

Climate Policy Update

July 11, 2022

Good evening! This is Akin Gump's weekly policy newsletter on all things climate change. Below are the major federal and California climate policy headlines of the past week:

- Biden Administration Proposes Rule Requiring States, Cities to Set Transportation Climate Targets (The Hill)
   The Biden administration proposed a rule that would require states and cities to track greenhouse gas emissions and develop climate goals for transportation on the National Highway System.
- StEPing Up to the Plate: Justice Department Restores Favored Enforcement Resolution Tool (Speaking Sustainability) Through an interim final rule and an Attorney General memo, the Department of Justice (DOJ) restored supplemental environmental projects (SEPs) as a means of settling federal environmental law violations.
- Feds Consider Phasing Out Single-Use Plastics (E&E)
  - The General Services Administration published a notice that it may restrict single-use plastics from being purchased by the federal government.
- Crunch Time: US Food Sector Needs to Implement Climate Action Plans to Feed Demand from Hungry Investors (Speaking Sustainability)
  - In an effort to prevent greenwashing, Ceres published a report outlining guidance for the food industry as it establishes climate targets. The criteria include: disclosing emissions and emission reduction goals, incorporating growth and innovation strategy in its emission reduction plans, monitoring its supply chain emissions and establishing operation, transportation and waste emission protocols.
- California Cities Ban New Gas Stations in Battle to Combat Climate Change (Los Angeles Times)
   Following Petaluma's decision to ban new gas stations, the Los Angeles City Council is slated to consider a similar ban this summer. Five neighborhood councils in Los Angeles, Westside, Silver Lake, Los Feliz, Echo Park and North Westwood have expressed support for the proposal.
- PA Judge Temporarily Delays RGGI Entrance (Energy News)
   Last week, a state judge blocked Pennsylvania's entrance into the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative (RGGI).

Check out below for key quotes, federal agency news and a look at the week ahead in congressional hearings and think tank events:
