

Another Good Reason to Lower Your Debt Load

We've heard news stories from both sides of the red and blue fence about the so-called fiscal cliff we are approaching as a nation. Perhaps one opinion we can deem reliable is that of Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke. Chairman Bernanke recently cautioned Congress and the Obama administration to work out their differences or risk another recession in 2013.

Why the rush? The fiscal cliff refers to the contemporaneous tax increases and government spending cuts that will take effect in January, absent legislative action otherwise.

Economists fear lingering uncertainty about whether the U.S. will avoid the fiscal cliff is troubling investors and holding back spending, effectively keeping a lid on economic recovery. It appears as though fear of the fiscal cliff may be as damaging to our economy as the fiscal cliff itself.
