Delays Can Compromise New Legal Action

The pandemic is putting stress on many of our institutions, including America's legal system. First, know that we work hard every day to ensure that the legal rights of our clients are not compromised. But we are concerned that people who may have been injured before or since the shutdown have decided to delay contacting an attorney. Doing so could make it difficult to investigate a case, secure evidence and file all necessary paperwork. With online case evaluation, live chat and other technologies, there is no need to wait OR compromise personal safety.

Less Traffic Doesn't Mean It's Safer for Walkers or Bikers

With so many Americans forced to spend more time at home, long walks and leisurely bike rides are among the few ways we can combat cabin fever. That means bike lanes and walking paths are busy right now, while car traffic in many areas has dropped dramatically. But that DOESN'T mean pedestrians, bikers or even motorists can let down their guard as some drivers see less traffic as an excuse for reckless behavior.
