Foreign Corrupt Practices Act
2015 Year-End Update

BakerHostetler

Dear Clients and Friends:

Both the United States Department of Justice (DOJ) and the United States Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) have continued their focus on anticorruption enforcement in 2015. Although there was a decline in enforcement actions by both DOJ and the SEC under the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA) from 2014, recent actions and announcements have made it clear that FCPA enforcement will remain a priority in 2016. Over the course of 2015, the DOJ and the SEC initiated a total of 12 corporate enforcement actions, with the SEC responsible for 10 of the 12.

The DOJ entered into two corporate FCPA resolutions in 2015: a non-prosecution agreement with Florida-based IAP Worldwide Services and a deferred-prosecution agreement with New Jersey-based Louis Berger International. These two resolutions involved approximately $24 million in penalties. As for individual enforcement actions, the SEC and DOJ have pursued FCPA charges in seven different enforcement actions. This is somewhat lower than the total number of individual enforcement actions last year, but should not be interpreted as showing a downward trend in either prosecutions under or resources devoted to the FCPA.

Also this year, the DOJ's announcement of the Yates Memo, though not a substantive change to DOJ policy, reinforces the DOJ's focus on holding individual corporate wrongdoers accountable by conditioning cooperation credit on delivering information about individual wrongdoers. And the DOJ hired 10 new FCPA prosecutors in 2015, further showing that the DOJ is strongly committed to FCPA enforcement.

In a speech given on November 17, 2015 at the American Conference Institute's 32nd Annual International Conference on the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, Assistant Attorney General Leslie R. Caldwell described the DOJ's "increasing attention to the investigation and prosecution of international corruption under the FCPA." She focused her remarks on the expectations of transparency and disclosure that the DOJ has in corporate investigations, explaining that "voluntary disclosure does provide a tangible benefit when it comes time to make a charging decision." Caldwell also discussed the hiring of Hui Chen, previously the Global Head for Anti-Bribery and Corruption at Standard Charted Bank, as "Compliance Counsel" for the DOJ. In that role, Chen will assist DOJ prosecutors in determining if a company's compliance program is "truly . . . thoughtfully designed and sufficiently resourced to address the company's compliance risks."

As to the SEC's work, in a speech also given on November 17, 2015, at the FCPA conference, Andrew Ceresney, the Director of the SEC's Division of Enforcement, discussed the active work of the SEC's specialized FCPA unit. He said that, looking ahead, he "expect[s] FY 2016 will be another active year for FCPA cases." He continued by focusing on what he viewed as the main priorities for the SEC's FCPA program: self-reporting and cooperation, individual accountably, cooperation with foreign regulators and "ongoing efforts to ensure that the FCPA is enforced to its fullest extent."

Notable legal developments in 2015 included a federal judge's dismissal of a conspiracy count in the DOJ's indictment against Lawrence Hoskins, the former senior vice president for the Asia region for Alstom SA. Kinross Gold Corporation disclosed it was under investigation by the SEC and DOJ in connection with its West African mining operations. Alexion Pharmaceuticals also disclosed that it is under investigation by the DOJ, although details of the investigation were not provided. Three officers from Direct Access Partners were sentenced to two to three years in prison for FCPA violations.

Included below are summaries of the major enforcement actions, settlements, prosecutions, and declinations from the second half of 2015. We are pleased to offer this update and look forward to answering any questions or concerns you have about these significant developments in FCPA enforcement, compliance and defense.

Spotlight: Self-Reporting and International Cooperation

Self-Reporting and International Cooperation in FCPA Investigations, With a Look Toward 2016

FCPA actions continue to be a priority for law enforcement agencies and regulators, and a couple of key developments in 2015 should be noted in anticipation of the regulatory and enforcement environment in 2016. In 2015, the SEC filed nine FCPA actions against entities, including pharmaceutical and investment companies, and collected over $215 million in remedies. The SEC refined its policy, requiring a company to self-report FCPA violations in order to be considered for a deferred prosecution agreement (DPA) or a non-prosecution agreement (NPA). While the U.S. DOJ brought only two enforcement actions in 2015, recent activity has shown an increase in resources for FCPA prosecutions and a focus on self-reporting and cooperation.

International cooperation has also been highlighted by both the DOJ and the SEC in the last quarter of 2015, in part in connection with self-reporting considerations. The first-ever DPA of the UK's Serious Fraud Office's (SFO) with Standard Bank in December 2015 provides additional insight into the increasing global cooperation in FCPA investigations. These policy developments and investigatory processes are particularly noteworthy as companies consider regulatory and enforcement priorities.

Self-Reporting and Cooperation

Both the DOJ and the SEC highlighted the importance of cooperation and self-reporting in criminal and civil FCPA investigations. The chief of the Criminal Division, Leslie Caldwell, spoke of the importance of transparency in FCPA activities as well as ways companies can "mitigate" their FCPA exposure. For the SEC, self-reporting is a necessary step if a company wants to be considered for a DPA or NPA. The DOJ's and SEC's approaches to FCPA cooperation are addressed in turn.

The DOJ reinforced that self-reporting and cooperation are important in FCPA investigations, though not required. The key to getting credit in an FCPA case is "mitigation." Mitigation consists of (1) voluntary self-disclosure, (2) full cooperation and (3) timely and appropriate remediation.[1] This provides the government with information to determine whether to prosecute, enter into a DPA or NPA, or issue a declination letter. For example, in June 2015, certain officials of PetroTiger Ltd., a British Virgin Islands oil company, pleaded guilty to conspiring to bribe foreign government officials in Colombia. According to a DOJ press release, however, the DOJ declined to prosecute PetroTiger because "[t]he case was brought to the attention of the department through a voluntary disclosure by PetroTiger, which fully cooperated with the department's investigation."[2] In contrast, Alstom S.A., the French power company, pleaded guilty to FCPA violations involving paying bribes to foreign officials and falsifying books and records in connection with projects for state-owned entities in countries including Egypt, Saudi Arabia and the Bahamas.[3] Alstom paid $772 million in connection with its settlement.

The first factor of mitigation, voluntary disclosure, requires a company to disclose relevant facts "within a reasonably prompt time after becoming aware of an FCPA violation" and before an investigation "is underway or imminent."[4]

The second factor, full cooperation, requires companies to disclose facts about corporate and individual misconduct. "Cooperation" for mitigation purposes extends to providing documents and making employees available, particularly where those documents and employees are located abroad. This factor also references the policies set forth in the "Yates Memorandum," issued by Deputy Attorney General Sally Quillian Yates on September

9, 2015.[5] As background, the Yates Memo – a much-discussed development in 2015 – does not relate specifically to FCPA actions but pertains to the DOJ's efforts to "strengthen [its] pursuit of individual corporate wrongdoing" in both criminal and civil corporate investigations. The Yates Memo contains six directives and requires that "for a company to receive any consideration for cooperation under the Principles of Federal Prosecution of Business Organizations, the company must completely disclose to the Department all relevant facts about individual misconduct. Companies cannot pick and choose what facts to disclose."[6]

The third factor of mitigation is remediation, where the company's compliance program and culture are key. The DOJ will look at the company's "overall compliance program" and "disciplinary efforts related to the specific wrongdoing at issue."[7] On November 3, 2015, the DOJ hired a compliance expert, Hui Chen, who will provide guidance to DOJ's Fraud Section prosecutors in their evaluation of compliance and remediation measures. Thus, in light of these developments, it is critical for corporations to have in place robust compliance programs, with appropriate resources and independent personnel.

The SEC has also focused on self-reporting and cooperation as an important part of its FCPA mandate, and has now refined its policy by requiring a company to self-report in order to be considered for a DPA or NPA. On November 17, 2015, SEC Director of the Division of Enforcement Andrew Ceresney noted the "significant and tangible" benefits for companies that self-report and cooperate.[8] Ceresney stated that in order to "incentivize" and "encourage" companies to self-report, the SEC will now require a company to "self-report misconduct in order to be eligible for the Division to recommend a DPA or NPA to the Commission in an FCPA case."[9] And self-reporting is not enough. In order to determine whether a company is eligible for a DPA or NPA, the Commission will consider the factors set forth in the Seaboard Report, which include the "corporation's self-policing, remediation and cooperation."[10]

While the SEC has taken a firm stance on requiring a company to self-report prior to consideration for a DPA or NPA, this requirement is in line with the SEC's practice. Ceresney noted that "[i]n each FCPA case where the SEC entered into a DPA or NPA, the company involved self-reported the violations, and then provided significant cooperation throughout the investigation."[11] For example, in May 2011, Tenaris S.A., a global steel manufacturer, entered into the first DPA with the SEC and paid $5.4 million in connection with bribery payments to Uzbekistan government officials in order to obtain government contracts. The SEC noted that Tenaris conducted an internal review of its operations and controls, identified and reported FCPA violations by personnel in Uzbekistan, and "significantly enhanced its anti-corruption policies and practices" following its review.[12] Similar findings of cooperation and disclosure were present in the other DPAs that the SEC entered into with other corporations.

The DOJ's and SEC's guidance on FCPA investigations provides a useful road map for companies, and it is critical to keep these guidelines in mind when reviewing compliance programs and conducting periodic testing and auditing of these programs. For individual accountability, while the extent to which the Yates Memo provides new guidance or memorializes existing practices is debatable, it is a policy of the DOJ and one of which companies should be aware. In light of the Yates Memo, companies should look at their compliance programs and internal review processes and make sure they adequately take individual misconduct into account.

International Cooperation

The cooperation between U.S. and international law enforcement and regulatory agencies was highlighted in 2015 and is expected to continue into 2016. The SEC noted that a key to its success in FCPA actions is the "effective coordination with international regulators and law enforcement" as FCPA investigations

"routinely rely on evidence obtained from foreign jurisdictions, and often are conducted in parallel with foreign governments."[13]

Ceresney cited the recent settlement with Hitachi, Ltd. as an example of successful international cooperation. In that case, the Tokyo-based corporation Hitachi was charged with failing to account for improper payments on its books and records made to a front for the African National Congress political party in South Africa. Hitachi made the payments to gain influence in order to obtain government contracts to construct two power plants.[14] The SEC received assistance in its investigation from the Integrity and Anti-Corruption Department of the African Development Bank, as well as the South African Financial Services Board. Nearly three months after the $19 million settlement with the SEC, Hitachi settled with the African Development Bank Group.

In light of the discussion about self-reporting above, the DOJ notes that international cooperation is an important consideration for companies that consider mitigation. AAG Caldwell stated that "voluntary self-disclosure in the FCPA context does have a particular value to the department" in part because of the challenges posed by the international nature of the crimes. Caldwell warned: "As time passes and the world continues to shrink, we have more and more sources of information about FCPA violations, ranging from whistleblowers, to law enforcement, to competitors, to current and former employees, the foreign media, and others. So if you discover an FCPA violation that you opt not to self-report, you are taking a very real risk that we will one day find out, or that we already know, and you will not be eligible for the full range of potential mitigation credit."[15]

An interesting development in international cooperation and DPAs abroad is the Standard Bank matter. On November 30, 2015, the UK's Serious Fraud Office announced its first-ever DPA, with Standard Bank.[16] London-based Standard Bank was charged with violating Section 7 of the UK's Bribery Act of 2010. In its Statement of Facts, Standard Bank admitted that between June 1, 2012, and March 31, 2013, it and its subsidiary in Tanzania, Stanbic Bank Tanzania Ltd., made improper bribery payments. Standard Bank acted as lead manager for a sovereign debt offering for the government of Tanzania. In connection with its attempt to secure the mandate to raise the funds, Stanbic Bank made a $6 million payment to Enterprise Growth Markets Advisors (EGMA) Limited, a Tanzanian firm whose shareholders included government members, in order to induce members of the Tanzanian government to give the opportunity to Standard Bank and Stanbic. The SFO also noted the failings in Stanbic's anti-money laundering and anti-corruption procedures. Standard Bank paid nearly $33 million in penalties in connection with its DPA.

In its announcement, the SFO stated that it "has worked with the DOJ and Securities and Exchange Commission SEC throughout this process."[17] On November 30, 2015, the SEC announced it had settled with Standard Bank for $4.2 million for failure to conduct adequate diligence on EGMA and disclose payments in connection with debt issued.[18] The SEC noted that it did not have jurisdiction to bring FCPA charges against Standard Bank because Standard was not an "issuer" as defined under the FCPA.

Conclusion

The statements by law enforcement and regulators provide guidance for companies on the state of FCPA actions. The focus on self-reporting, particularly as a requirement by the Commission as a first step to any DPA or NPA consideration, is an important policy change going forward. It is also an important consideration for companies, as cooperation and self-reporting have both benefits and costs on a business level. Moreover, companies should be mindful of the development of international cooperation – particularly the UK SFO's usage of DPAs – in FCPA investigations. Regarding ongoing compliance responsibilities, companies should periodically review their compliance programs with a risk-based approach and ensure that they adequately take individual and corporate activity into account.

Legal Developments and New and Ongoing Investigations

Olympus DOJ Investigation

Beginning in 2012, Japan-based Olympus Corp., a manufacturer of scientific cameras and imagining equipment, has been under FCPA scrutiny for irregularities relating to its subsidiaries' medical business in Brazil. Olympus' indirect subsidiary, Olympus Latin America, Inc. (OLA) and OLA's Brazilian subsidiary, Olympus Optical do Brasil, Ltda. (OBL) were involved in the alleged misconduct. The U.S. subsidiary, and parent company of OLA, self-reported the conduct to the DOJ. Without specifying the status of the investigation itself, in August 2015 the company recorded a loss of approximately $19 million for the first quarter fiscal year ending March 31, 2016, and issued a news release, "Notice of Recognition of Extraordinary Loss Due to the Investigation by the U.S. Department of Justice Against Subsidiaries Relating to the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act" (the "Notice").

In the Notice, the company admitted that it was "currently continuing discussions with the DOJ towards a resolution, but in view of the progress" of the investigation, it would need to record the loss.

PTC Potential SEC and DOJ Settlement

PTC Inc., a Massachusetts-based computer software company, announced in its 10-K for fiscal year ending September 30, 2015 that it reserved a total of $28.2 million for a potential settlement with both the DOJ and SEC regarding alleged FCPA offenses in China. According to the filing, PTC Inc. said that it had reached an agreement in principle to settle the investigation into expenditures in China, "including for travel and entertainment, that apparently benefited employees of customers regarded as state owned enterprises in China."

The company stated in its 10-K, that there "can be no assurance that we will enter into final settlements on the agreed terms with these agencies . . . ." But even with this language, it is likely that the company will soon come to a final settlement with both agencies.

Hoskins (Alstom) Motion to Dismiss

A recent decision in the case against a former senior executive of Alstom Power, Inc. for alleged FCPA violations sheds further light on accomplice liability in FCPA cases. As background, there has been ongoing litigation regarding Alstom Power's alleged scheme between 2002 to 2009 to bribe foreign officials in Indonesia in order to secure a $118 million contract to build power stations for a state-owned and state-controlled electric company. Hoskins, a former senior vice president for the Asia Region employed by Alstom UK, was allegedly in charge of hiring consultants to assist with obtaining contracts, including the power station project in Indonesia.

In August 2015, the U.S. District Court for the District of Connecticut granted in part Hoskins' motion to dismiss the charge of criminal liability for conspiracy to violate the FCPA. The DOJ had charged that Hoskins conspired to violate the FCPA by "acting together with" a domestic concern. The court addressed the issue of "whether a non-resident foreign national could be subject to criminal liability under the FCPA, even where he is not an agent of a domestic concern and does not commit acts while physically present in the territory of the United States, under a theory of conspiracy or aiding and abetting a violation of the FCPA by a person who is within the statute's reach." In granting the partial dismissal, the court noted that it was Congress's intent to exclude non-resident foreign nationals from FCPA liability where they were not subject to direct liability. The court found that the DOJ could not maintain a claim that Hoskins "could be liable for conspiracy even if he is not proved to [be] an agent of a domestic concern." The DOJ could only avoid dismissal if it "proceeds under a theory that Hoskins is an agent of a domestic concern and thus subject to direct liability under the FCPA."

Alexion Investigation

In November 2015, Alexion Pharmaceuticals disclosed in its 10-Q filing that the DOJ has commenced an investigation into its grant-making activities "in various countries" and its compliance with the FCPA. The SEC has been investigating Alexion since May 2015, and in October, the DOJ requested a voluntary production of documents related to that investigation.

In that filing, Alexion discussed the May 2015 SEC subpoena and disclosed the DOJ's interest in the investigation. Unfortunately, as the investigation is still rather new, neither Alexion nor the DOJ have publicly provided details. Alexion is cooperating fully with the investigations and has reiterated its commitment to operate at the highest level of business ethics.

Kinross Gold Corporation

In October 2015, the world's fifth largest gold producer, Kinross Gold Corporation,[19] disclosed in a press release that it is under investigation by the SEC and DOJ in connection with its West Africa mining operations. The release noted that Kinross retained external counsel in August 2013 to conduct an internal investigation after a whistleblower internally reported allegations of payments made to government officials and certain internal control deficiencies at its West Africa mining operations. The release also noted that Kinross received subpoenas on these alleged payments and internal control deficiencies from the SEC in March 2014, December 2014, and July 2015 and from the DOJ in December 2014. The release noted that Kinross is fully cooperating with these ongoing investigations and that its own ongoing internal investigation at that point "has not identified issues that Kinross believes would have a material adverse effect on the Company's financial position or business operations." It has been reported that the SEC subpoenas seek "records of communications and payments to officials and contractors at Kinross's operations in Mauritania and Ghana."

19 Kinross is based in Canada and maintains a listing on the New York Stock Exchange.

Prosecutions, Sentencings, Settlements and Declinations

Mead Johnson SEC Enforcement Action

In July, Mead Johnson Nutrition Co. agreed to pay just over $12 million to settle civil charges brought by the SEC that it had violated the FCPA. Mead Johnson, which was previously part of Bristol-Meyers Squibb until being spun off in 2009, is the maker of the infant formula Enfamil. The SEC alleged that a Mead Johnson subsidiary in China paid $2 million in bribes to healthcare professionals in Chinese hospitals to recommend its products and provide contact information for new or expectant mothers so it could market its products to these patients.

Through its investigation, the SEC found that Mead Johnson used "distributor allowances" to fund bribes paid by third-party distributors who sold the products, and also that the company failed to account for the improper payments on its books and records.

Without admitting or denying liability, Mead Johnson agreed to pay $7.77 million in disgorgement, $1.26 million in prejudgment interest, and $3 million as a penalty. Of note, this enforcement action not only involved the FCPA's books and records and internal control provisions, but it was also premised on the theory that certain foreign healthcare officials – Chinese healthcare professionals, in this case – are "foreign officials" under the FCPA.

Daren Condrey

In August 2015, the DOJ announced that it had previously entered into a plea agreement with Daren Condrey, a principal of Transport Logistics International in Maryland, for conspiring to violate the FCPA and conspiring to commit wire fraud. The DOJ revealed Condrey's guilty plea while announcing the guilty plea of Vadim Mikerin, a Russian nuclear energy official residing in Maryland, for conspiring to commit money laundering in connection with arranging over $2 million in bribes to secure contracts with TENEX, a subsidiary of Russia's State Atomic Energy Corporation. Court documents indicate that between 2004 and 2014, Condrey, Mikerin and others conspired to secure improper business advantages for U.S. companies that did business with TENEX by transmitting funds to offshore shell company bank accounts in Cyprus, Latvia and Switzerland in connection with consulting agreements to disguise the illicit payments. Condrey is still awaiting sentencing by Judge Theodore D. Chuang of the U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland.

Mikerin (TENEX) Sentencing

Vadim Mikerin, a former director of Russian nuclear energy firm TENEX, was sentenced to 48 months in federal prison in December for taking $2 million in bribes. He was also ordered to forfeit $2.1 million. The bribes were taken in order to award uranium transportation contracts to Transport Logistics International, a Maryland-based firm. From 1996 to 2003, TENEX paid Transport Logistics International $33 million to transport uranium from Russia to the United States as part of a program to remove unsecured nuclear weapons from Russia.

Mikerin, a Maryland resident, had pleaded guilty to a money-laundering conspiracy and said in his plea that "the funds were transmitted with the intent to promote a corrupt payment scheme that violated the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act." The individuals who bribed him were charged and pleaded guilty to conspiracy to violate the FCPA, but Mikerin himself could not be charged with any FCPA offenses, as he was the "foreign official" who took the bribes, not the individual providing the bribes.

Vicente Garcia

In August 2015, the SEC announced a settled order against Vicente Garcia of Florida, the former vice president of global and strategic accounts at the German-based SAP SE, for violating the anti-bribery and internal controls provisions of the FCPA. Garcia was charged with bribing three senior government officials of the Republic of Panama through an intermediary to facilitate $3.7 million worth of software license sales from at least June 2009 through November 2013. In particular, the order described how Garcia and others used false contracts and invoices to disguise the bribes and the kickbacks they received. The order required that Garcia (1) cease and desist from future FCPA violations, (2) pay disgorgement in the amount of $85,965 (the total amount of kickbacks that he received) and prejudgment interest in the amount of $6,430, and (3) cooperate fully with the SEC in any and all investigations, litigations or proceedings relating to the order. The order did not include a civil penalty, likely in consideration of Garcia's agreement to cooperate.

That same day, the DOJ announced that Garcia pleaded guilty to conspiracy to violate the FCPA. The criminal information accompanying Garcia's guilty plea indicated that the DOJ knows the identity of Garcia's co-conspirators, including Advisor, Consultant A, Consultant B, and Partner. In December 2015, Judge Charles R. Breyer of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California sentenced Garcia to 22 months in prison, which is less than half of the five-year sentence that could have been handed down.

NCR Corp. SEC Declination

After a three-year investigation of its compliance with the FCPA, NCR Corp. announced in August that it was informed by the "staff of the Securities and Exchange Commission that it does not intend to recommend an enforcement action." Atlanta-based NCR, a manufacturer of ATMs and self-service kiosks, received anonymous tips in 2012 from a whistleblower regarding its business practices in China, the Middle East and Africa. The company retained outside counsel to conduct an internal investigation, and informed both the DOJ and the SEC about the whistleblower's FCPA allegations. The SEC sent subpoenas to NCR and the DOJ asked for certain documents related to the allegations.

Lujan, Hurtado, Clarke (Direct Access Partners) Sentencing

Three employees of Direct Access Partners, a now defunct broker-dealer, were sentenced to prison in December. On December 4, 2015, Ernesto Lujan, the former managing partner of Direct Access Partners, was sentenced to two years in prison and three years of supervised release, and was ordered to forfeit $18.5 million. Lujan pleaded guilty in mid-2013 to conspiracy, money laundering and violating the FCPA.

Lujan and other Direct Access employees paid at least $5 million in bribes to Maria Hernandez, a vice president at Banco de Desarrollo Angeles Economico y Social de Venezuela (BANDES). The Venezuelan government was a majority owner of the bank and the bank allegedly acted as the financial agent of the state to finance economic development projects. In exchange for the bribes, Hernandez directed bond trading business to Direct Access. Direct Access had offices in Miami and New York and made more than $60 million in revenue from its business with BANDES. Direct Access filed for bankruptcy in 2013.

Thomas Clarke, the former senior vice president, was sentenced on December 8, 2015, to two years in prison. Clarke was also ordered to forfeit almost $5.8 million. Clarke pleaded guilty in 2013 to conspiracy, money laundering and violating the FCPA. Jose Hurtado, a former broker for Direct Access, was sentenced to three years in prison and ordered to forfeit almost $11.9 million. Hurtado pleaded guilty in 2013 to conspiracy and violations of the FCPA, the Travel Act and money laundering laws. Hurtado was the "middleman" and introduced Hernandez to Direct Access Partners.

Hyperdynamics SEC Enforcement Action and Settlement

On September 29, 2015, Hyperdynamics Corp. announced that it settled with the SEC regarding alleged FCPA violations. The SEC alleged that Hyperdynamics violated the books and records and internal controls provisions of the FCPA. Hyperdynamics agreed to pay a $75,000 fine and did not admit or deny the SEC's allegations. The SEC acknowledged remedial measures taken by Hyperdynamics, such as replacing the entire board.

The allegations arose from Hyperdynamics' operations in the Republic of Guinea. From 2007 to 2008, a subsidiary of Hyperdynamics paid two entities $130,000 for lobbying and public relation services. Hyperdynamics subsequently found out that the two entities were owned by a Guinean-based employee, and it was unclear whether any services were actually provided. Hyperdynamics did not update its books and records after learning this information.

Louis Berger International DOJ Enforcement Action

On July 17, 2015, Louis Berger International, Inc., entered into a DPA with the DOJ. Louis Berger, a construction management company, admitted to violating the FCPA and agreed to pay a $17.1 million criminal penalty. The company also agreed to improve its internal controls and retain a compliance monitor for at least three years. The DOJ agreed to a DPA because the company self-reported the FCPA violations, collected and organized evidence, and took remedial measures.

The DOJ alleged that Louis Berger paid $3.9 million in bribes to foreign officials in India, Indonesia, Kuwait and Vietnam in order to win construction management contracts. The payments were recorded as "commitment fees," "counterpart per diems," and "field operation expenses."

Hitachi, Ltd.

In September 2015, the SEC filed a settled complaint in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia against the Tokyo-based conglomerate Hitachi, Ltd.,[20] alleging violations of the books and records and internal accounting controls provisions of the FCPA for inaccurately recording payments to South Africa's ruling political party in connection with contracts to build two multibillion-dollar power plants. In particular, the complaint alleged that Hitachi sold 25 percent of the stock of its South African subsidiary to a local South African company, Chancellor House Holdings (Pty) Ltd., which it allegedly knew was acting as a front for the African National Congress (ANC). This arrangement allegedly allowed the ANC to share in the profits from any power station contracts secured by Hitachi in South Africa through dividend payments of more than $5 million to Chancellor and the repurchase of Chancellor's shares for a profit of approximately $4.2 million. The complaint also alleged that Hitachi entered into an undisclosed success fee arrangement with Chancellor disguised as consulting expenses whereby approximately $1 million was paid to this company. According to the complaint, Hitachi did not conduct any FCPA-specific compliance training during the relevant time period and failed to conduct adequate due diligence of Chancellor prior to the stock sale. Without admitting or denying the allegations, Hitachi agreed to the settlement in which it is required to pay a $19 million civil penalty and to be permanently enjoined from future FCPA violations.

20 The complaint alleged that Hitachi is a multinational conglomerate headquartered in Tokyo that, during the time of the violations, had American Depository Shares registered with the SEC and listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Analogic FCPA Settlement

Analogic, the maker of airport security scanners and ultrasound and other imaging equipment, initially disclosed an investigation involving Danish subsidiary BK Medical ApS and some of its foreign distributors in 2011. The company stated that its distributors paid BK Medical amounts in excess of amounts owed and that BK Medical transferred the excess to third parties identified by the distributors. However, the company was not able to determine the purpose for the payments. Analogic had voluntarily disclosed this matter to the Danish government, the DOJ and the SEC and is continuing to cooperate with all authorities.

Recently in its 10-Q, Analogic said that the SEC and DOJ made separate settlement proposals to end the ongoing FCPA investigation. The settlement amounts would total approximately $15 million.

Argentina

The former chief financial officer of a foreign-based company in Argentina pleaded guilty on September 30, 2015, in New York City to conspiring to pay tens of millions of dollars in bribes to Argentinean government officials in connection with a $1 billion contract to create national identity cards. The officer pleaded guilty to conspiracy to violate the FCPA and to wire fraud.

The officer admitted that he engaged in a scheme spanning several years to pay the bribes to the Argentinean government. He and his co-conspirators used shell companies and intermediaries to launder money. Along with being involved in these bribes, he also admitted to paying $1 million to the Argentinean Ministry of Justice.

The government does not yet have a sentencing recommendation.

Bristol-Myers Squibb

On October 5, 2015, the SEC and Bristol-Myers Squibb (BMS) agreed to an FCPA settlement on charges that its joint venture in China made cash payments and provided other benefits to healthcare providers at state-owned and state-controlled hospitals in exchange for prescription sales. BMS will pay more than $14 million to settle the charges that the company earned more than $11 million from the improper payments in China.

The SEC alleged that between 2009 and 2014, BMS sales representatives tried to increase business by giving healthcare providers cash, jewelry, meals, travel, entertainment and sponsorships for conferences and meetings. These expenses were inaccurately reported on the books and records as legitimate spending. Ultimately, the SEC's order noted that BMS violated the FCPA's internal controls and recordkeeping provisions.

The findings in the order include failing to respond to red flags about the bribes, failing to investigate claims of improper invoicing by employees, and failing to properly remediate gaps in internal controls. Without admitting or denying, BMS consented to the order.
