Illinois Personal Injury and Tort Attorneys

5/26/2010

Personal injury lawsuits fall under an area of the law called tort law. Tort law is designed to address civil wrongdoing (not based in contractual obligations) and provide a remedy in the form of compensation for the wronged party. There are three kinds of torts--negligence, intentional and strict liability. Most cases in this country are based on proving negligence.

Damages for Personal Injury and Tort Cases

Many personal injury cases involve seeking compensation for physical injuries, but physical injuries are not the only type of injuries eligible for compensation. Compensation can also be awarded for property damage, emotional injury and/or harm to one's reputation. Plaintiffs can sue for medical bills, lost wages and pain and suffering among other things. Motor vehicle accidents cases also fall under personal injury law and these are the most common type of personal injury claim.

With so many moving parts, personal injury cases and other torts can get complicated. It's important to hire a knowledgeable and experienced attorney to advocate for your rights. If you or a loved one has sustained any kind of injury due to the negligence or intentional acts of another, contact us immediately to discuss your case.
