Telling the Stories of Injured People

One of the greatest opportunities we have as trial lawyers is to tell the stories of injured people. Their courage helps:

- uncover negligence by organizations that put their interests ahead of the public interest;
- prompt government action and change laws;
- motivate manufacturing and quality assurance practices that lead to safer products and services; and,
- prevent more injuries by increasing public awareness while protecting the rights of every American to a day in court.

As the stories featured here in this newsletter attest, we believe justice will always win out in the end.

Four Stories of American Civil Justice in Action

Each year we scour the headlines for remarkable stories of citizens, advocates or organizations that take on injustice for the greater well-being of ALL Americans. They remind us once again that our civil justice system is the great equalizer, designed by the founders to give power back to “regular” people when the deck is stacked against them. Thus, we salute our nominees for the 2019 Justice Served Awards and all Americans, including many of you reading this newsletter, who courageously stand up and hold wrongdoers accountable in a court of law.
