There are certain personal injury claims that you can handle on your own. For example, most people do not hire a Florida personal injury attorney if they get into a minor car accident and there is no reason to file a lawsuit.

However, there are certain circumstances when you want to be sure you consult with a Tampa personal injury lawyer, including:

Severe Injury – if you suffer a severe injury in any accident, you want to be sure your medical bills and compensation for any current or potential future complications are covered.

Medical Malpractice – if you suffer an injury or illness due to incompetent or careless treatment by a doctor, nurse, clinic, hospital or other medical provider, you will definitely want to consult with a medical malpractice attorney.

Long-Term Injury – if you suffer long-term or permanent injury or disability, you need a personal injury attorney to ensure you are compensated properly and get the most out of your claim.

Refusal to Pay – sometimes an insurance company will refuse to make a fair settlement offer or to pay for the proper level of care you require. A personal injury lawyer is well acquainted with these tactics, and can advise you on how to proceed to get what is due you.
