Denying Legal Rights to Soldiers a 10 on "Outrage Meter"

When California Congresswoman Jackie Speier heard the story told in this month's newsletter about military medical malpractice, she said it set off her "outrage meter." It's about a 70-year-old court ruling that has caused suffering for thousands of injured service members and their families. Speier introduced a bill with support from both Democrats and Republicans that will help servicemen and women recover some damages from botched medical care. But it won't change the fact that soldiers are still denied the right to hold accountable those responsible for their injuries in a court of law.

Hero Soldier Wins Fight Against Military Medical Negligence

Green Beret Richard Stayskal is an American hero – multiple deployments, critically wounded in Iraq, recipient of the Purple Heart and numerous other awards. Back stateside, army doctors twice misdiagnosed a deadly cancerous tumor growing in his lungs. After being told he couldn't sue the government for gross negligence, a terminally ill Stayskal refused to quit and successfully led the charge for justice on behalf of fellow soldiers who have been devastated by military medical malpractice.
