the Sixth Circuit vacated and withdrew a prior panel decision which had held, based in part on Organizacion JD LTDA, that Section 2520 waived the sovereign immunity of the United States, and left that issue open on remand. See Smith v. SEC, 129 F.3d 356, 364 (6th Cir. 1997).

1 is linked to violations of Section 1809, which imposes criminal liability against individuals who
2 act “intentionally” (including officers or employees of the United States).^{8/} In this manner, civil 3 liability under Section 1810 is linked to intentional misconduct by individual federal employees
4 and officials.^{9/}

5 Plaintiffs’ contention also suffers from the same flaw as their “entity” argument: because 6 suit against an official in his or her official capacity is a suit against the sovereign, see Will, 491
7 U.S. at 71, an express waiver of sovereign immunity is required. Plaintiffs contend that the 8 reference to “officers and employees of the United States” in Section 1801(m) is alone sufficient
9 to waive sovereign immunity because, where suit has been authorized against “the United States”
10 for FISA violations, the conduct of federal officers and employees is at issue, see Pls. Opp. at 26
11 (citing 18 U.S.C. § 2712, which authorizes an action “against the United States to recover money
12 damages” for violations of 50 U.S.C. §§ 1806(a), 1825(a), and 1845(a)).^{10/} But those provisions
13 merely show a congressional determination that “the United States” may be subject to civil 14 liability for certain violations of the FISA by its employees, but not for all (such as those 15 requiring criminal intent). The use of the term “the United States” serves to distinguish those 16 circumstances, not “equate” them.^{11/}

17
18 ⁸ Section 1809(a) provides that a “person is guilty of an offense if he intentionally 19 (1) engages in electronic surveillance under color of law except as authorized by statute; or 20 (2) discloses or uses information obtained under color of law by electronic surveillance, knowing or having reason to know that that information was obtained through electronic surveillance not authorized by statute.” 50 U.S.C. § 1809(a).

21 ⁹ See also H.R. Conf. Rep. 95-1720, at 33-34, reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4048, 22 4062-63 (indicating that the “conferees agree that the civil liability of intelligence agents under 23 this Act should coincide with the criminal liability.”) (Exhibit No. 2 submitted herewith).

24 ¹⁰ These provisions concern the use of information gathered through electronic 25 surveillance, physical searches, or pen register/trap and trace devices, see 50 U.S.C. §§ 1806(a), 1825(a), 1845(a). And the remedy provided against the United States is the “exclusive remedy” for such violations. See 18 U.S.C. § 2712(d).

26 ¹¹ Causes of action against officers or employees of the Government under Title VII of 27 the Civil Rights Act, see Pls. Opp. at 25, are easily distinguished since such claims are expressly 28 directed at “executive departments” of the United States as “employers.” See Rochon v.
Gonzales, 438 F.3d 1211, 1215-16 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

1 For the foregoing reasons, the Court has no jurisdiction to proceed in this case, and need
2 not and should not reach the FISA preemption issue.^{12/}

3 II. PLAINTIFFS' CONTENTION THAT THE FISA PREEMPTS THE STATE
4 SECRETS PRIVILEGE IN THIS CASE IS MERITLESS.

5 To the extent the Court reaches the issue of whether the FISA preempts the state secrets
6 privilege in this case, Plaintiffs' interpretation of the statute and its legislative history fails to 7 demonstrate any clear and direct^{13/} intent by Congress to abrogate that privilege. Moreover,
8 Plaintiffs' decision to rely on the sealed document as the basis for preemption in this case brings 9 to the fore the serious national security harms recognized by the Ninth Circuit that would be at 10 risk in further proceedings under Section 1806(f).

11 A. The State Secrets Privilege Is a Constitutionally Based, Common Law
12 Privilege that Cannot be Preempted by Congress Absent a Clear and 13 Direct Statement.

14 Plaintiffs begin their discussion of the preemption issue by calling into question the 15 applicable standard. Plaintiffs contend first that the state secrets privilege has no constitutional 16 status, but is merely one of federal common law and, that a "clear and manifest purpose" to 17 preempt a common law privilege is not required. See Pls. Opp. at 9. Rather, Plaintiffs contend, 18 federal statutory law can preempt federal common law if Congress simply "occupies the field"
19 with a "comprehensive regulatory program." See id. (citing City of Milwaukee v. Illinois, 451 20 U.S. 304, 316-17 (1981)). All of these positions are wrong.

21 To begin with, Plaintiffs' reading of United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), is 22 meritless. See Pls. Opp. at 10. The Nixon Court's statement that the presidential privilege for 23 ¹² Finally, Plaintiffs' assertion that their Complaint in this case "may be characterized as 24 alleging both official and personal capacity claims," see Pls. Opp. at 26, is remarkable at this 25 stage. Plaintiffs are the master of their own complaint and should know who they sued and in 26 what capacity. It could not possibly constitute "good cause" for Plaintiffs to serve individual 27 Defendants well after the 120 days permitted, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(i)(3), (m), to deal with a 28 jurisdictional defect caused by their own mistaken reading of the law.

¹³ As set forth in our opening brief, the state secrets privilege is both (i) constitutionally based, requiring a clear expression of congressional intent where Congress seeks to abrogate such power, and (ii) has a firm foundation in the common law, requiring Congress to speak directly to if it intends to abrogate federal common law. See Defs. Mem. at 13-15. We refer to this standard throughout as the "clear and direct" standard.

1 protecting military, diplomatic, or sensitive national security secrets is grounded in “areas of Art.
2 II duties,” Nixon, 418 U.S. at 710-11 (citing United States v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1 (1953)), was 3 central to its holding that a more general claim of Executive privilege was less compelling in the 4 face of demands for evidence in a criminal proceeding. See id. at 706-07, 711. The distinction
5 Plaintiffs advance—that a general Executive privilege may be constitutionally based, but the 6 state secrets privilege is not, see Pls. Opp. at 10—is plainly inconsistent with the Court’s
7 discussion of the state secrets privilege in Nixon. But our argument is not based merely on 8 Nixon. In Department of Navy v. Egan, 484 U.S. 518 (1988), the Supreme Court acknowledged
9 that the President’s authority to protect national security information is grounded in his Article II
10 powers, id. at 527, and Reynolds itself recognized the state secrets privilege “to avoid the 11 constitutional conflict that might have arisen had the judiciary demanded that the Executive 12 disclose highly sensitive military secrets.” El-Masri v. United States, 479 F.3d 296, 303 (4th 13 Cir.) (citing Reynolds, 345 U.S. at 6 & n.9 (noting constitutional foundation asserted by the 14 United States for the privilege)), cert. denied, 128 S. Ct. 373 (2007). Thus, as the Court of 15 Appeals for the Fourth Circuit recently held, “[a]lthough the state secrets privilege was 16 developed at common law, it performs a function of constitutional significance because it allows 17 the executive branch to protect information whose secrecy is necessary to its military and 18 foreign-affairs responsibilities.” Id. at 303.^{14/} For this reason, a clear expression of congressional 19 intent is required before the Court can conclude that Congress intended to restrict the Executive’s
20 constitutional authority in the manner advanced by Plaintiffs.^{15/} See Memorandum in Support of 21

22 ¹⁴ The Ninth Circuit has not ruled otherwise in observing that the privilege is a common 23 law evidentiary privilege. See Kasza v. Browner, 133 F.3d 1159, 1167 (9th Cir. 1998); Al-
24 Haramain, 507 F.3d at 1196. A privilege may be of both constitutional and common law
25 pedigree, see, e.g., United States v. Hubbell, 530 U.S. 27, 51-53 (2000) (Thomas, J., concurring)
26 (discussing common law origins of privilege against self-incrimination), and the Ninth Circuit
27 did not need to address, and did not in fact address, the constitutional dimension of the privilege 28 in prior cases. For this reason, the contention by Amici Plaintiffs that the common law origin of the privilege is “law of the case,” see Pls. Amici (Dkt. 440, MDL-1791) at 21, is meritless.

¹⁵ Other courts have therefore looked with an appropriately skeptical eye towards claims that statutory provisions abrogate the state secrets privilege. See, e.g., Salisbury v. United States, 690 F.2d 966, 975 n.4 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (stating that “by promulgating the FTCA, Congress did
Al-Haramain v. Bush (07-CV-109) (MDL-1791) Defs. Reply 2d Motion to Dismiss/Summary Judgment -9-

1 Defendants' Motion to Dismiss or for Summary Judgment ("Defs. Mem.") at 14 (collecting
2 cases). In addition, the doctrine of constitutional avoidance counsels that statutes be construed
3 with a "reconciling interpretation" where possible to avoid such serious constitutional concerns.
4 AFSA, 490 U.S. at 161-62.

5 Even if the state secrets privilege were a "mere" common law privilege, a clear and direct 6 statement of congressional intent is required for Congress to supplant federal common law, and 7 Plaintiffs are wrong in contending that the Supreme Court's decision in City of Milwaukee
8 established a lesser or different standard. See Pls. Opp. at 10. On the contrary, the Supreme 9 Court has consistently applied the "evident purpose" and "direct statement" standards to decide if 10 Congress has preempted federal common law. See United States v. Texas, 507 U.S. 529, 534
11 (1993); County of Oneida v. Oneida Indian Nation, 470 U.S. 226, 236-37 (1985) ("As we stated
12 in [City of Milwaukee], federal common law is used as a 'necessary expedient' when Congress
13 has not 'spoken to a particular issue.'") (original emphasis); see also City of Milwaukee, 451
14 U.S. at 318-19 (holding that the intent of Congress was "clearly to establish" a comprehensive 15 federal statutory remedy to replace a federal common law remedy in addressing legal claims
16 concerning water pollution).¹⁶ Thus, the question here is not whether the FISA is a 17 "comprehensive scheme," but whether it "speak[s] directly" to the "particular issue" of whether 18 the state secrets privilege is preempted by Section 1806(f) in cases where the Government has 19 not confirmed or denied alleged surveillance activities.

20 B. Plaintiffs Are Wrong that the FISA Speaks Clearly and Directly to Preempt
21 the State Secrets Privilege.

22 Plaintiffs' contention that the FISA preempts the state secrets privilege rests primarily on 23 one clause in Section 1806(f) indicating that the provision applies whenever a motion or request
24 is made by an aggrieved person "to obtain materials related to electronic surveillance" See

25 _____
26 not and perhaps could not for constitutional reasons . . . abrogate the state secrets privilege of the 27 executive.") (internal citation omitted).

28 ¹⁶ The Ninth Circuit has also applied the "evident purpose/direct statement" standard in holding that comprehensive statutory scheme supplanted federal common law. *See In re
Hanford Nuclear Reservation Litig.*, 497 F.3d 1005, 1018-20 (9th Cir. 2007).

1 Pls. Opp. at 12. But, as detailed below, Plaintiffs (as well as their Amici) vastly over-read this
2 clause outside the full context of section it resides in, and fail to establish that Congress clearly 3 intended to preempt the state secrets privilege and permit adjudication of the lawfulness of 4 surveillance that is merely alleged where the Government has asserted the state secrets privilege.

5 1. Section 1806(f) Applies to the Use or Admissibility of Evidence Related to 6 Acknowledged Surveillance.

7 The first flaw in Plaintiffs' and Amici Plaintiffs' assessment of the preemption issue is 8 that they disregard the context of the statutory provision at issue—50 U.S.C. § 1806, which 9 concerns the use of information in judicial proceedings—and, instead, contend that one part of 10 one clause in one sub-section of Section 1806 sub silentio abrogates the state secrets privilege.
11 But “[s]tatutory language cannot be construed in a vacuum.” Davis v. Michigan Dep’t of 12 Treasury, 489 U.S. 803, 809 (1989). Rather, “it is a fundamental canon of statutory construction 13 that the words of a statute must be read in their context and with a view to their place in the 14 overall statutory scheme.” Id. (citing United States v. Morton, 467 U.S. 822, 828 (1984)); see 15 also Tyler v. Cain, 533 U.S. 656, 662 (2001) (same). The location and role that Section 1806(f)
16 plays within Section 1806 as a whole is crucial to understanding Section 1806(f)’s purpose. See 17 Defs. Mem. at 16-17.

18 In brief, subsection (a) of Section 1806 requires that information acquired from electronic 19 surveillance conducted pursuant to the FISA be handled in accord with minimization procedures;
20 subsection (b) provides that such information may not be disclosed for law enforcement purposes 21 unless accompanied by a statement that it may only be used in a criminal proceeding with the 22 advance notice of the Attorney General; subsection (c) requires notice by the United States if it
23 intends to use such information against an aggrieved person; subsection (d) imposes a similar 24 notice requirement on states and political subdivisions; and subsection (e) authorizes a motion to 25 suppress such information by a person against whom it is to be or has been introduced or 26 otherwise used. See 50 U.S.C. § 1806(a)-(e). Each of these provisions expressly relates to the 27 disclosure of surveillance information when it is being used by a governmental entity against a 28 criminal defendant.

1 Subsection (f), of course, follows these earlier subsections. Subsection (f) establishes
2 procedures that may be invoked by the Attorney General under which the district court shall 3 review in camera, ex parte any surveillance related materials as may be necessary to determine
4 whether the surveillance of the aggrieved person was lawfully authorized and conducted. See 50
5 U.S.C. § 1806(f). The parties generally agree that Section 1806(f) applies in three circumstances, 6 and Plaintiffs concede that the first two—whenever the Government provides notice under 7 Sections 1806(c) or (d) that it intends to use surveillance-based evidence in a proceeding against 8 an aggrieved person; or whenever an aggrieved person moves to suppress such evidence under 9 Section 1806(e)—apply only where the surveillance at issue has been publicly acknowledged by 10 the Government. See Pls. Opp. at 15. The dispute in this case focuses on the meaning of the 11 third circumstance in which Section 1806(f) applies:

12 [W]henever any motion or request is made by an aggrieved person pursuant to any 13 other statute or rule of the United States or any State before any court or other 14 authority of the United States or any State to discover or obtain applications or 15 orders or other materials relating to electronic surveillance or to discover, obtain, 16 or suppress evidence or information obtained or derived from electronic 17 surveillance under this chapter.

18 See 50 U.S.C. § 1806(f).

19 Notably, neither Plaintiffs nor Amici Plaintiffs contend that this provision, as a whole, 20 preempts the state secrets privilege but, rather, that just one aspect of it does. Through the use of 21 ellipses, line breaks, or italics, Plaintiffs and Amici focus on a single phrase: “whenever any 22 motion or request is made by an aggrieved person . . . to discover or obtain applications or 23 orders or other materials relating to electronic surveillance . . .” See Pls. Opp. at 16; Pls. Amici
24 at 3, 15. Plaintiffs and Amici discuss this clause as if it were a free-standing provision, and 25 contend that it requires the use of in camera, ex parte procedures—and thus abrogates the state
26 secrets privilege—whenever a party to a civil action seeks to discover or obtain materials related 27 to alleged electronic surveillance in the face of a state secrets privilege assertion.

28 These few words cannot bear the meaning that Plaintiffs and their Amici ascribe to them, and certainly cannot be said to “speak directly” to preemption of the state secrets privilege.
Nothing in the clause’s relevant language indicates that the provision necessarily applies to civil suits challenging the lawfulness of surveillance that is merely alleged, rather than acknowledged.

1
2 Instead, an aggrieved party seeking to suppress evidence he contends was obtained or derived
3 from unlawful surveillance might well seek discovery of precisely those materials. Thus, even if 4 this language is examined in total isolation from the rest of Section 1806(f), it does not clearly 5 support Plaintiffs' argument.

6 When examined in light of the remainder of Section 1806, the language even more
7 plainly does not constitute the type of clear and direct statement that would be needed to displace
8 the state secrets privilege. In particular, the very next subsection—Section 1806(g), entitled 9 “suppression of evidence; denial of motion”—provides that “if the United States district court
10 pursuant to subsection (f) of this section determines that the surveillance was not lawfully 11 authorized or conducted, it shall . . . suppress the evidence which was unlawfully obtained or 12 derived from electronic surveillance of the aggrieved person or otherwise grant the motion of the 13 aggrieved person” [or] “[i]f the court determines that the surveillance was lawfully authorized 14 and conducted, it shall deny the motion of the aggrieved person except to the extent that due 15 process requires discovery or disclosure.” See 50 U.S.C. § 1806(g). This provision further 16 demonstrates that Section 1806(f) establishes procedures for judicial review when invoked by the 17 Attorney General in connection with notice by the Government or motions to discover or 18 challenge the admissibility of surveillance evidence, in order for the court to determine, without 19 compromising sensitive intelligence information, whether the surveillance was lawfully 20 authorized and should be admitted or suppressed. And in all of these circumstances, where the 21 use and admissibility of surveillance evidence is at stake, the surveillance itself must be 22 acknowledged.

23 Plaintiffs do not dispute that the procedures under Section 1806(f) apply solely to an 24 “aggrieved person,” see Pls. Opp. at 17, and “do not advance” the radical theory that the phrase
25 “motion to discover materials related to electronic surveillance” in Section 1806(f) permits
26 discovery of whether someone has been subject to surveillance, see id. Instead, Plaintiffs rest on 27 the factual contention that they are aggrieved parties as a result of the disclosure of the sealed
28 document. See id. We address below the serious issues raised by that argument, but stress here

1 that Plaintiffs do not contend that Section 1806(f) should be read to require the disclosure of 2 whether someone has been subject to surveillance—only that it would preempt the privilege
3 where information concerning alleged surveillance purportedly has been disclosed to those 4 individuals inadvertently. Even that distinction, however, is hardly clear from the statutory 5 language or legislative history.^{17/}

6 2. Amici Plaintiffs’ Contention that Reference to “Motions to Discover 7 Materials Related to Electronic Surveillance” In Section 1806(f) Was 8 Specifically Intended to Apply in Civil Litigation to Preempt the State
9 Secrets Privilege Is Without Foundation.

10 Amici Plaintiffs, on the other hand, do advance the much broader reading of Section 11 1806(f) that it permits anyone in any civil case to force the adjudication of merely alleged 12 surveillance (as well as the disclosure of whether or not the person was surveilled). Amici 13 Plaintiffs contend that “motions to discover or obtain . . . materials related to electronic 14 surveillance” refers to civil proceedings and has nothing to do with the Government’s use of 15 evidence, or the suppression thereof, in criminal cases. See Pls. Amici at 12-13. But this 16 argument ignores the context in which this clause appears; fails to recognize that our reading
17 harmonizes all of the relevant provisions; and requires the assumption that Congress intended to 18 effect a radical change in civil suits through a single clause buried in a larger provision having 19 nothing to do with such suits.

20 Perhaps recognizing that their statutory analysis is not compelling, Amici Plaintiffs retreat
21 to legislative history, and contend that because this clause was imported from the House-passed 22 version of the legislation, Defendants’ reliance on the Senate committee reports to support its 23 assessment of Section 1806(f) is “fatally flawed,” see id. at 14. This argument is also meritless.
24 Neither the House-passed version of Section 1806(f) nor the relevant House committee report

25 ¹⁷ Indeed, Plaintiffs attempt to equate an inadvertent “disclosure” with an 26 “acknowledgment” of alleged surveillance, see Pls. Opp. at 17, is unsupported. See Fitzgibbon v.
27 CIA, 911 F.2d 755, 765 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (unauthorized disclosure of classified information 28 cannot result in declassification or official release); Hudson River Sloop Clearwater, Inc. v.
Dep’t of the Navy, 659 F. Supp. 674, 684 (E.D.N.Y. 1987) (same); Nuclear Control Inst. v. NRC
563 F. Supp. 768, 771 (D.D.C.) (same). Indeed, in this very case, the Court of Appeals upheld the Government’s privilege assertion as to the sealed document despite the inadvertent disclosure. See Al-Haramain, 507 F.3d at 1204.

1 supports Amici’s position—indeed, they undercut it.

2 First, the actual text of the House-passed bill did not establish separate procedures for 3 criminal and civil cases. The House bill contained two separate provisions that established
4 special in camera, ex parte procedures, to be invoked by the Attorney General, for review of the 5 legality of surveillance: Section 106(f) of the House bill would have established procedures for 6 circumstances in which information obtained or derived from electronic surveillance had been, or 7 was intended to be, introduced into evidence, or where a motion to suppress that evidence is 8 brought; in turn Section 106(g) of the House bill would have established similar procedures for a 9 motion or request “to discover or obtain applications or orders or other materials relating to 10 electronic surveillance pursuant to the authority of this title or to discover, obtain, or suppress 11 any information obtained or derived from electronic surveillance pursuant to the authority of this 12 title.” See H.R. Rep. No. 95-1283, Pt. 1, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 10 (setting forth House-passed 13 bill); see also Exhibit 17 to Pls. Amici at 5-7. In short, the House bill contained virtually the 14 same language as the enacted version of Section 1806(f) in two provisions instead of one—but 15 neither Section 1806(f) nor the House Bill suggests that they were designed for criminal and civil 16 cases respectively.^{18/}

17 Second, and contrary to Amici Plaintiffs’ assertion, the plain language of Section 106(g)
18 of the House bill made clear that it would have been applicable only when the government sought
19 to introduce evidence against a person. As an initial matter, subsection (g) applies not only to a 20 motion to discover an order, application, or other materials, but also to a motion to “discover,
21 obtain or suppress any information obtained from electronic surveillance.” H.R. Rep. No. 95-
22 1283 Pt. I, at 10 (quoting § 106(g) (emphasis added)). Moreover, subsection (g) would have 23 been applicable only in circumstances where the Attorney General files an affidavit stating “that 24 no information obtained from electronic surveillance pursuant to the authority of this title . . .

25
26 ¹⁸ Notwithstanding the language of the conference report on “criminal and civil cases”
27 that Amici cites, see Pls. Amici at 13, the committee report that accompanied the House bill—the 28 more pertinent legislative history of the House bill—also does not indicate subsection (f) and (g) were separate provisions for criminal and civil cases respectively. See H.R. Rep. No. 95-1283, Pt. 1, at 91-94.

1 has been or is about to be used by the Government in the case before the court.” Id. If the

2 Amici Plaintiffs were right that subsection (g) applies only in civil suits challenging the 3 lawfulness of alleged surveillance, the italicized language would serve no purpose.

4 In addition, the House bill expressly indicates in section 106(h) that, whether raised 5 pursuant to subsection (f) or (g), the special in camera, ex parte procedures established were 6 intended to adjudicate the lawfulness of surveillance in order to decide whether evidence should 7 be suppressed. See H.R. Rep. No. 95-1283, at 10. The legislative history in the House report
8 also notes that subsection (g) applies “[w]here the Government states under oath that it does not 9 intend to use evidence or information obtained or derived from electronic surveillance.” See id.
10 at 92. The report also states that subsection (g) provides for disclosure in some circumstances to 11 “the person against whom the evidence is to be introduced.” See id. at 91 (specifically referring 12 to a “defendant”). Thus, any reading section 106(g) from the House bill to pertain solely to civil 13 proceedings, and to apply outside the context where the use of evidence is at issue, is 14 unsupported.

15 Amici Plaintiffs also misrepresent Defendants’ position that Section 1806(f) could only 16 apply “in a criminal case” by inserting those words where they do not appear in our brief, see Pls.
17 Amici at 11 (citing Defendants’ Motion at page 13, line 3), and then proceeding to discuss at 18 length why Section 1806(f) could apply in a civil setting. See id. at 2, 4, 11-13. But we have 19 never argued that Section 1806(f) could never apply in a civil case. Instead, our argument is that 20 in either a criminal or civil setting, in order for Section 1806(f) to apply, the admissibility of 21 evidence relating to acknowledged surveillance must be at issue. More important, Amici 22 Plaintiffs mistakenly assume that because Section 1806(f) may apply in such civil cases, it must 23 therefore apply in civil suits challenging the lawfulness of unacknowledged surveillance. This 24 simply does not follow. For example, Section 1806(f) could be utilized in a civil setting where 25 the Government has acknowledged surveillance and issues arise concerning the admissibility of 26 evidence in such cases. See, e.g., United States v. Hamide, 914 F.2d 1147, 1148-50 (9th Cir.
27 1990) (Section 1806(f) invoked by the United States where surveillance acknowledged in a civil 28 deportation proceeding). And the conference report upon which Amici Plaintiffs rely nowhere

1 indicates that Section 1806(f) was meant to apply in any civil cases where the Government seeks 2 to protect information concerning alleged intelligence activities, where the use or admissibility of 3 surveillance evidence is not at issue. See Defs. Mem. at 21 (citing Reynolds, 345 U.S. at 12
4 (distinguishing between the use of evidence against someone and the need to protect state secrets
5 where the Government is a defendant in a civil case).^{19/}

6 In sum, the reading advanced by Amici Plaintiffs—that one phrase taken from one 7 subsection of the House bill’s overall “use” provision was inserted into the final version of 8 Section 1806(f) to ensure that it applied solely to civil cases and outside of the “use” and 9 “suppression” context of the statute and, specifically, to preempt any use of the state secrets to 10 protect alleged surveillance activities—is without any clear textual support and cannot constitute 11 the kind of “direct statement” necessary for the state secrets privilege to preempted. The 12 conference report to the 1978 FISA indicated that it was adopting the Senate version of Section
13 1806(f) with only “technical changes,” see H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 95-1720, at 31-32, 1978
14 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4060-61, and that would be an extraordinary weak foundation on which to find an 15 express preemption of the long recognized Executive authority to protect national security 16 information from disclosure.

17 3. Proceedings Under Section 3504 of Title 18 Underscore that 18 Section 1806(f) Applies to the Admissibility of Evidence and 19 Acknowledged Surveillance.

20 Amici Plaintiffs also contend that the reference to 18 U.S.C. § 3504 in the Senate
21 legislative history demonstrates that the term “aggrieved person” in the FISA meant someone 22 who merely has a “colorable basis for believing he or she had been surveilled.” See Pls. Amici at 23 116. This argument is also wrong; indeed, Section 3504 reinforces our reading of Section 24 1806(f). As set forth below, a motion brought under Section 3504 of Title 18 applies solely

25 ¹⁹ The House report also indicates that where the need to determine legality of 26 surveillance arises “incident to discovery in a civil trial,” the court should grant the discovery
27 motion only in accordance with the requirements of law” which, the report says, would include 28 law “respecting civil discovery.” See H.R. Rep. No. 95-1283, at 90-94. Thus, even if Plaintiffs’ reading of subsection (g) were correct, this passage of the report suggests that the disclosure of information in civil proceedings would nonetheless be governed by the discovery rules, and this would include evidentiary privileges such as the state secrets privilege.

1 where a claimant challenges the admissibility of evidence, and such a motion triggers
2 proceedings under Section 1806(f) to adjudicate lawfulness only where the challenged
3 surveillance has been acknowledged.

4 Section 3504 of Title 18, entitled “Litigation concerning the sources of evidence,” applies
5 only “upon a claim by a party aggrieved that evidence is inadmissible.” 18 U.S.C. § 3504(a)-(c)
6 (emphases added). The Ninth Circuit has repeatedly held that Section 3504 applies where the 7 Government seeks to use against a witness evidence that is alleged to derive from unlawful 8 surveillance. See In re Grand Jury Investigation (Doe), 437 F.3d 855, 858 (9th Cir. 2006) (“A 9 grand jury witness may refuse to answer questions based on illegal interception of his 10 communication.”) (quoting In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Garrett), 773 F.2d 1071, 1072 (9th
11 Cir. 1985).^{20/} Accordingly, Section 3504 requires the Government to affirm or deny the existence
12 of surveillance only where the admissibility of evidence is challenged. The provision does not 13 apply in any other circumstance. Moreover, even in this limited context, “because responding to 14 ill-founded claims of electronic surveillance would place an awesome burden on the 15 government,” such claims must be “sufficiently concrete and specific before the government’s 16 affirmance or denial” is required. United States v. Tobias, 836 F.2d 449, 452-53 (9th Cir. 1988)
17 (citing United States v. Alter, 482 F.2d 1016, 1027 (9th Cir. 1973)); see also In re Grand Jury 18 Proceedings (Garcia-Rosell), 889 F.2d at 223 (where claim of illegal surveillance is vague or 19 unsupported, no need to address adequacy of Government’s response).^{21/}

20
21 ²⁰ See also In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Garcia-Rosell), 889 F.2d 220, 223 (9th Cir.
22 1989) (same); Worthington v. United States, 799 F.2d 1321, 1323 (9th Cir. 1986) (grand jury 23 witness may refuse to answer questions “derived from illegal interception of his or her 24 communications”) (original emphasis) In re Grand Jury (Doe), 437 F.3d at 858 (there must be a 25 causal connection between questions posed to the witness and alleged unlawful surveillance); In re Grand Jury Witness (Whitnack), 544 F.2d 1245, 1247 (9th Cir. 1976) (Kennedy, C.J., concurring) (witness has no standing and Government has no duty to affirm or deny surveillance under Section 3504(a) where grand inquiry is based on independent evidence).

26 ²¹ For example, the court in Tobias required a response to the allegation of surveillance
27 where a government agent approached claimant while he was in a phone booth and was observed
28 communicating official information to someone by simply remaining on the line. Tobias, 836
F.2d at 453. Thus, mere speculation that surveillance activities might be occurring is not enough to require a response by the Government even under Section 3504. Moreover, if the alleged Al-Haramain v. Bush (07-CV-109) (MDL-1791) Defs. Reply 2d Motion to Dismiss/Summary Judgment -18-

1 In addition, with respect to the interplay between Section 3504 and Section 1806(f),
2 FISA's legislative history makes clear that Section 1806(f) itself does not provide a mechanism
3 for a party to confirm suspected surveillance. The Senate reports indicate that "the most common
4 circumstance in which" a motion for discovery of FISA materials governed by Section 1806(f)
5 "might be appropriate would be a situation in which a defendant queries the Government under 6 18 U.S.C. § 3504 and discovers that he has been intercepted by electronic surveillance even 7 before the Government has decided whether evidence derived from that surveillance will be used
8 in the presentation of its case." S. Rep. No. 95-701, at 63 (1978), reprinted in 1978
9 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3973 (Report of the Select Committee on Intelligence); see also S. Rep. No. 95-
10 604, at 56, 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3954 (Report of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary) (Exhibits 11 Nos. 3 and 4 submitted herewith) (emphasis added). Section 1806(f) thus applies only to 12 motions for discovery filed after a person has already established under Section 3504 that he was 13 surveilled. Section 1806(f) is not a procedure applicable to the antecedent motion under Section 14 3504 that, in the context of a challenge to the admissibility of evidence, seeks confirmation of 15 surveillance.^{22/}

16 Amici's reference to a sentence in the Senate committee report stating that Section
17 1806(f) "applies, for example, whenever an individual makes a motion . . . pursuant to 18 U.S.C.
18 § 3504," see Pls. Amici at 15, does not address how the two provisions relate and operate in 19 tandem. Read in its full context, this passage conveys a much different point than Amici suggest.
20 The preceding sentence provides that Section 1806(f) "states in detail the procedure the court
21 shall follow when it receives a notification under subsection (c) or a suppression motion is filed

22 surveillance does not concern the claimant's own conversations, he must make a prima facie
23 showing that illegal surveillance has occurred. See id. at 453 (citing Alter, 482 F.2d at 1026).

24 ²² An example of the interplay between Section 3504 of Title 18 and Section 1806(f) may 25 be seen in Hamide, 914 F.2d at 1148-49 and ACLU Foundation v. Barr, 952 F.2d 457 (D.C. Cir.
26 1991). In Hamide, the Government acknowledged FISA surveillance in response to a motion
27 under 18 U.S.C. § 3504; Section 1806(f) was then invoked by the Attorney General to determine 28 the lawfulness of that surveillance. Barr, in contrast, was a separate case brought by individuals involved in the same deportation proceeding, and the D.C. Circuit held as to those plaintiffs for whom surveillance had not been acknowledged by the Government that the Government was not required by the FISA to make such a disclosure. See 952 F.2d at 469 & n.13.

1 under subsection (d).” S. Rep. No. 95-701, at 63 (emphasis added); S. Rep. No. 96-604, at 57. It
2 then goes on, in the sentence Amici cite, to describe when the procedure might apply: “for 3 example, whenever an individual makes a motion pursuant to subsection (d) or 18 U.S.C. 3504,
4 or any other statute or rule of the United States to discover, obtain or suppress evidence or 5 information obtained or derived from electronic surveillance conducted pursuant to this chapter 6 (for example, Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure).” Thus, the reference to 7 Section 3504 of Title 18 is one “example” of a motion to suppress evidence acquired or derived
8 from electronic surveillance conducted under the FISA, and in this circumstance, Section 1806(f)
9 would apply to adjudicate any question of the lawfulness and admissibility of that evidence. This 10 is consistent with the purpose of 18 U.S.C. § 3504—to challenge the admissibility of surveillance
11 evidence and to obtain confirmation or denial of surveillance only in that context.^{23/}

12 For these reasons, the position Amici advance—that the reference to 18 U.S.C. § 3504 in 13 the legislative history converts Section 1806(f) into a procedure for permitting anyone in a civil 14 case to file a motion to discover whether they are “aggrieved” in the first place—is unfounded.
15 Such a view is also contrary to a clear expression of congressional intent, in both the House and 16 Senate committee reports, that the Government may choose to avoid disclosure of sensitive 17 intelligence sources and methods by opting not to use surveillance acquired or derived from 18 surveillance conducted under FISA or by declining to conduct judicial proceedings against an 19 individual. See Defs. Mem. at 20-21 (citing S. Rep. No. 95-701, at 65); see also H.R. Rep. No.
20 95-1283, Pt. 1, at 92.^{24/}

21
22 ²³ This same passage of the legislative history explains that the phrase “notwithstanding 23 any other law” means that Section 1806(f) would apply regardless of whether a motion to 24 suppress is made “pursuant to any other statute or rule of the United States.” See S. Rep. No. 95-25 701, at 63; S. Rep. No. 96-604, at 57. That phrase was not intended to address the applicability of the state secrets privilege, as the Plaintiffs contend, see Pls. Opp. at 13, 14, and viewed in its statutory context cannot be said to clearly waive the privilege in any civil case involving alleged surveillance.

26 ²⁴ Plaintiffs’ contention that the “choice” granted the Government under Section 1806(f)
27 is between the filing of an affidavit by the Attorney General to trigger Section 1806(f) or facing 28 “mandatory” or “unrestricted” disclosure of surveillance information, see Pls. Opp. at 13, is therefore meritless. The reference to “mandatory disclosure” in the legislative history on which Al-Haramain v. Bush (07-CV-109) (MDL-1791) Defs. Reply 2d Motion to Dismiss/Summary Judgment -20-

1 4. Section 1810 Would Not Be Rendered a “Nullity” By Application
2 of the State Secrets Privilege.

3 Finally, Plaintiffs and their Amici assert that the cause of action under Section 1810
4 would be rendered a “nullity” or “meaningless” if Section 1806(f) did not preempt the state
5 secrets privilege. See Pls. Opp. at 7, 15; see also Pls. Amici at 22 (Section 1806(f) would be 6 “stillborn” unless state secrets privilege preempted). This assertion is wrong primarily because it
7 assumes that the FISA cause of action applies only in circumstances in which the state secrets
8 privilege would apply. But as we previously have demonstrated, there have been, and will be,
9 instances in which the Government discloses the existence of surveillance evidence (for example,
10 under Section 1806(f) or 18 U.S.C. § 3504), and thus the Plaintiffs’ civil claims under FISA are 11 not foreclosed by the state secrets privilege. See Defs. Mem. at 18 n.18.

12 At the same time, however, the mere existence of a cause of action has never foreclosed
13 application of a privilege to exclude information that may be needed to adjudicate the matter.^{25/}
14 The state secrets privilege is not invariably a rule of “outright dismissal” as Plaintiffs contend,
15 see Pls. Opp. at 14-15, but excludes information from litigation where the Executive reasonably 16 shows disclosure would harm national security. See Kasza, 133 F.3d at 1166. In some cases that 17 might require dismissal, see id., but that possibility does not render any cause of action in which 18 the privilege might apply a nullity. Indeed, Reynolds and Kasza demonstrate that the state secrets
19 privilege may apply to suits brought under statutory causes of action, and the existence of a cause 20 of action says nothing about whether privileged information may be protected or the case can 21 ultimately proceed. There simply is no inconsistency between Congress’s creation of certain 22 causes of action, on the one hand, and the applicability of the state secrets privileges to certain

23 _____

24 Plaintiffs rely refers to the circumstances presented in Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. 165
25 (1969). But Alderman involved the use of acknowledged surveillance and the question of 26 whether records of unlawful surveillance “must be surrendered in order for the defendant to make 27 an intelligent motion on the question of taint.” S. Rep. No. 95-701, at 65; see Defs. Mem. at 20
28 n.19. Alderman certainly does not impose a mandatory disclosure obligation on the Government to disclose whether or not alleged surveillance has even occurred.

25 ²⁵ There is nothing in FISA’s long legislative history indicating that Section 1806(f) has 26 anything to do with permitting claims under Section 1810 to proceed.

disputes where it must be raised.^{26/}

1 Similarly, the contention by Amici Plaintiffs that “an argument against preemption”
2 necessarily means that the evidence to which Section 1806(f) applies is not evidence to which the 3 state secrets privilege applies, see Pls. Amici at 23 n.9, is well off the mark. Section 1806(f)
4 does operate to protect sensitive intelligence sources, methods, and information, as well as 5 surveillance applications and court orders, in an adjudication as to which that provision applies—
6 i.e. to determine the lawfulness of acknowledged surveillance-based evidence for admissibility
7 purposes. The state secrets privilege would serve to protect similar information and similar 8 national security interests in different contexts—such as in litigation like this where the 9 Government is defending against challenges to alleged surveillance activities. See Defs. Mem. at 10 21 (citing Reynolds, 345 U.S. at 12 (explaining need to protect state secrets where the 11 Government is a defendant)). Thus, while at times the purposes of the privilege and Section
12 1806(f) to protect national security information “may overlap,” that does not mean Section 13 1806(f) “speaks directly” to the existence or exercise of the privilege in every case (let alone this 14 case), nor encompasses all of the circumstances in which the privilege might apply to protect 15 national security in litigation. See Kasza, 133 F.3d at 1168.

16 III. THE COURT SHOULD AVOID THE SERIOUS CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES
17 THAT WOULD ARISE FROM CONCLUDING THAT SECTION 1806(f)
18 PREEMPTS THE STATE SECRETS PRIVILEGE.

19 Not only is Defendants’ reading of Section 1806(f) the better one, and not only does 20 Plaintiffs’ alternative interpretation lack the clear and direct statement required to abrogate the 21 state secrets privilege, but Plaintiffs’ proposed reading of Section 1806(f) would raise serious

22 ²⁶ Plaintiffs’ reliance on Halpern v. United States, 258 F.2d 36 (2d Cir. 1958), for the 23 proposition that a statutory provision would be rendered a nullity if outweighed by the state
24 secrets privilege is without merit. In Clift v. United States, 597 F.2d 826, 829 (2d Cir. 1979), the 25 Second Circuit declined to follow Halpern and thus greatly distinguished Halpern when the state
26 secrets privilege was again asserted by the Government in the same factual setting involving the 27 protection of information concerning a cryptographic device under the Invention Secrecy Act, 35
28 U.S.C. § 183 et seq. On remand in Clift, the district court found that the information at issue was still subject to the state secrets privilege and dismissed the case. See Clift v. United States, 808
F. Supp. 101, 109-111 (D. Conn. 1991 (finding that “sweeping waiver language of Halpern” did not apply and interpreting the Invention Secrecy Act to waive the state secrets privilege would “turn an absolute privilege into a qualified one, which is unsupported by precedent or statute”).

1 constitutional issues relating to the political branches' respective power to control access to 2 national security information.^{27/} The law directs the Court to make every effort to avoid 3 constitutional issues, let alone ones of this magnitude. See AFSA, 490 U.S. at 161 (where 4 congressional power to restrict Executive authority over national security information at issue,
5 district court “should not pronounce upon the relative authority of Congress and the Executive
6 Branch unless it finds it imperative to do so”). Where, as here, Section 1806(f) does not reflect a 7 clear intent to restrict the President’s authority to protect national security information.

8 In any event, Plaintiffs’ argument that, in light of Section 1806(f), the Executive is 9 operating at the “lowest ebb” of its authority in asserting the state secrets privilege here, see
10 Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 635-38 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring), 11 see Pls. Opp. at 19-20; Pls. Amici at 23-25, is meritless. To the contrary, Congress has expressly 12 and directly provided the Executive statutory authority that firmly supports the Government’s
13 state secrets and statutory privilege assertions in this case.^{28/} The Government’s privilege
14 assertion in this case is at the “highest ebb” of Executive authority. See Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 15 635-36 (Jackson, J., concurring).^{29/}

16 Finally, Plaintiffs’ decision to rest their preemption argument on a factual assertion—that

17
18 ²⁷ There would be an additional serious constitutional issue to use the 1806(f) procedure 19 outside the context of admissibility of evidence for which it was designed and instead use it for a secret trial on the merits.

20 ²⁸ Section 6 of the National Security Agency Act of 1959 mandates that “nothing in this 21 Act or any other law . . . shall be construed to require the disclosure . . . of any information with 22 respect to the activities” of the NSA. See 50 U.S.C. 402 note. Congress also granted to the Director of National Intelligence the statutory authority to protect intelligence sources and methods. See 50 U.S.C. § 403-1(i)(1).

23 ²⁹ Plaintiffs’ and Amici’s assessment is also highly simplistic and fails to recognize that 24 Congress itself may impermissibly intrude on presidential authority under the Constitution. See 25 Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 727 (1986) (“[t]he dangers of congressional usurpation of 26 Executive Branch functions have long been recognized”). Also, the Plaintiffs’ broad references
27 to other separation of powers disputes—such as whether the president’s constitutional authority
28 permits him to authorize warrantless foreign intelligence surveillance, see In re Sealed Case, 310
F.3d 717, 742 (For. Intel. Surv. Ct. Rev. 2002), or the adjudicatory process due enemy combatants—have little bearing on whether Congress may intrude on the president’s well-recognized constitutional authority to protect national security information.

1 the sealed document should be found to establish their aggrieved status to proceed under Section
2 1806(f)—only heightens the serious constitutional concerns that would be raised by further
3 proceedings. The Government’s privilege assertion sets forth the content of the sealed document 4 and why, despite its inadvertent disclosure, sensitive intelligence sources and methods remain at 5 risk should Plaintiffs’ standing be confirmed or rejected based on that document. Plaintiffs are 6 simply speculating about the matter and ask the Court to confirm information that remains 7 privileged: whether or not, based on the sealed document, they have been subject to alleged 8 warrantless surveillance. See Pls. Opp. at 23. The notion that the “Ninth Circuit did not think 9 such an adjudication would harm national security, or the court would not have remanded the 10 case for a determination of whether the FISA preempts the state secrets privilege,” see Pls. Opp.
11 at 23, is unfounded. The Court of Appeals did not suggest that this Court proceed in a manner
12 that might harm national security, nor even that the case proceed at all under Section 1806(f).
13 And, contrary to Plaintiffs’ contention, the Court of Appeals did clearly uphold the privilege
14 assertion over whether the Plaintiffs were subject to alleged surveillance, and found that harm to 15 national security would result from any such disclosure. See Al-Haramain, 507 F.3d at 1203-16 04.^{30/}

17 As Defendants have demonstrated, any further proceedings would inherently risk or 18 require disclosure of information that the Ninth Circuit agreed would harm national security, see 19 Defs. Mem. at 22-25, and any construction or application of FISA to permit this would thus raise 20 serious constitutional concerns that can and should be avoided.

21
22
23 ³⁰ See Al-Haramain, 507 F.3d at 1203 (“[W]e conclude that the Sealed Document is 24 protected by the state secrets privilege, along with the information as to whether the government
25 surveilled Al-Haramain.”) and id. (addressing the question of “whether Al-Haramain has been
26 subject to NSA surveillance” and holding that “judicial intuition about this proposition is no
27 substitute for documented risks and threats posed by the potential disclosure of national security 28 information”) (emphasis added). Thus, the notion that the state secrets privilege extends only to protecting specific technical “methods” of gathering or “winnowing” intelligence information, see Pls. Opp. at 23; Pls. Amici at 18, is plainly meritless—the privilege encompasses whether or not alleged intelligence activities even exist, for such a disclosure would also reveal sensitive sources and methods.

CONCLUSION

1 For the foregoing reasons and those set forth in Defendants’ opening memorandum, the 2 Court should dismiss this case for lack of jurisdiction or, in the alternative, grant summary
3 judgment for the Defendants.^{31/}

4 Dated: April 14, 2008

Respectfully Submitted,

5 JEFFREY S. BUCHOLTZ
6 Acting Assistant Attorney General

7 CARL J. NICHOLS
8 Deputy Assistant Attorney General

9 DOUGLAS N. LETTER
Terrorism Litigation Counsel

10 JOSEPH H. HUNT
11 Branch Director

12 s/ Anthony J. Coppolino
13 ANTHONY J. COPPOLINO
Special Litigation Counsel
14 tony.coppolino@usdoj.gov

15 s/ Alexander K. Haas
16 ALEXANDER K. HAAS
Trial Attorney
17 U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division
18 Federal Programs Branch
20 Massachusetts Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20001
19 Phone: (202) 514-4782
Fax: (202) 616-8460
Attorneys for the Defendants

25
26 ³¹ The Amici Plaintiffs argue at length about the potential application of Section 1806(f)
27 in the cases against the telecommunications carrier defendants. See Pls. Amici at 17-20.
28 Because those issues are not raised in this case, Defendants have not addressed them at this time and the Court need not and should not do so either.