APPRECIATION

Shortly after I joined Jenner & Block out of law school, Jerry Solovy “invited” me to work on the annual update of this handbook, which he commissioned to my former partner Joel Africk in 1984 in response to the United States Supreme Court’s decision in Upjohn Co. v. United States. For 25 years, Jerry actively nurtured this work, which he called the firm’s “bestseller,” notwithstanding the fact that we provide the handbook to our clients, friends, and colleagues free of charge. Each week, Jerry would send memos and emails with suggestions for cases or articles that we should include in the next update and, as each year came to a close, increasingly earnest emails and phone calls asking when the next update would be ready for publication. I am now in the position of “inviting” my colleagues at Jenner to assist me with updating and improving this resource.

I want to thank some of the many people who have made contributions to this effort: My partner, Michele Slachetka, who has devoted enormous time and energy over the years to leading the team of lawyers who work on this project. I also want to thank my colleagues Huiyi Chen, D. Matthew Feldhaus, Katherine Funderburg, Alex Ghantous, Laura Hulce, Samuel Jahangir, Ariana Kanavy, Michael Kang, Kaitlin Lesovac, Cianan Lesley, Alex May, Emma O’Connor, Elena Olivieri, Christian Plummer, Brandon Polcik, Lina Ragep Powell, Steven Tinetti, and Regina Wood, who have each contributed to the outline. Finally, I would like to thank my former associates Anne Fitzpatrick, who for many years led the update team and applied her pre-law school professional editor’s skills to the improvement of this publication, and Leah Casto, who assumed the “team captain” role for this project.

EDITORS' NOTE

Although the handbook includes some citations to decisions published and statutes revised in 2023, we consider the handbook to be updated through December 31, 2022. The next edition will begin with a review of legal developments from January 1, 2023, forward.

In order to make the handbook more wieldy, we removed discussion of some subject matters that were included in prior editions. In particular, this edition does not include discussion of the government deliberative process privilege. With our partner Caroline Meneau, we edit TESTIMONIAL PRIVILEGES (WEST 2023), an 1,800 page privilege treatise published by Thomson Reuters. While the two works cover many of the same issues relating to the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine, they have evolved separately. TESTIMONIAL PRIVILEGES is structured as a traditional treatise and is more easily cited than the handbook. Most significantly, the treatise analyzes many privileges that are not addressed in the handbook. The ten privileges covered in TESTIMONIAL PRIVILEGES:

- Chapter 1: The Attorney-Client Privilege
- Chapter 2: The Work Product Doctrine
- Chapter 3: The Accountant-Client Privilege
- Chapter 4: The Privilege Against Self-Incrimination
- Chapter 5: Spousal Privileges
- Chapter 6: The Clergy Communications Privilege
- Chapter 7: The Physician-Patient, Psychotherapist-Patient, and Related Privileges
- Chapter 8: The Journalist's Privilege
- Chapter 9: Executive and Governmental Privileges
- Chapter 10: Settlement Negotiations Privilege

We encourage you to use the treatise as a comprehensive reference regarding these additional privileges. The treatise is available on Westlaw. I. THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

Historically, the attorney-client privilege developed upon two assumptions: (1) good legal assistance requires full disclosure of a client's legal problems; and (2) a client will only reveal the details required for proper representation if her confidences are protected. See, e.g., Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 403 (1976). In response to these assumptions, the attorney-client privilege developed at common law to encourage free and open communication between client and lawyer, thus promoting informed, effective representation. 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2291 (Supp. 2019). Because the privilege obstructs the search for truth, however, it is construed narrowly. See, e.g., Fisher, 425 U.S. at 403; Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 84 (3d Cir. 1992) (“[S]ince the privilege has the effect of withholding relevant information from the factfinder, it applies only where necessary to achieve its purpose.”); In re Grand Jury Proceedings Under Seal, 947 F.2d 1188 (4th Cir. 1991).

Over the years, the courts have provided several definitions of the attorney-client privilege. Judge Wyzanski provided the seminal definition in United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 89 F. Supp. 357 (D. Mass. 1950):

The [attorney-client] privilege applies only if (1) the asserted holder of the privilege is or sought to become a client; (2) the person to whom the communication was made (a) is a member of the bar of a court, or his subordinate and (b) in connection with this communication is acting as a lawyer; (3) the communication relates to a fact of which the attorney was informed (a) by his client (b) without the presence of strangers (c) for the purpose of securing primarily either (i) an opinion on law or (ii) legal services or (iii) assistance in some legal proceeding, and not (d) for the purpose of committing a crime or tort; and (4) the privilege has been (a) claimed and (b) not waived by the client.

Id. at 358-59.

As a general matter, the privilege protects:

- (A) a communication,
- (B) made between privileged persons (i.e., attorney, client or agent),
- (C) in confidence,
- (D) for the purpose of obtaining or providing legal assistance for the client.

See, e.g., In re Air Crash Disaster at Sioux City, Iowa on July 19, 1989, 133 F.R.D. 515, 518 (N.D. Ill. 1990); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 68 (2000); see also Coltec Indus., Inc. v. Am. Motorists Ins. Co., 197 F.R.D. 368, 370-71 (N.D. Ill. 2000) (noting the elements as outlined by Wigmore: “(1) Where legal advice of any kind is sought (2) from a professional legal adviser in his capacity as such, (3) the communications relating to that purpose, (4) made in confidence (5) by the client, (6) are at his instance permanently protected (7) from disclosure by himself or by the legal adviser, (8) except the protection be waived.”); SEC v. Beacon Hill Asset Mgmt. LLC, 231 F.R.D. 134, 138 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (quoting United Shoe).

A. COMMUNICATIONS COVERED BY THE PRIVILEGE

Virtually all types of communications or exchanges between a client and attorney may be covered by the attorney-client privilege. Privileged communications include essentially any expression undertaken to convey information in confidence for the purpose of seeking or rendering legal advice. FTC v. Boehringer Ingelheim Pharmaceuticals, 892 F.3d 1264, 1267 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (attorney-client privilege applies where “obtaining or providing legal advice was one of the significant purposes of the communication”); Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 90 (3d Cir. 1992) (privilege extends to verbal statements, documents and tangible objects conveyed in confidence for the purpose of legal advice); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 (2000).

1. Documents and Recorded Communications

The broad sweep of privileged communications encompasses not only oral communications, but also documents or other records in which communications have been recorded. WebXchange Inc. v. Dell Inc., 264 F.R.D. 123, 127 (D. Del. 2010) (“For purposes of the attorney-client privilege, a communication is any expression through which a privileged person undertakes to convey information to another privileged person and any document or record that embodies such expression. . . .”) (internal quotations omitted); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 (2000); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5484 (1st ed. West 2019). See also Gregorio v. Clorox Co., 2019 WL 362688, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 1, 2019) (“privileged communications between an attorney and a client do not lose their privileged character merely because those communications are stored in a spreadsheet”); Chrimar Sys. Inc. v. Cisco Sys., No. 13-cv-01300-JSW (MEJ), 2016 WL 1595785, at *5-6 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 21, 2016) (email from client to itself privileged where it reflected notes of advice from a lawyer); Harlow v. Sprint Nextel Corp., No. 08-2222-KHV-DJW, 2012 WL 646003, at *6-7 (D. Kan. Feb. 28, 2012) (class member surveys, often used as a substitute for face-to-face interviews in actions involving multiple clients, are privileged communications); Aland v. Mead, 327 P.3d 752, 772 (Wyo. 2014) (non-lawyer’s notes from conversation with deputy attorney general and memorandum sent by one non-lawyer to another were privileged where the documents recounted the substance of communications with counsel, including counsel’s legal advice).

However, documents do not become automatically privileged merely because they are communicated to an attorney. The privilege only protects those documents that reflect communications between an attorney and client. In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 959 F.2d 1158, 1165-66 (2d Cir. 1992). Documents or other communications that a client transmits to a lawyer neither gain nor lose privileged status as a result of the transfer. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 404 (1976); E.E.O.C. v. BDO USA, L.L.P., 876 F.3d 690, 696 (5th Cir. 2017) (“[D]ocuments sent from one corporate officer to another” are not privileged “merely because a copy is also sent to counsel[.]”); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 89 (7th ed. 2016); Fisher, 425 U.S. at 404; Phillips v. C.R. Bard, Inc., 290 F.R.D. 615, 629

(D. Nev. 2013) (“merely copying or ‘cc-ing’ legal counsel, in and of itself, is not enough to trigger the attorney-client privilege”); Searcy v. eFunds Corp., No. 08 C 985, 2009 WL 562596, at *3 (N.D. Ill. 2009) (“[d]ocuments that would not otherwise be protected from disclosure do not automatically come within the scope of the privilege because they are transmitted to an attorney”); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 89 (7th ed. 2016); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2307 (Supp. 2019). Accord Pownell v. Credo Petroleum Corp., Civil Action No. 09-cv-01540-WYD-KLM, 2011 WL 1045418, at *3 (D. Colo. Mar. 17, 2011) (“[T]he mere fact that an attorney attended a meeting does not render everything said or done at that meeting privileged.”) (internal citation omitted). Documents prepared by a client to assist the client to obtain legal advice may be privileged even if the document itself is not communicated to counsel. See United States v. DeFonte, 441 F.3d 92, 94 (2d Cir. 2006) (notes prepared by an incarcerated client of issues to be discussed with attorney, and which were in fact later discussed with counsel, were protected by attorney-client privilege).

In addition to documents, other modes of communication may also be covered under the privilege. Thus, telephone, audio and video recordings may qualify as privileged communications. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 cmt. b (2000); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 89 (7th ed. 2016). In general, the mode of communication is not relevant to the determination of privilege. For example, the privilege will not apply to recordings that would not be privileged if they were written. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated July 6, 2005, 256 F. App’x 379, 382-83 (2d Cir. 2007) (declining to extend DeFonte to tape recordings that appellant made of conversations with his broker where appellant could not show that the recordings were confidential communications between himself and his attorney for the purpose of obtaining legal advice). However, the method of communication may be relevant to a determination as to whether the communicator could reasonably expect the information would remain confidential. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 cmt. b (2000); Communications Must Be Intended To Be Confidential, § I.C, infra.

2. Communicative Acts

The attorney-client privilege includes non-verbal, communicative acts within its definition of protected communications. RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 cmt. e (2000). Communicative acts may include a privileged person’s non-verbal actions that are intended to convey information, such as facial expressions or nods of affirmation. See 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2306 (Supp. 2019); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5484 (1st ed. West 2019). Such acts are typically protected by the attorney-client privilege. However, privilege will not apply in the absence of an intent to communicate. For example, physical characteristics, demeanor, complexion, sobriety, or dress are not communicative and would not be protected. See KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 89 (7th ed. 2016).

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 791 F.2d 663, 665-66 (8th Cir. 1986). An attorney could not claim the privilege to avoid testifying about the authenticity of a client's signature or to avoid identifying the client in a photograph.

Darrow v. Gunn, 594 F.2d 767, 774 (9th Cir. 1979). An attorney's observations of demeanor are not privileged unless based on a confidential communication.

U.S. v. Maxton, No. 13-cr-00411-PAB, 2013 WL 6800695, at *4 (D. Colo. Dec. 24, 2013). It would not violate the privilege for attorney to testify about client's mental competence.

Frieman v. USAir Grp., Inc., Civ. A. No. 93-3142, 1994 WL 719643, at *6-7 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 22, 1994). Lawyer for client claiming permanent disability was compelled to testify regarding observations of client's physical condition and activities.

Williams v. Chrans, 742 F. Supp. 472, 492-93 (N.D. Ill. 1990). Testimony by a legal clerk that the defendant was calm and articulate while a dead body was hidden in defendant's trunk did not violate the privilege.

But see:

State v. Meeks, 666 N.W.2d 859, 868-71 (Wis. 2003). Rejecting Darrow v. Gunn, 594 F.2d 767 (9th Cir.1979), above, and holding that attorney's observation of client's mental state necessarily involved attorney-client communications.

Gunther v. United States, 230 F.2d 222, 223-24 (D.C. Cir. 1956). Attorney could not be called to testify as to client's competency because such an inquiry would require testimony as to facts learned in privileged context.

3. Fees, Identity and the "Last Link"

Certain facts relating to an attorney-client relationship may not be privileged. The identity of the client, the fact of consultation, the payment of fees, and the details of retainer agreements generally are not considered privileged. See 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2313 (Supp. 2019); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5484 (1st ed. West 2019). Courts reason that such routine items are not communicated in order to obtain legal services and that fear of disclosure of such information will not deter clients from providing these facts.

See:

U.S. v. Leonard-Allen, 739 F.3d 948, 953 (7th Cir. 2013). Information about attorneys' fees fall outside the scope of the privilege because fees are incidental to the substance of representation.

Reiserer v. United States, 479 F.3d 1160, 1165-66 (9th Cir. 2007). During IRS investigation of tax attorney, disclosure of the identities and fees paid by tax attorney's clients not barred by attorney-client privilege, even if information may lead to IRS investigation of the clients. The court distinguished Baird v. Koerner, 279 F.2d 623 (9th Cir. 1960), in which the revelation of the client's identity would have constituted admission of guilt of the offense that led the client to seek legal assistance.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 94 F. App'x 495, 497 (9th Cir. 2004). Defendant in money-laundering case could not assert privilege over communications with his attorney related to fee arrangements. Such information, even if it could implicate the defendant in money laundering, was not a privileged legal communication.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 204 F.3d 516, 519-21 (4th Cir. 2000). Client may not create a privilege that protects his identity by voluntarily disclosing a confidential communication.

United States v. Bauer, 132 F.3d 504, 508-09 (9th Cir. 1997). Noting that the identity of client, amount of fees paid, identification of payment by case name, general purpose of work performed, and whether client's testimony is the product of attorney coaching are not within attorney-client privilege, but holding that the communications at issue involved actual legal advice, which were privileged.

Gerald B. Lefcourt P.C. v. United States, 125 F.3d 79, 86 (2d Cir. 1997). Information regarding the payment of fees is not privileged.

United States v. Ellis, 90 F.3d 447, 450-51 (11th Cir. 1996) (internal quotations and citations omitted). "[T]he identity of a client and the receipt of attorney's fees normally are not privileged matters. Such matters are privileged only if their disclosure would lead to uncovering privileged information."

In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 906 F.2d 1485, 1492-43 (10th Cir. 1990). Subpoena that requested the identity of the source of the fees, the amount of the fees, and the manner and date of payment did not seek privileged information, but disclosure of fee contracts would be subject to in camera review to determine whether the contracts contained confidential communications.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 841 F.2d 230, 233 n.3 (8th Cir. 1988). The identity of a third party paying the legal fees of another is typically not privileged.

In re Two Grand Jury Subpoenae Duces Tecum Dated Aug. 21, 1985, 793 F.2d 69, 71-72 (2d Cir. 1986). Affirming district court's refusal to quash subpoena that sought law firm's financial records including cancelled checks drawn on firm's escrow accounts, retainer agreements, closing statements, correspondence relating to client recoveries, invoices and receipts for disbursements, and records relating to liens upon funds received on behalf of clients; privilege does not protect information about fee arrangements except when they involve prejudicial disclosure of confidential communications.

In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 803 F.2d 493, 499 (9th Cir. 1986), corrected, 817 F.2d 64 (9th Cir. 1987). Identity of a non-client fee-payer is not privileged.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 517 F.2d 666, 670-71 n.2 (5th Cir. 1975) (collecting cases). Identity of client generally not privileged.

Sapia v. Board of Education of City of Chicago, 351 F.Supp.3d 1125, 1132 (N.D. Ill. 2019). "The privilege does not foreclose inquiry into the fact of representation itself or the dates upon which services are rendered as long as the substance of the attorney-client relationship is shielded from disclosure."

U.S. v. DNRB, Inc., 257 F. Supp. 3d 1033, 1038-39 (W.D. Mo. 2017). "It is well established that no privilege attaches to information about what attorneys' fees were paid, in what amount, in what form, or by whom."

Zelen v. United States, No. CV 13-6430-JFW (JEMx), 2014 WL 1318719, at *1 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 6, 2014). The attorney-client privilege does not protect client identity or fee arrangements. There was no confidentiality for a check written by a client to an attorney that was deposited with a third-party bank.

Sullivan v. Alcatel-Lucent USA, Inc., No. 12 C 7528, 2013 WL 263793, at *7 (N.D. Ill. June 12, 2013). An email chain regarding legal fees is not privileged when it relates only to fees and does not reflect legal advice.

Grewal & Assocs., P.C. v. Hartford Cas. Ins. Co., No. 1:10-cv-214, 2010 WL 3909491, at *3-4 (W.D. Mich. Sept. 30, 2010) (quoting Harris v. United States, 413 F.2d 316, 319-20 (9th Cir. 1969)). Citing First, Seventh, Ninth, and Tenth Circuit law that the privilege does not attach to bank records, such as checks from an attorney's clients. While checks may be communicative, checks are not confidential. Once deposited, checks are seen by a "sea of strangers" (e.g., the bank's personnel).

SEC v. W Fin. Grp., LLC, No. 3-08-CV-0499, 2009 WL 636540, at *1 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 9, 2009). Denying motion to quash an SEC subpoena requesting records of transfers of funds into and out of the lawyer's trust account relating to specific clients being investigated by the SEC. Noting that the Fifth Circuit had not addressed the issue, the court followed several other circuits' reasoning that the deposit and disbursement of money in a commercial checking account is not a communication, nor is it confidential.

Huffman v. United States, No. 0780736CIV, 2007 WL 4800643, at *4-6 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 29, 2007). Bank records of an attorney client trust account, copies of bank statements, cancelled checks, signature cards, and copies of wire transfers are generally not protected by attorney-client privilege and petitioner failed to establish that the last link doctrine's limited exception would apply.

United States v. Cedeno, 496 F. Supp. 2d 562, 567-68 (E.D. Pa. 2007). The identity of person paying for the legal defense of defendant in drug conspiracy case was not privileged, even when the benefactor is also client of defendant's attorney.

Global Htm Promotional Grp., Inc. v. Angel Music Grp. LLC, No. 06-2044 civ, 2007 WL 221423 at *2 (S.D. Fla. Jan. 26, 2007). Phone records detailing time and duration of attorney-client communications not privileged because they did not reveal substance of the communications.

United States v. Kaiser, 308 F. Supp. 2d 946, 954 (E.D. Mo. 2004). "Peripheral matters pertaining to the relationships between respondents and their clients, such as client identities and fee information, are simply not protected by the privilege because that type of information was not communicated in confidence to the attorney for the purpose of securing legal advice."

Bank Brussels Lambert v. Credit Lyonnais (Suisse), 220 F. Supp. 2d 283, 288 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). Holding that it is "well established" in the Second Circuit that a client's identity is not protected, except in special circumstances.

Levy v. Senate of Pennsylvania, 65 A.3d 361, 370-72 (Pa. 2013). Identities of clients on billing records did not need to be withheld because content of records were so heavily redacted that disclosure would not reveal otherwise privileged information.

But see:

Abrams v. First Tenn. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, No. 3:03-cv-428, 2007 WL 320966, at *2 (E.D. Tenn. Jan. 30, 2007). To the extent such documents had not been supplied to any defendant, invoices to plaintiff-clients from attorney that detailed legal matters and thought processes were privileged.

United States v. Gonzalez-Mendez, 352 F. Supp. 2d 173, 175-76 (D.P.R. 2005). Noting that "[i]t may well be that certain fee arrangements fall outside the direct purview of the attorney-client privilege," the government's inquiry "would strike at the heart of the attorney-client relationship" and holding that the government was not entitled to an expedited hearing on the issue.

Ehrich v. Binghamton City Sch. Dist., 210 F.R.D. 17, 20 (N.D.N.Y. 2002). Billing statements that detail attorney services, listing services provided and conversations and conferences between counsel and others, are privileged.

State ex rel. Dawson v. Bloom-Carroll Local Sch. Dist., 959 N.E.2d 524, 530 (Ohio 2011) (internal quotations and citations omitted). “While a simple invoice ordinarily is not privileged, itemized legal bills necessarily reveal confidential information and thus fall within the [attorney-client] privilege. . . . [B]illing records describing the services performed for [the attorney’s] clients and the time spent on those services, and any other attorney-client correspondence . . . may reveal the client’s motivation for seeking legal representation, the nature of the services provided or contemplated, strategies to be employed in the event of litigation, and other confidential information exchanged during the course of the representation. . . . [A] demand for such documents constitutes an unjustified intrusion into the attorney-client relationship.”

Los Angeles County Bd. of Supervisors v. Superior Court, 386 P.3d 773, 781 (Cal. 2016). Noting that where “a legal matter remains pending and active, the privilege encompasses everything in an invoice, including the amount of aggregate fees” and explaining that, although the amount of money paid for legal services is generally not privileged, an invoice that shows a sudden uptick in spending in a pending matter might reveal a party’s investigative efforts and litigation strategy.

Other courts and the Restatement have rejected a strictly categorical approach. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 cmt. g (2000); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 90 (7th ed. 2016); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5484 (1st ed. West 2019). Under this alternative approach, the attorney-client privilege applies if revealing the information would directly, or by reasonable inference, reveal the content of a confidential communication from a privileged person (client, attorney or agent). See In re Witness before the Special March 1980 Grand Jury, 729 F.2d 489, 495 (7th Cir. 1984) (the privilege protects an unknown client’s identity where disclosure would reveal a client’s motive for seeking legal advice); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 cmt. g (2000). Courts often refer to this approach as the “last link” doctrine or exception. Under the “last link” doctrine, routine information, such as a client’s identity, is not protected unless it links the client to the case. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 517 F.2d 666, 674 (5th Cir. 1975); NLRB v. Harvey, 349 F.2d 900, 905 (4th Cir. 1965); cf. Baird v. Koerner, 279 F.2d 623 (9th Cir. 1960) (an often-cited case but highly criticized as a misapplication of the doctrine).

The purpose of the attorney-client privilege is to encourage free disclosure; it does not act generally to protect clients from incrimination. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 791 F.2d 663, 665 (8th Cir. 1986); In re Shargel, 742 F.2d 61, 63 (2d Cir. 1984). Thus, the privilege does not protect information that is merely invasive or inculpatory, and it is not enough that the communication provides the “last link” to incriminate the client. In re Grand Jury Proceedings, Cherney, 898 F.2d 565, 568 (7th Cir. 1990) (affirming decision to quash subpoena but noting that the client’s identity was privileged because disclosure would reveal a confidential communication – the reason the client sought legal advice – not because disclosure would incriminate the fee-payer). Instead, the “last link” that implicates the privilege is the one that connects the client to a confidential communication or that exposes a confidential communication. See KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 90 (7th ed. 2016).

See:

In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 94 F. App'x 495, 497 (9th Cir. 2004). Though potentially incriminating in money laundering case, fee arrangements with counsel were not privileged because they would not provide the last link to the criminal charge.

In re Grand Jury Matter, 969 F.2d 995, 997-98 (11th Cir. 1992). An attorney was ordered to reveal the identity of a client who paid with a counterfeit $100 bill. The court reasoned that the only "last link" provided by the identity information was to incriminate the client and not to reveal any confidences.

In re Grand Jury Matter (Special Grand Jury Narcotics) (Under Seal), 926 F.2d 348, 352 (4th Cir. 1991). Fee arrangements are privileged only where disclosure would reveal confidential communications.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena for Att'y Representing Reyes-Requena, 913 F.2d 1118, 1124-25 (5th Cir. 1990). Fee information is privileged only where disclosure of fee information would reveal the "ultimate motive" for seeking legal advice.

United States v. Strahl, 590 F.2d 10, 11 (1st Cir. 1978). Attorney could testify that client paid him with a stolen treasury note because disclosure did not implicate the client in the criminal activity for which legal advice was sought.

S.E.C. v. Coldicutt, No. 2:17-cv-03888-CAS(AFM), 2017 WL 2485383, at *3 (C.D. Cal. June 8, 2017). The "last link" exception "is not triggered by the fact that the disclosure of the client's identity and the fee arrangements may incriminate the client" but "where disclosure of the client's identity and fee information would infringe upon a privileged communication" (emphasis in original).

Sony Corp of Am. v. Soundview Corp. of Am., No. 3:00 CV 754 (JBA), 2001 WL 1772920, at *3 (D. Conn. Oct. 23, 2001). Fee information protected only if it reveals the motive for representation or substance of advice.

Where the disclosure of even routine information would expose client confidences instead of merely providing a link to the confidences, the attorney-client privilege applies. A common situation involving this aspect of the privilege arises when the motive of a client is revealed by the fact of consultation.

See:

Taylor Lohmeyer Law Firm P.L.L.C. v. United States, 957 F. 3d 505, 512 (5th Cir. 2020) Client's identity not privileged from IRS summons where client identity was not "connected inextricably with a privileged communication."

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 204 F.3d 516, 520-22 (4th Cir. 2000). Where it "appeared that the client's identity was sufficiently intertwined with the client's confidences such that compelled disclosure of the former essentially disclosed the latter," the attorney-client privilege would preclude an attorney from disclosing the client's identity, but where the client voluntarily discloses otherwise privileged information, such a privilege is lost as to the client's identity, even where the disclosure of his identity will link the client to the statement.

Ralls v. United States, 52 F.3d 223, 226 (9th Cir. 1995). Privilege applies when identity of payor or terms of engagement were so "inextricably intertwined" with confidential communications that revealing either the identity or the terms "would be tantamount to revealing privileged communication."

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 946 F.2d 746, 748-49 (11th Cir. 1991). Revelation of a client's identity would expose his motive for seeking advice (i.e., a drug conspiracy investigation). Court further noted that the government's knowledge of this motive did not obviate the protection of the attorney-client privilege.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, Cherney, 898 F.2d 565, 568-69 (7th Cir. 1990). Although fee information normally is not privileged, privilege applied where revealing the payor's identity might disclose a confidential communication: the payor's motive for paying the fees of the target. Court held that payor's identity was privileged.

Funke v. Life Fin. Corp., No. 99 Civ. 11877 (CBM), 2003 WL 1787125, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 3, 2003). Retainer agreements may contain privileged communications.

Riddell Sports, Inc. v. Brooks, 158 F.R.D. 555, 560 (S.D.N.Y. 1994). Although attorney fee arrangements are ordinarily not protected, the privilege would apply to bills, ledgers, statements, time records and correspondence that reveal the client's motive in seeking representation or litigation strategy.

Brett v. Berkowitz, 706 A.2d 509, 515 (Del. 1998). Attorney specializing in divorce cases was not required to produce the names of his other clients to a client that sued the attorney for sexual harassment. "[T]he mere revelation of the [other clients' names] would reveal the confidential communication that [the clients] were seeking advice concerning a divorce."

But see:

Gerald B. Lefcourt, P.C. v. United States, 125 F.3d 79, 87 (2d Cir. 1997). Though acknowledging the adoption of a "legal advice exception" in other circuits, the Second Circuit "all but categorically rejected it" in Vingelli v. United States, below.

Vingelli v. United States, 992 F.2d 449, 453-54 (2d Cir. 1993). Grand jury subpoenaed attorney to determine who was paying the fees for the defense of a convicted party. Attorney refused to disclose the client and fee information because it would reveal the purpose of the representation. Court found that the client could have consulted the attorney for a variety of reasons and that, while the disclosure of the fee payor's identity might suggest the possibility of wrongdoing, it would not reveal a confidential communication. Court also found that the fact that money was paid did not reveal any confidential communication and that the financial transfers were not made to obtain legal advice.

4. Knowledge of Underlying Facts Not Protected

While the privilege protects communications between privileged persons, it does not permit a party to resist disclosure of the facts underlying those communications. Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 395-96 (1981); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 cmt. d (2000). The privilege creates a distinction between the substance of a lawyer-client communication and the contents of a client's memory or files. Upjohn, 449 U.S. at 395-96; see also 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5484 (1st ed. West 2019). Thus, the privilege will not protect a client from testifying about her recollections or records, only whether the client related them to her attorney. See In re Six Grand Jury Witnesses, 979 F.2d 939, 943-44 (2d Cir. 1992) (privilege protects communications and the fact of communication but not the underlying information contained in the communications).

See also:

United States v. Clem, 210 F.3d 373, 2000 WL 353508, at *1 (6th Cir. 2000) (unpublished). Attorney's testimony could be compelled where it related not to privileged communications but to underlying facts.

Diversified Indus., Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596, 611 (8th Cir. 1977). Employee interviews were privileged communications, but the litigants were not foreclosed from obtaining the same information from non-privileged sources.

Banneker Ventures, LLC v. Graham, 253 F. Supp. 3d 64, 71 (D.D.C. 2017). The facts underlying communications between an attorney and client are not protected by the privilege.

Fed. Hous. Fin. Agency v. UBS Americas Inc., No. 11 Civ. 5201(DLC), 2013 WL 1700923, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 16, 2013). Factual summaries contained in memoranda regarding meetings held with third parties were not privileged.

Hilton Rorar v. State & Fed. Commc'ns Inc., No. 5:09 CV 01004, 2010 WL 1486916 (N.D. Ohio Apr. 13, 2010). Email attachments sent to lawyer not privileged where they contained factual information that pre-existed the lawyer-client relationship.

Perius v. Abbott Labs., No. 07C1251, 2008 WL 3889942, at *7 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 20, 2008). Because underlying facts are not privileged, disclosure of facts to litigation adversary does not waive the privilege.

EEOC v. Outback Steakhouse, 251 F.R.D. 603, 609-11 (D. Colo. 2008). Neither the work product doctrine nor the attorney-client privilege precluded discovery of the underlying facts contained in privileged communications or documents. The court ordered defendants to respond to plaintiff's interrogatories about defendant's investigations into gender discrimination and harassment complaints made by female employees.

Tilley v. Equifax Info. Servs., LLC, No. 062304JAR, 2007 WL 3120447, at *2 (D. Kan. Oct. 24, 2007). Noting that attorney-client privilege did not protect discovery of underlying facts and that defendant's attorney was directly involved in the events underlying plaintiff's claims of defamation, the court compelled defendant's attorney to answer plaintiff's deposition questions.

Pastrana v. Local 9509, Commc'ns Workers of Am., No. 06CV1779W(AJB), 2007 WL 2900477, at *3 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2007). The date on which plaintiff learned defendant was not going to pursue plaintiff's grievance claim was not protected by attorney-client privilege and was thus discoverable. Acknowledging Upjohn, the court ordered the deposition of plaintiff's attorney to determine facts relevant to defendant's statute of limitations defenses. Work product doctrine did not apply to protect facts that plaintiff's attorney had learned.

Dairyland Power Coop. v. United States, 79 Fed. Cl. 709, 721-22 (Fed. Cl. 2007). The attorney-client privilege did not preclude discovery of information that a Department of Energy employee learned from company documents and third parties and conveyed to government's counsel.

But see:

Admiral Ins. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Ct. for Dist. of Ariz., 881 F.2d 1486, 1490 n.5 (9th Cir. 1989). The district court denied a motion to quash a subpoena aimed at discovering privileged statements made by corporate officers to counsel where the underlying facts of the statements could not be obtained from the officers themselves because they planned to assert the Fifth Amendment. The Court of Appeals reversed; although the privilege did not shield the underlying facts, there is no exception to the attorney-client privilege where the facts cannot be obtained by means other than disclosure of the privileged communication.

5. Real Evidence and Chain of Custody Not Protected

A client's transmission of real evidence to an attorney does not constitute a communication and is not protected under the attorney-client privilege. Revealing such evidence merely serves to implicate the client and does not disclose confidential communications. As a result, a client cannot shield real evidence merely by giving it to his attorney. See In re January 1976 Grand Jury, 534 F.2d 719, 728 (7th Cir. 1976) (bank robbery proceeds not privileged); In re Ryder, 381 F.2d 713, 714 (4th Cir. 1967) (concealing stolen money and sawed-off shotgun resulted in suspension of attorney); State v. Bright, 676 So. 2d 189, 194 (La. Ct. App. 1996) (privilege did not prevent court from ordering lawyer to produce incriminating diary given to him by defendant).

While the privilege cannot shield physical evidence from production, some courts have found that the privilege will protect the identity of the client who produced the incriminating evidence. See Fees, Identity And The "Last Link," § I.A.3, supra.

See also:

Clutchette v. Rushen, 770 F.2d 1469, 1472-73 (9th Cir. 1985). Attorney-client privilege does not extend to physical evidence. Though client's disclosure to attorney of location of certain receipts would itself be privileged, attorney could not conceal receipts after locating and physically removing them from their prior location.

State v. Green, 493 So. 2d 1178, 1182-83 (La. 1986). Defendant's attorney found the gun used in a shooting among defendant's possessions. Court held that attorney could not rely on the privilege to hide the gun since it was physical evidence and not protected. However, the attorney could not be forced to testify about the source of the gun (i.e., to establish the chain of custody).

People v. Nash, 341 N.W.2d 439, 451-53 (Mich. 1983) (Ryan, Cavanagh, & Kavanagh, JJ.). Prosecuting attorney violated the attorney-client privilege by introducing evidence that incriminating items were obtained from the office of the defendant's attorney.

Dean v. Dean, 607 So. 2d 494, 498-99 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1992). Court quashed subpoena requiring attorney to disclose identity of client who had given him stolen items.

However, many courts hold that the chain of custody for real evidence cannot be broken by an attorney's privileged silence. In Commonwealth v. Ferri, 599 A.2d 208 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1991), appeal denied, 627 A.2d 730 (Pa. 1993), a client turned soiled clothing over to his attorney, who later turned the evidence over to a public defender, thus placing the attorneys in the chain of custody. Id. at 210-11. The court concluded that the trial court did not err in requiring the attorneys to testify about their custody of the clothing in order to make the clothing admissible into evidence. Id. at 212; see also In re Grand Jury Matter No. 91-01386, 969 F.2d 995, 998-99 (11th Cir. 1992) (identity of client is not protected).

6. Communications From an Attorney to a Client Are Protected

The attorney-client privilege not only protects a client's disclosure to his attorney; it also shields the advice given to the client by the attorney. See, e.g., REV. UNIF. R. EVID. 502 (1999); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 cmt. i (2000). However, there is some disagreement about the scope of protection given to an attorney's advice. See, e.g., United States v. Amerada Hess Corp., 619 F.2d 980, 986 (3d Cir. 1980) (noting two approaches). Two approaches are discussed in this section.

a. The Narrow View: Only Advice that Reveals Confidences is Privileged

Some courts have adopted a narrow view that communications from an attorney to a client are privileged only to the extent their disclosure reveals a confidential communication from the client.

See:

United States v. Ramirez, 608 F.2d 1261, 1268 n.12 (9th Cir 1979). Observing in dicta that some courts limit application of the privilege to only those communications of counsel that would reveal a client's own confidential communications and indicating that the limitation was consistent with "modern" conceptions of the privilege.

Yarberry v. Gregg Appliances, Inc., No. 1:12-cv-611, 2013 WL 4476681, at *3-4 (S.D. Ohio Aug. 19, 2013). A document was not privileged because it only revealed that a party consulted with counsel and did not reveal the substance of the communication or counsel's advice.

United States v. Naegele, 468 F. Supp. 2d 165, 169 (D.D.C. 2007). Attorney-client privilege protects communications from attorney to client that would reveal directly or indirectly the substance of the client's communications to the lawyer.

Walsh v. Northrop Grunman Corp., 165 F.R.D. 16, 18 (E.D.N.Y. 1996). Second Circuit "remains committed to the narrowest application of the privilege such that it protects only legal advice that discloses confidential information given to the lawyer by the client."

Republican Party of N.C. v. Martin, 136 F.R.D. 421, 426-27 (E.D.N.C. 1991). Privilege does not apply to legal advice that does not arguably reveal a client's confidences. Thus, attorney memoranda or letters without factual application to a client's case were not protected.

Gonzalez Crespo v. Wella Corp., 774 F. Supp. 688, 689 (D.P.R. 1991). Privilege protects communications from client to attorney and those from attorney to client that would tend to reveal client's confidences.

Ohio-Sealy Mattress Mfg. Co. v. Kaplan, 90 F.R.D. 21, 28 (N.D. Ill. 1980). Noting split of authority and concluding that only communications from an attorney to a client that reveal a client's confidences are privileged.

United States v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 89 F. Supp. 357, 359 (D. Mass. 1950). Attorney communications are privileged to the extent they are based on confidential communications from the client.

In re Haynes, 577 B.R. 711, 737 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2017)._ “Communications from the attorney to the client are also privileged if their disclosure would reveal the client’s confidential communications to the attorney.”

Yankee Atomic Elec. Co. v. United States, 54 Fed. Cl. 306, 313-14 (Fed. Cl. 2002), rev’d on other grounds, Sacramento Mun. Util. Dist. v. United States, 293 F. App’x 766 (Fed. Cir. 2008), and Yankee Atomic Elec. Co. v. United States, 536 F.3d 1268 (Fed. Cir. 2008). Only communications from attorneys that would reveal client confidences are protected.

See also:

Carmody v. Board of Trustees of Univ. of Illinois, 893 F.3d 397, 405 (7th Cir. 2018), quoting United States v. Defazio, 899 F.2d 626, 635 (7th Cir. 1990). “Communications from attorney to client are privileged only if they constitute legal advice, or tend directly or indirectly to reveal the substance of a client confidence.”

Brinton v. Dep’t of State, 636 F.2d 600, 603-04 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Communications from attorney to client are privileged at least to the extent they are “related to the confidence of the client.”

b. The Broader View: Content Irrelevant to Determination of Whether Communication is Privileged

Other courts have rejected the narrow interpretation of the privilege and protect virtually all legal communications from attorney to client. In In re LTV Securities Litigation, 89 F.R.D. 595, 602 (N.D. Tex. 1981), the court recognized the split of authority and rejected the narrow approach because it failed “to deal with the reality that lifting the cover from the advice will seldom leave covered the client’s communication to his lawyer.” Instead, the court adopted a broader rule that protects any communication from an attorney to a client when made in the course of giving legal advice. Id.; see also UNIF. R. EVID. 502(b)(1) (1999).

The Restatement also rejects the narrow rule that the privilege only protects communications that reveal client confidences. RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 cmt. i (2000). Under the Restatement, a lawyer’s advice to her client is privileged without regard to the source of the lawyer’s information if the information meets the requirements of confidentiality and a legal purpose. For example, if a lawyer writes a letter to a client that gives tax advice, and the letter is based in part on information supplied by the client, in part on information gathered by the lawyer from third persons, and in part on the lawyer’s legal research, under the broader approach of the Restatement, the privilege applies to the entire document, even if the parts could be separated. Id. § 69 cmt. i, illus. 7.

See:

United States v. Bauer, 132 F.3d 504, 507 (9th Cir. 1997). Court applied broader rule under both federal common law and Kansas law.

United States v. Amerada Hess Corp., 619 F.2d 980, 986 (3d Cir. 1980). Attorney-client privilege applies to communications from attorney.

RBS Citizens, N.A. v. Husain, 291 F.R.D. 209, 216 (N.D. Ill. 2013). Communications from an attorney are privileged if they contain legal advice or would reveal, directly or indirectly, the substance of a client confidence.

United States v. Mobil Corp., 149 F.R.D. 533, 536 (N.D. Tex. 1993). “The attorney-client privilege protects . . . any communication from an attorney to his client when made in the course of giving legal advice, whether or not that advice is based on privileged communications from the client.”

Cencast Servs., L.P. v. United States, 91 Fed. Cl. 496, 504 (Fed. Cl. 2010). In rejecting the D.C. Circuit’s narrow approach, the Court of Federal Claims stated: “Confidential communications between agency personnel and agency attorneys may be privileged even if the underlying information is not confidential in nature.”

c. Where Lawyer Acts Merely as a Conduit, Communications Are Not Protected

Although many communications from a lawyer to a client are privileged, there is an exception in instances where the lawyer acts merely as conduit for a third party’s message to the client. Instances where the lawyer is acting only as a communicative link are not privileged, and either the lawyer or client can be required to disclose the communication. See, e.g., United States v. Williams, 698 F.3d 374, 380 (7th Cir. 2012) (client was not soliciting legal advice or providing information that the lawyer might use in crafting a defense when he asked his attorney to forward a letter to a third party); Phillips v. C.R. Bard, Inc., 290 F.R.D. 615, 629 (D. Nev. 2013) (merely copying or ‘cc-ing’ legal counsel on an email is not enough to trigger the attorney-client privilege); Wierciszewski v. Granite City Ill. Hosp. Co., Case No. 11-cv-120-GPM-SCW, 2011 WL 5374114, at *1-2 (S.D. Ill. Nov. 7, 2011) (emails on which attorney was copied as a recipient were not privileged because the purpose of the communications was only to keep attorney apprised of developments, not to seek legal advice); Searcy v. eFunds Corp., No. 08 C 985, 2009 WL 562596, at *3 (N.D. Ill. 2009) (“[d]ocuments that would not otherwise be protected from disclosure do not automatically come within the scope of the privilege because they are transmitted to an attorney”); Dawson v. N.Y. Life Ins. Co., 901 F. Supp. 1362, 1366-67 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (cases where attorney is acting as a conduit for factual data do not implicate the privilege); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 69 cmt. i (2000); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5478 (1st ed. West 2019). In these cases, the purpose of the communication is not to obtain legal assistance and, therefore, the exchanges are not privileged. See Privilege Applies Only To Communications Made For The Purpose Of Securing Legal Advice, § I.D, infra. However, information conveyed to counsel for possible inclusion in a filing, report, or letter that will be sent to others and preliminary drafts of documents may still be considered privileged. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Dated Sept. 15, 1983, 731 F.2d 1032, 1037 (2d Cir. 1984); Roth v. Aon Corp., 254 F.R.D. 538, 541 (N.D. Ill. 2009); Schenet v. Anderson, 678 F. Supp. 1280, 1282 (E.D. Mich. 1988).

B. ONLY COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN PRIVILEGED PERSONS ARE PROTECTED

There are three categories of people who are considered privileged persons:

- (1) the client or prospective client,
- (2) the lawyer, and
- (3) the agents of the client and lawyer.

RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 70 (2000); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 91 (7th ed. 2016). To be privileged, both the person sending and the person receiving the communication must fit within one of these three categories. KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 91 (7th ed. 2016); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2327 (Supp. 2019). If either the communicating or receiving party is not a privileged person, then the communication is not protected. See, e.g., United States v. Bernard, 877 F.2d 1463, 1464-65 (10th Cir. 1989). Thus, comments addressed to third parties do not come within the privilege. Similarly, the privilege does not apply to communications from third parties to a client, even if they are later communicated to the attorney by the client (however, these communications could become work product – see Work Product Must Be Prepared By Or For A Party Or By Or For Its Representative, § III.A.2, infra). In those cases where the client relates a communication to the attorney and it is impossible to separate the client’s addition from the non-privileged person’s comment, then the entire communication probably would come within the privilege. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 70 cmt. b (2000).

Under certain circumstances, a communication does not have to be made by or to an attorney to obtain protection under the attorney-client privilege. Some courts have held that a document created at the direction of counsel for the purpose of obtaining legal advice, even if never actually transmitted to an attorney, may be protected by the attorney-client privilege so long as the communication remains among privileged parties. See Williams v. Sprint/United Mgmt. Co., 238 F.R.D. 633, 638-40 (D. Kan. 2006); see also Carl Zeiss Vision Int’l GmbH v. Signet Armolite Inc., No. 07-cv-0894-DMS (POR), 2009 WL 4642388, at *5-6 (S.D. Cal. Dec. 1, 2009) (patent review committee minutes protected by privilege even though sometimes not supplied to a lawyer) (citing Williams); In re Rivastigmine Patent Litig., 237 F.R.D. 69, 80 (S.D.N.Y. 2006), abrogated on other grounds by In re Queen’s Univ. at Kingston, 820 F.3d 1287 (Fed. Cir. 2016); SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Apotex Corp., 232 F.R.D. 467, 477 (E.D. Pa. 2005); Kintera, Inc. v. Convio, Inc., 219 F.R.D. 503, 514 (S.D. Cal. 2003).

In the corporate context, communications between non-lawyer employees in which they discuss obtaining legal advice or advice received from counsel may be privileged. Helget v. City of Hays, No. 13-2228-KHV-KGG, 2014 WL 1308890, at *2-3 (D. Kan. Mar. 28, 2014) (communications among non-lawyer employees may be privileged where they are made in confidence for the purpose of obtaining legal advice); Sterling Merch., Inc. v. Nestle, S.A., No. 06-1015(SEC), 2008 WL 3200702, at *1-2 (D.P.R. Aug. 5, 2008) (communication of counsel’s advice from one employee to another was privileged).

1. Defining the Client

a. In General

The client is generally defined as the intended and immediate beneficiary of the lawyer's services. To be considered a client for the purpose of invoking the attorney-client privilege two conditions must be met:

- (1) the client must communicate with the attorney to obtain legal advice, and
- (2) the client must interact with the attorney to advance the client's own interests.

See Wylie v. Marley Co., 891 F.2d 1463, 1471-72 (10th Cir. 1989); Schilling v. Mid-Am. Apartment Comtys., Inc., No. A-14-CV-1049-LY, 2016 WL 3211992, at *3 (W.D. Tex. June 9, 2016) (company could not assert that vendor's in-house counsel was its attorney absent evidence that it sought legal advice from the attorney); Total Recall Techs v. Luckey, No. 15-cv-02281, 2016 WL 2866177, at *3 (N.D. Cal. May 17, 2016) (law firm acted as counsel for partnership, and privilege belonged to partnership, not individual partners); EEOC v. Johnson & Higgins, Inc., No. 93 Civ. 5481, 1998 WL 778369, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 6, 1998) (EEOC attorneys could not assert that a group of retirees were their clients during a period of time in the case when the retirees opposed the claim filed by the EEOC).

Generally, a prospective client is considered to be a client for the purpose of establishing the attorney-client privilege. See Barton v. U.S. Dist. Court, 410 F.3d 1104, 1111 (9th Cir. 2005) ("Prospective clients' communications with a view to obtaining legal services are plainly covered by the attorney-client privilege under California law, regardless of whether they have retained the lawyer, and regardless of whether they ever retain the lawyer."); In re Grand Jury Proceedings Under Seal, 947 F.2d 1188, 1190 (4th Cir. 1991).

See:

In re Auclair, 961 F.2d 65, 69 (5th Cir. 1992). Communications with group of prospective clients with a common interest can be covered by the privilege.

In re Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Mgmt. Corp., 805 F.2d 120, 124 n.1 (3d Cir. 1986). Privilege applies to conversations with both retained and prospective counsel.

Coe v. Cross-Lines Retirement-Center, Inc., Case No. 22-2047-EFM-ADM, 2022 WL 17338289, at 4 (D. Kan. Nov. 30, 2022). Where putative class action counsel distributed questionnaires for those who wanted to participate in the litigation, questionnaires returned to counsel were privileged, because submitting the questionnaires was a request for legal representation.

United States v. Smukler, 333 F. Supp. 3d 484, 491 n.3 (E.D. Pa. 2018). Privilege applied to conversation between attorney and client that occurred one day before attorney was formally retained.

Hilton-Rorar v. State & Fed. Commc'ns Inc., No. 5:09-CV-01004, 2010 WL 1486916, at *7 (N.D. Ohio Apr. 13, 2010). "When a potential client consults with an attorney, the consultation establishes a relationship akin to that of an attorney and existing client[.],” quoting Banner v. City of Flint & Carl Hamilton, 99 F. App’x 29, 36 (6th Cir. 2004).

*Lucas v. Gold Standard Banking, Inc., No. 13 CV 1524, 2017 WL 1436863, at 2-3 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 24, 2017) (plaintiffs’ initial meetings with counsel were privileged despite lack of “formal” or “express” attorney-client relationship where plaintiffs sought advice from lawyer in his capacity as a lawyer, and where plaintiffs and lawyer intended their conversations to be confidential);

*Vodak v. City of Chi., No. 03 C 2463, 2004 WL 1381043, at 2-3 (N.D. Ill. May 10, 2004). Communications with prospective class members were privileged and noting that “the existence of an attorney-client relationship is not dependent upon the payment of fees or upon the execution of a formal contract.”

REV. UNIF. R. EVID. 502(a)(1) (1999); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 70 (2000); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 88 (7th ed. 2016); 3 JACK W. WEINSTEIN ET AL., WEINSTEIN’S FEDERAL EVIDENCE § 503.11[I] (Lexis 2017). Thus, even if no representation results, the privilege attaches to communications made during an initial consultation with a prospective client.

But see:

United States v. Dennis, 843 F. 2d 652, 656-657 (2nd Cir. 1988) (although privilege applied to initial statements made while seeking to employ attorney, privilege did not apply to statements made after attorney expressly declined the representation).

In class actions, class representatives are generally considered to be the clients of class counsel. E.g., Harlow v. Sprint Nextel Corp., No. 08-2222-KHV-DJW, 2012 WL 646003, at *6 (D. Kan. Feb. 28, 2012) (following class certification, class members are “clients” of class counsel for the purpose of the attorney-client privilege). Some courts have held that unnamed class members are not considered clients because they do not directly contact the lawyers for legal assistance. In that circumstance, communications between class members who are not class representatives and class counsel may not be privileged. See EEOC v. Republic Servs. Inc., No. 2:04-CV-01352, 2007 WL 465446, at *2 (D. Nev. Feb. 8, 2007) (letter sent by class counsel to putative class members or prospective witnesses not protected by attorney-client privilege). But see Barton v. Dist. Court, 410 F.3d 1104, 1111 (9th Cir. 2005) (privilege attached to communications made by potential class members through a law firm website, notwithstanding disclaimer that potential clients were not “forming an attorney client relationship” with the firm); Vodak, 2004 WL 1381043, at *2-3 (privilege attached to questionnaires filled out by potential class plaintiffs in a civil rights claim in which potential class members “reasonably believed that they were consulting counsel in their capacity as lawyers and they completed the questionnaire for the purpose of requesting legal representation”); EEOC v. Int’l Profit Assocs., 206 F.R.D. 215, 219 (N.D. Ill. 2002) (communications between prospective class members and EEOC counsel and their agents are protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege); Bauman v. Jacobs Suchard, Inc., 136 F.R.D. 460, 461 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (same).

Privilege may exist even if the client does not pay a fee to receive legal services. RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 70 cmt. d (2000); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 88 (7th ed. 2016); see also Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 580 F.2d 1311, 1317 (7th Cir. 1978). Thus, a person paying the legal fees for a third person is not a client unless the payor also sought legal advice from the lawyer. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Proceedings, Cherney, 898 F.2d 565, 567 (7th Cir. 1990). But see In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 841 F.2d 230, 231 n.2 (8th Cir. 1988) (privilege protects substance of confidential communications between a third-party fee payor and a law firm).

b. Organizational Clients

Although the definition of a client is relatively straightforward for individuals, defining a “client” in an organizational setting is considerably more difficult. Because corporations may only communicate through their employees, it is important to determine who speaks for the corporation and is thus protected by the corporation’s privilege as a client. See Judson Atkinson Candies, Inc. v. Latini-Hohberger Dhimantec, 529 F.3d 371, 389 n.4 (7th Cir. 2008) (noting that the attorney-client privilege applies to corporations, which must act through individuals, and finding that communications between a corporation and its attorneys remained protected when an individual who was both the sole shareholder and CEO was privy to those conversations); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5475 (1st ed. West 2019). The analysis is further complicated because the group that is defined as the client for the purposes of creating the privilege is often more expansive than the group that is entitled to assert or waive the privilege. See Assertion Of The Attorney-Client Privilege And Depositions Of Counsel, § I.E.2, infra.

(1) Defining the Organizational Client – Upjohn

Historically, courts applying the attorney-client privilege to corporations struggled to determine which corporate employees most closely resembled the traditional “client” in an attorney-client relationship. In doing so, courts often found that the interaction between high-level officers and directors and corporate counsel approximated a traditional attorney-client relationship and was thus deserving of protection. Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Am. Gas Ass’n, 320 F.2d 314, 323-24 (7th Cir. 1963) (in determining which employees constituted the client for privilege purposes, the court applied a test called the “control group” test, which designated only upper-level management as the client of corporate counsel and thus protected only the communications of upper-echelon management). Courts reasoned that these managers not only sought legal advice for the organization but also caused the corporation to act on the advice that it received. For employees lower down on the corporation’s organization chart, however, the relationship with organizational counsel tended to resemble a traditional client relationship much less. Moreover, conflicts between the interests of the employee and the organization frequently appeared.

The United States Supreme Court eventually rejected the “control group” test for federal cases in Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383 (1981). Upjohn sent privilege analysis in a new direction, and created a less-structured definition of the corporate client. See 8 CHARLES A. WRIGHT, ARTHUR R. MILLER & RICHARD L. MARCUS, FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 2017 (3d ed. West 2019) (Upjohn “look[s] more to the motivation of the lawyer to seek out information” than the typical rationale for the privilege – encouraging clients to provide information). In that case, Upjohn disclosed to the SEC and IRS the results of an internal investigation conducted by both inside and outside counsel, which uncovered some questionable payments by Upjohn to foreign officials. Based on this report, the IRS began an investigation and subpoenaed the questionnaires underlying the disclosed report. When Upjohn claimed privilege, the IRS initiated suit to enforce the subpoena. The Supreme Court held that the notes of the internal investigators' interviews with Upjohn's middle and lower management employees, who were clearly outside of Upjohn's "control group," were privileged. Id. at 394-95.

The Upjohn Court "decline[d] to lay down a broad rule" to govern the extent of the privilege's reach, and in so doing rejected the control group test for determining the scope of the corporate attorney-client privilege. Id. at 386. In its place, the court set down five factors to guide courts in determining the validity of attorney-client privilege claims for communications between legal counsel and lower-echelon corporate employees:

- (1) the information is necessary to supply the basis for legal advice to the corporation or was ordered to be communicated by superior officers;
- (2) the information was not available from "control group" management;
- (3) the communications concerned matters within the scope of the employees' duties. But see Baxter Travenol Labs., Inc. v. Lemay, 89 F.R.D. 410, 412-14 (S.D. Ohio 1981) (communications with a former employee hired solely for the purposes of assisting in litigation as a litigation consultant were protected even though the communications did not concern matters within the scope of the employee's duties);
- (4) the employees were aware that they were being questioned in order for the corporation to secure legal advice; and
- (5) the communications were considered confidential when made and kept confidential. But see Leucadia, Inc. v. Reliance Ins. Co., 101 F.R.D. 674, 678 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) (privilege upheld without showing that the communications were made in reliance on an expectation of confidentiality).

Upjohn, 449 U.S. at 394-95. When each of these elements is met, a lower-echelon employee is considered a client for the purpose of the attorney-client privilege, and the employee's communications with corporate counsel are privileged. Id.; Bruce v. Christian, 113 F.R.D. 554, 560 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (privilege extends to employees' communications on matters within the scope of their employment and when employee is questioned in confidence in order for employer to obtain legal advice).

See:

Tucker v. Fischbein, 237 F.3d 275, 288 (3d Cir. 2001). Citing Upjohn and holding that conversations between in-house counsel and employee-journalists were privileged because conversation was undertaken to provide legal advice regarding employer's potential libel exposure.

PaineWebber Grp., Inc. v. Zinsmeyer Trusts P'ship, 187 F.3d 988, 991-92 (8th Cir. 1999). Following Upjohn and holding that attorney's conversations with employees during internal investigation were privileged.

In re Bieter Co., 16 F.3d 929, 935-36 (8th Cir. 1994). Noting that Upjohn rejected the control group test but did not mandate a specific rule and applying a five-prong test in determining that communication with employees remained privileged.

Davine v. Golub Corp., No. 3:14-30136-MGM, 2017 WL 517749, at *7-8 (D. Mass. Feb.8, 2017). Non-legal consultant's report not privileged where consultant interviewed employees without informing employees that information was being gathered in order to provide legal advice to the general counsel.

Helget v. City of Hays, No. 13-2228-KHV-KGG, 2014 WL 1308890, at *2-3 (D. Kan. Mar. 28, 2014). Emails among employees were privileged, even where a lawyer was neither the author nor the recipient of the emails. The emails were made in confidence for the purpose of obtaining legal advice. It was undisputed here that the communications were the direct result of requests by counsel for the City and were for the purpose of obtaining legal advice with respect to responding to plaintiff's discovery requests.

Freescal Semiconductor, Inc. v. Maxim Integrated Prods., Inc., No. A-13-CV-075-LY, 2013 WL 5874139, at *4 (W.D. Tex. Oct. 30, 2013). An anonymous whistleblower's initial submission to a company on-line ethics site was not protected by the attorney-client privilege, but subsequent communications between the whistleblower, who was likely an employee of defendant, and counsel for the purpose of obtaining more specific information as part of an investigation into the alleged wrongdoing fell within the scope of the privilege pursuant to Upjohn.

Faloney v. Wachovia Bank, N.A., 254 F.R.D. 204, 212-13 (E.D. Pa. 2008). Email from defendant's corporate litigation attorney addressed to two bank officials was protected by the attorney-client privilege where (1) the bank officials could provide factual information on defendant's interaction with payment processors and telemarketers; (2) counsel needed the information from the officials to respond to legal issues raised by government inquiry and possible litigation; (3) the information communicated was within the scope of the officials' employment; and (4) the officials knew that counsel needed the information to make recommendations regarding defendant's policies.

Amco Ins. Co. v. Madera Quality Nut LLC, No. 1:04-cv-06456-SMS, 2006 WL 931437, at *8-9 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 11, 2006). Communications exchanged between company employees and in-house counsel and counsel's agents as part of an internal investigation were privileged communications; the dominant purpose was to obtain factual information in order to give legal advice.

Lugosch v. Congel, 218 F.R.D. 41, 47 (N.D.N.Y. 2003). Following Upjohn and holding that "statements made by employees, of any station or level within a corporation or a sophisticated business structure, to an attorney or the attorney's agent which were done in confidence and outside the purview of others are protected."

Some jurisdictions place extra emphasis on the first element of the Upjohn test by requiring that a senior authority direct the lower-level employee to make the confidential communication. See Indep. Petrochem. Corp. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 654 F. Supp. 1334, 1364-65 (D.D.C. 1986) (no privilege for volunteered communications of a district manager who was not in the control group and who was not directed by his superiors to communicate with company attorneys). Other courts, and the Restatement, reject this approach and consider disclosures to be impliedly authorized if made in the interests of the corporation. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 73 cmt. h (2000).

The test developed in Upjohn makes no distinction with regard to an agent's position or degree of decision-making responsibility. Instead, the privilege turns on whether the employee imparted information to the lawyer or received assistance from the lawyer on behalf of the organization. Upjohn, 449 U.S. at 394-95.

While much of the case law involves the application of Upjohn to corporations, the same standards apply to other organizations such as unincorporated associations, partnerships, and other for-profit or not-for-profit organizations. See generally Kneeland v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 650 F. Supp. 1076, 1087 (W.D. State courts and federal courts sitting in exercise of diversity jurisdiction are not bound by the Upjohn decision and have adopted various tests for defining the organizational client. See State Court Definitions Of The Organizational Client, § I.B.1.b(5), infra.

Although Upjohn is controlling in federal courts applying federal law, the current Restatement espouses a slightly different articulation of the privilege, adopting a pre-Upjohn test known as the “subject matter” test, which was first developed in Harper & Row Publishers, Inc. v. Decker, 423 F.2d 487, 491-92 (7th Cir. 1970), and modified in Diversified Industries, Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596, 608-09 (8th Cir. 1977). See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 73 (2000). Under this “subject matter” test, the privilege extends to communications of any agent or employee of the corporation so long as the communication relates to a subject matter for which the organization is seeking legal representation. Under Upjohn, the subject matter of the communication is but one factor to consider.

The High Court of Justice of England and Wales has taken a different approach, applying a narrow interpretation of the “client.” In The RBS Rights Issue Litigation, [2016] EWHC 3131 (ch) (08 December 2016), the court held that interviews of RBS employees, conducted by the corporation’s counsel during internal investigations, were not privileged because the employees in question were not considered to be part of the client for purposes of the privilege. The court stated that the corporate client consists only of a small “Inquiry Unit” – those employees authorized to seek and receive legal advice from counsel – not employees more generally. As a result, the court ordered the disclosure of notes and interview memoranda prepared by U.S.-based attorneys during internal investigations conducted in the United States in response to SEC subpoenas and an internal complaint. More recently, in Serious Fraud Office v. Eurasian Natural Resources Corp. LTD, [2017] EHC 1017 (QB) (08 May 2017), the court held that privilege did not apply to persons interviewed because those individuals were not authorized to seek or receive legal advice on behalf of the company, and the communications between the individuals interviewed and the solicitors conducting the interviews were not communications in the course of conveying instructions to the solicitors on behalf of the corporate client.

For a discussion of the application of the attorney-client privilege to communications within law firms with attorneys acting as in-house counsel, see Internal Communications With Law Firm In-House Counsel, § I.I.4, infra.

(2) Functional Equivalent of an Employee

In the context of representing a corporate client, it is sometimes necessary for counsel to communicate with non-employees who are intimately familiar with or play a significant role in the corporation's business. Where it can be said that the non-employee is the "functional equivalent" of an employee, some courts will protect the communications. The leading case on this approach is In re Bieter Co., 16 F.3d 929, 938-39 (8th Cir. 1994). In Bieter, a partnership, Bieter, relied on an independent contractor, Klohs, to conduct the partnership's business. Klohs had daily interaction with one of the partnership's principals; he worked out of Bieter's offices and often attended meetings, either with the principal or alone, regarding Bieter's business transactions and the subsequent litigation. Id. at 934. The court held that, as the "functional equivalent" of an employee, Klohs acted as the representative of the client, and his communications with Bieter's counsel were within the attorney-client privilege. Id. at 937.

The court cited proposed Federal Rule of Evidence 503, which protects communications between the client "or his representative" and the client's lawyer or lawyer's representative. Id. at 935. Finding that confining "representative" to employees would defeat the purpose of the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383 (1981), the court held that "there is no principled basis to distinguish Klohs's role from that of an employee" if "he was in all relevant respects the functional equivalent of an employee." Id. at 938.

A number of courts have applied the "functional equivalent" test:

United States v. Graf, 610 F.3d 1148, 1157-59 (9th Cir. 2010). The court adopted the Eighth Circuit's test from Bieter and found that an independent contractor was the "functional equivalent" of an employee and, therefore, the contractor's discussions with the company's counsel fell within the company's attorney-client privilege. The independent contractor "regularly communicated with [third parties] on behalf of [the company], marketed the company's insurance plans, managed its employees, and was the company's voice in its communications with counsel."

Fosbre v. Las Vegas Sands Corp., No. 210CV00765APGGWF, 2016 WL 183476, at *5-6 (D. Nev. Jan. 14, 2016). Communications between company, lawyer, and non-lawyer management consultants may be privileged, but that privilege only exists where individual consulting firm employees were proper participants in or recipients of confidential communications for the purpose of obtaining legal advice. The privilege did not apply to all communications involving all consulting firm employees assigned to work with the company.

Smith v. Unilife Corp., Civil Action No. 13-501, 2015 WL 667432, at *3 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 13, 2015). Communications between company and non-lawyer consultants regarding drafts of SEC Form 10-K reports were privileged under the functional equivalent doctrine. "A trial judge is not in a good position to second-guess a corporate decision to rely on an independent consultant or an employee to accomplish a specific task and/or to make recommendations to the CEO or general counsel.”

Schaeffer v. Gregory Village Partners, LP, 78 F. Supp. 3d 1198, 1203 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 26, 2015). Public relations consultant was functional equivalent of an employee where he was directly involved in project for which he had been engaged, he met with the company’s board to develop strategy, developed talking points to be used with government officials, attended meeting with third party stakeholders and, along with company counsel, participated in public meetings conducted by the local municipality.

Church & Dwight Co., Inc. v. SPD Swiss Precision Diagnostics, GmbH, No. 14-civ-585, 2014 WL 7238354, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 19, 2014). Marketing firm hired to assist with launch of product not the functional equivalent of an employee. The company did not establish the marketing firm had primary responsibility for a key corporate job, or that there was a continuous and close working relationship between the firm and the company’s principals on matter of critical importance to the litigation, or that the consultant “is likely to possess information possessed by no one else at the company.”

King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., Nos. 2:06-cv-1797, 2:08-cv-2141, 2013 WL 4836752, at *6-7 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 11, 2013). Following the broad approach of the “functional equivalent” test, the court held that communications with consultants who were hired not to perform a litigation function but to prepare business and marketing plans, who had dedicated office space within the defendant company and were subject to confidentiality agreements, and who worked closely with defendant’s employees to provide managerial support and strategic advice fell within the scope of the attorney-client privilege.

In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 879 F. Supp. 2d 454, 460 (E.D. Pa. 2012). The court broadly interpreted the functional equivalent doctrine to include a consultant that acted as an integrated member of company.

Steinfeld v. IMS Health Inc., No. 10 Civ. 3301(CS)(PED), 2011 WL 6179505, at *1-4 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 9, 2011). The court held that an outside consultant retained to advise a corporation about executive compensation and benefits plans was not the functional equivalent of an employee, because: (1) the corporation did not routinely use contractors in lieu of employees; (2) the consultant had not publicly represented the corporation; (3) the consultant was not frequently physically present in the corporation’s offices; (4) the corporation did not lack internal resources, necessitating the consultant’s services; (5) the consultant was not vested with independent decisionmaking authority; and (6) the consultant never sought legal advice on behalf of the corporation.

Trs. of the Elec. Workers Local No. 26 Pension Trust Fund v. Trust Fund Advisors, Inc., 266 F.R.D. 1, 7-9 (D.D.C. 2010). Presence of non-employee consultants during a privileged board meeting did not waive the privilege. Plaintiff Pension Trust was administered by the Board of Trustees and had no employees. Instead, it used paid consultants to perform duties that otherwise would have been performed by paid employees. Therefore, the consultants were the functional equivalent of employees. They had significant managerial responsibility that typically would have been performed by high-level corporate managers.

Jones v. Nissan N. Am., Inc., No. 3:07-0645, 2008 WL 4366055, at *7 (M.D. Tenn. Sept. 17, 2008). Presence of a non-employee medical director in meeting with company’s in-house and outside trial counsel did not waive privilege. Where non-employee medical director was custodian of company’s medical records, including medical restrictions for plaintiff employee, medical director had a “significant relationship” to company’s employment dispute with plaintiff.

Every Penny Counts, Inc. v. Am. Express Co., No. 8:07-cv-1255-T-26MAP, 2008 WL 2074407, at *2 (M.D. Fla. May 15, 2008). Individual who assisted plaintiff with patent claim drafting and marketing efforts was a de facto consultant such that an email from plaintiff’s president to him and to plaintiff’s attorney was privileged even before a formal written consulting agreement was signed.

Davis v. City of Seattle, No. C06-1659Z, 2007 WL 4166154, at *4 (W.D. Wash. Nov. 20, 2007). Attorney-client privilege applied to draft reports communicated to organization's counsel by an outside attorney investigator. Under the factors outlined in Bieter, the court found that the investigator was the functional equivalent of an employee, that the drafts reflected information developed within the scope of her duties, and that the drafts constituted communications with organization's counsel to provide counsel with information necessary to inform counsel's advice.

BSP Software, LLC v. Motio, Inc., No. 12 C 2100, 2013 WL 3456870, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. July 9, 2013). The court criticized the functional equivalent test and held that a company's disclosure of privileged materials to an advisory board waived the privilege.

LG Electronics U.S.A., Inc. v. Whirlpool Corporation, 661 F. Supp. 2d 958, 964 (N.D. Ill. 2009). Agencies that prepared marketing material for defendant did not act as "de facto employees" because the defendant "exercise[ed] the final say in all of its advertisements, closely monitor[ed] all agency work, and retain[ed] all rights in the agencies' work product."

Export-Import Bank of U.S. v. Asia Pulp & Paper Co., Ltd., 232 F.R.D. 103, 113 (S.D.N.Y. 2005). To determine whether a consultant should be considered the functional equivalent of an employee, courts look to: (1) whether the consultant had primary responsibility for a key corporate job; (2) whether there was a continuous and close working relationship between the consultant and the company's principals on matters critical to the company's position in litigation; and (3) whether the consultant is likely to possess information possessed by no one else at the company. Company's financial advisors failed to meet this test.

Outside insurance adjuster, hired to review claims and report to insurer's outside counsel, was a privileged agent and communications with counsel were protected by the privilege.

(3) Representation of Individual Employees by Organizational Counsel

When an employee is deemed a part of the organizational client, the organization enjoys the protection of the privilege for that employee's communications. Likewise, if the corporation believes that it is in its best interest to waive its attorney-client privilege for the employee's communications, the communications are subject to discovery unless the employee possesses an individual claim of attorney-client privilege. In order to maximize the corporation's ability to protect its privilege and to control its ability to waive privilege if it decides to do so at a later date, it is important – particularly in the context of an internal investigation – that corporate counsel clearly explain that (1) counsel represents the corporation and not the employee, (2) the privilege belongs to the corporation and not to the employee, and (3) the employee should keep the communication confidential.

To assert an individual claim of privilege over a communication between an employee and organizational counsel, the employee must independently prove the existence of each of the traditional elements of the privilege. See United States v. Ruehle, 583 F.3d 600, 607 (9th Cir. 2009); United States v. Keplinger, 776 F.2d 678, 700 (7th Cir. 1985); see also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 73 cmt. j (2000); Gregory I. Massing, Note, The Fifth Amendment, the Attorney-Client Privilege, and the Prosecution of White-Collar Crime, 75 VA. L. REV. 1179, 1196 (1989). Where the employee alleges that a personal attorney-client relationship exists with the organizational lawyer, the employee bears the burden of proving that the statements were made in the employee's individual capacity, not in the employee's capacity as an employee of the organizational client. See Odmark v. Westside Bancorporation, Inc., 636 F. Supp. 552, 555-56 (W.D. Wash. 1986); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 434 F. Supp. 648, 650 (E.D. Mich. 1977).

If counsel represents only the corporation and has informed the employee of that fact, the employee is not personally a client of the corporation's attorney and no individual privilege arises to protect the employee. See United States v. Demauro, 581 F.2d 50, 55 (2d Cir. 1978) (employee unable to assert privilege when he could not prove that he believed counsel was representing him); United States v. Ferrell, No. CR07-0066MJP, 2007 WL 2220213 (W.D. Wash. Aug. 1, 2007) (government employee could not assert privilege where government attorney did not represent employee); United States v. Stein, 463 F. Supp. 2d 459, 465 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (partnership had authority to waive attorney-client privilege with respect to communications between partnership's counsel and one of the partners, even when communication could expose that partner to personal liability); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 73 cmt. j (2000). Moreover, counsel representing a corporation may not be under an affirmative obligation to advise a corporate employee of his right to retain personal counsel, even if the corporation's counsel plans to elicit statements that may criminally inculcate the employee. See United States v. Calhoun, 859 F. Supp. 1496, 1498 (M.D. Ga. 1994). As a result, the organization may be able to invoke the privilege for some communications while the employee cannot. For example, in United States v. Keplinger, 776 F.2d 678, 700 (7th Cir. 1985), several employees were questioned by their employer's counsel about laboratory safety studies. When the employees were later charged with making fraudulent statements and the employer sought to use their statements against them, the court found that the employees never sought nor inquired about individual representation and that their employer's attorneys had neither believed nor represented to the employees that they were acting as counsel to the employees. Id. As a result, no personal attorney-client relationship existed between the employees and counsel, and the court held that the employees could not assert the attorney-client privilege to suppress their own statements. Id.; see also Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 348-49 (1985); In re Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Mgmt. Corp., 805 F.2d 120, 124-25 (3d Cir. 1986); SEC v. Nicita, No. 07CV0772 WQH (AJB), 2008 WL 170010, at *4 (S.D. Cal. Jan. 16, 2008) (respondents, former officers of a corporation being investigated by the SEC for allegedly manipulating earnings, could not assert attorney-client privilege to protect documents and testimony when the privilege belonged to the corporation and the corporation had waived it).

If the organization has a conflict of interest with the employee, the organization's lawyer may not purport to represent both. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 73 cmt. j (2000); Ethical Considerations: Dual Representation, § VII.C.1, infra. See also Yanez v. Brian Plummer, 164 Cal. Rptr. 3d 309, 313-16 (Cal. Ct. App. 2013) (in-house counsel's joint representation of company and its employee who was the sole witness of a slip and fall that injured another employee presented triable issues of fact regarding the employee's allegations of malpractice against counsel following his termination where the interest of the company and the employee were adverse and in-house counsel failed to obtain informed consent from the employee). If the corporate attorney fails to make clear to an employee that the attorney is representing the corporation and not the employee, then the attorney may be disqualified from representing the corporation in later litigation against the employee. See, e.g., Chase Manhattan Bank v. Higginson, No. 17864/84, 1984 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 3411 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Oct. 11, 1984) (disqualifying counsel). However, an employee has the heavy burden of establishing that corporate counsel was providing dual representation to both the corporation and the individual. See United States v. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 119 F.3d 210, 217 (2d Cir. 1997) (employee failed to prove dual representation even though entity's attorneys "did not do all that they could have done to clarify the conflicts of interest that . . . develop between organizations and their employees"). A subjective belief that the attorney was representing the individual employee is not enough to establish an attorney-client relationship. Cole v. Ruidoso Mun. Sch., 43 F.3d 1373, 1384-85 (10th Cir. 1994); MacKenzie-Childs LLC v. MacKenzie-Childs, 262 F.R.D. 241, 253-55 (W.D.N.Y. 2009) (employees who were the "sole shareholders and ultimate decisionmakers of a closely held corporation" did not enter into a personal attorney-client relationship with corporate counsel because the employees never made it clear to counsel that they were seeking personal legal advice).

In In re Bevill Bresler & Schulman Asset Management Corporation, 805 F.2d 120, 123 (3d Cir. 1986), the court held that an employee seeking to prove that she was being represented individually by corporate counsel must show:

- (1) the employee approached corporate counsel for the purpose of seeking legal advice;

- (2) the employee made it clear that she was seeking advice in an individual capacity;
- (3) counsel sought to communicate with the employee in an individual capacity, mindful of possible conflicts;
- (4) the communications were confidential; and
- (5) the communications did not concern the employee's official duties or general affairs of the company.

Graf, 610 F.3d 1148, 1159-61 (9th Cir. 2010) (adopting the Bevill test); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 274 F.3d 563, 571-72 (1st Cir. 2001) (citing Bevill standard with approval); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 144 F.3d 653, 659 (10th Cir. 1998) (hospital officers sufficiently established that the hospital's attorneys represented them individually by testifying that each officer sought the advice of the attorneys in his individual capacity and confidential communications occurred between them regarding personal matters); United States v. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 119 F.3d 210, 217 (2d Cir. 1997) (employee failed sufficiently to establish that he was being represented individually by his employer's counsel because the employee neither sought nor received legal advice from his employer's counsel on personal matters).

Some courts have lessened the showing an employee must make to prove that organizational counsel is personally representing the employee. In these jurisdictions, if a lawyer fails to clarify that she is solely representing the organization, then the employee may assert the privilege if the employee reasonably believed that the lawyer represented the employee. United States v. Hart, No. Crim. A. 92-219, 1992 WL 348425, at *1-2 (E.D. La. Nov. 16, 1992) (employees reasonably believed that corporate counsel was representing them individually and therefore could invoke privilege); see also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 14 cmt. f (2000). But see Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 119 F.3d at 216 (rejecting employee's assertion that the privilege should apply because he reasonably believed that employer's attorney was representing him in his individual capacity).

Debtor’s individual officers and directors could not assert privilege over documents belonging to the debtor, since outside counsel acted as special counsel only for the debtor and outside counsel had never prepared any documents on behalf of the individuals.

Kennedy v. Gulf Coast Cancer & Diagnostic Ctr. at Se., Inc., 326 S.W.3d 352 (Tex. App. 2010). Outside law firm’s memorandum belonged to the corporation, not the corporation’s former in-house counsel who requested it and who, in his personal capacity, was a client of the outside law firm. In the memorandum, the law firm wrote that it had been retained “only to provide advice to the Company” and employees “should obtain independent counsel.”

The decision in United States v. Ruehle, 583 F.3d 600 (9th Cir. 2009), is particularly instructive regarding both the importance of corporate counsel clarifying its role as representing only the corporation, and the heavy burden that a corporate employee may face when attempting to assert individual privilege. In Ruehle, Broadcom’s outside counsel conducted an internal investigation regarding potential stock options backdating. As part of the investigation, counsel interviewed Broadcom’s CFO, Ruehle. Id. at 602. Broadcom disclosed the results of the investigation to its outside auditors and, later, to the government. Id. at 604-05. The SEC and the United States Attorney’s Office commenced formal enforcement and grand jury investigations, resulting in a grand jury indictment of Ruehle. Id. at 605. Ruehle moved to exclude evidence regarding statements he made during the internal investigation based on an individual attorney-client privilege over communications with Broadcom’s outside counsel. Id. Complicating the case were: (1) that Ruehle and counsel disputed whether counsel had given Ruehle a “corporate Miranda warning”; and (2) that corporate counsel was simultaneously representing Ruehle individually in a different matter. Id. at 605-06.

The trial court focused on counsel’s failure to adequately inform Ruehle that counsel was representing only the corporation and not Ruehle individually. United States v. Nicholas, 606 F. Supp.2d 1109 (S.D. Cal. 2009), rev’d in part sub nom, United States v. Ruehle, 583 F.3d 600 (9th Cir. 2009). Applying California law, the trial court held that Ruehle’s communications with counsel were privileged and should be excluded from the criminal proceedings. The trial court also found that counsel had breached its ethical duties and referred the matter to the California State Bar for appropriate discipline. 606 F. Supp. 2d at 1121.

The appellate court reversed with respect to Ruehle’s assertion of privilege. Applying federal common law, the court held that, although there was a dispute regarding whether counsel had given Ruehle a “corporate Miranda warning,” Ruehle could not assert privilege because Ruehle was aware at the time he communicated with corporate counsel that the corporation intended to disclose the results of its investigation to the company’s outside auditors and to the government. 583 F.3d at 608. As a result, Ruehle failed to demonstrate that his communications with counsel were “made in confidence.” Id. at 609. The appellate court noted that Ruehle was a senior officer of a sophisticated, publicly traded company and that Ruehle had been intimately involved in all aspects of the internal investigation, including the decision at the outset to disclose information to its auditors and the government. Id. at 610.

The appellate court described a “so-called Upjohn or corporate Miranda warning”: “Such warnings make clear that the corporate lawyers do not represent the individual employee, that anything said by the employee to the lawyers will be protected by the company's attorney-client privilege subject to waiver of the privilege in the sole discretion of the company; and that the individual may wish to consult with his own attorney if he has any concerns about his own potential legal exposure." Id. at 604 n.3 (citing Upjohn v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 393-96 (1981)).

The ethical implications of organizational counsel representing individual employees are further discussed in Ethical Considerations: Dual Representation, § VII.C.1, infra.

(4) Former Employees of Organizational Clients

A problem often arises when a former employee has communicated with an organization's attorney after his employment has ended and the organization attempts to invoke the privilege to protect these exchanges. The courts disagree over whether communications between former employees and organizational counsel are privileged in these cases.

Compare:

Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 402-03 (1981) (Burger, C.J., concurring). A communication is privileged when a former employee speaks at the direction of management with a corporate attorney about conduct or proposed conduct within the scope of her employment.

In re Allen, 106 F.3d 582, 606 (4th Cir. 1997). Privilege precluded inquiry into interview conducted by investigating attorney with former employee.

Favala v. Cumberland Eng'g Co., 17 F.3d 987, 990 (7th Cir. 1994). The court held that a former employee could not be prevented from testifying but could not testify about communications with the company's attorney.

Admiral Ins. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for Dist. of Ariz., 881 F.2d 1486, 1492-93 (9th Cir. 1989). Counsel interviewed two high-level managerial employees about pending securities litigation. After the interviews, the two employees quit. The court found that the privilege extended to the former employees. Court noted that the employees knew at the time of the interviews that the communications were to secure legal advice for the corporation.

Digital Vending Servs. Int'l, Inc. v. Univ. of Phoenix, Inc., No. 2:09cv555, 2013 WL 1560212, at *7 (E.D. Va. Apr. 12, 2013). The Fourth Circuit applies Upjohn to determine whether former employees fall within the scope of the privilege.

In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 723 F. Supp. 2d 761, 765 (E.D. Pa. 2010). Privilege applies to conversations between company counsel and former employee during deposition recess.

Miramar Constr. Co. v. Home Depot Inc., 167 F. Supp. 2d 182, 185 (D.P.R. 2001). Privilege extended to former employee designated as a corporate litigation representative by the corporate client.

In re Worldwide Wholesale Lumber, Inc., 392 B.R. 197, 202-03 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2008). Privilege applied to protect post-bankruptcy petition communications between former officer and director of debtor company and trustee's counsel when communications were for the purpose of investigation and rendering advice to trustee, who was the debtor's successor.

With:

In re Grand Jury Subpoena: Under Seal, 415 F.3d 333, 339-40 (4th Cir. 2005). Holding that privilege did not apply to conversations between corporation's outside counsel and former employees. Counsel to the former employer told employees that they represented the employer and that, absent a conflict, they could also represent the employee. Former employees did not, in fact, enter into an attorney-client relationship with attorneys, however, and privilege therefore did not apply.

Corcoran v. HCA-HealthONE LLC, Civil Action No. 21-cv-02377-NRN, 2022 WL 1605296, at *4 (D. Colo. May 20, 2022). Court adopts Peralta approach as "reasonable and consistent with the objectives of preserving the corporate entity's privilege, while recognizing that the adversary has a right to know if the witnesses' testimony has been influenced in any way."

United States v. Merck-Medco Managed Care, LLC, 340 F. Supp. 2d 554, 557-58 (E.D. Pa. 2004). Holding that former employee's communications with counsel during the term of her employment were privileged but that subsequent conversations were not privileged.

Wade Williams Distrib., Inc. v. Am. Broad. Cos., Inc., No. 00 Civ. 5002(LMM), 2004 WL 1487702, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 2004). Following Peralta v. Cendant Corp., 190 F.R.D. 38, 41-42 (D. Conn. 1999), below, and holding that employee could be deposed regarding communications with corporate counsel notwithstanding understanding of employee and counsel that counsel also represented employee.

Freeport-McMoran Sulphur, LLC v. Mike Mullen Energy Equip. Res. Co., No. Civ. A. 03-1496, 2004 WL 1237450 (E.D. La. June 2, 2004). Holding that communications with a former employee, retained as a consultant, were not subject to the privilege.

Infosys., Inc. v. Ceridian Corp., 197 F.R.D. 303, 306 (E.D. Mich. 2000). Except in very limited circumstances, "counsel's communications with a former employee of the client corporation generally should be treated no differently from communications with any other third-party fact witness." Those limited circumstances include situations in which a privileged communication occurred during the course of employment or "where the present-day communication concerns a confidential matter that was uniquely within the knowledge of the former employee when he worked for the client corporation, such that counsel's communication with this former employee must be cloaked with the privilege in order for meaningful fact-gathering to occur."

City of N.Y. v. Coastal Oil N.Y., Inc., No. 96 Civ. 8667 (RPP), 2000 WL 145748, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 7, 2000). The privilege did not apply to communications between in-house counsel and a former employee during deposition preparation where in-house counsel was not conducting an investigation.

Peralta v. Cendant Corp., 190 F.R.D. 38, 41-42 (D. Conn. 1999). Where former employee is unrepresented by former employer's counsel, privilege applies only to matters that former employee was aware of as a result of her employment. Information conveyed by counsel that goes beyond that knowledge is not protected by the attorney-client privilege, although the opinions and conclusions of counsel would be protected by the work product doctrine.

Barrett Indus. Trucks, Inc. v. Old Republic Ins. Co., 129 F.R.D. 515, 517 (N.D. Ill. 1990). Privilege did not apply because former employee's interest differed from ex-employer's interest. Analysis based in part on the more stringent control group test followed in Illinois.

Clark Equip. Co. v. Lift Parts Mfg. Co., Inc., No. 82 C 4585, 1985 WL 2917, at *4-6 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 30, 1985). The reasoning of Upjohn does not support extension of the attorney-client privilege to cover post-employment communications with former employees of a corporate client. Former employees do not share an identity of interest in the outcome of the litigation. Their willingness to provide information is unrelated to direction from former corporate superiors, and they have no duty to their former employers to provide information. “It is virtually impossible to distinguish the position of a former employee from any other third party who might have pertinent information about one or more corporate parties to a lawsuit.”

Newman v. Highland Sch. Dist. 203, 186 Wash. 2d 769, 776-77 (Wash. 2016). Attorney-client privilege did not extend to post-employment communications between counsel for school district and former employees of school district.

Generally, a former employee must have an agency obligation at the time he communicates with the organizational attorney for the communication to be privileged. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 73 cmt. e (2000). Several courts have held that post-employment communications of senior officers concerning a matter within the scope of the former officers’ duties are privileged. See, e.g., Admiral Ins. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for Dist. of Ariz., 881 F.2d 1486, 1493 (9th Cir. 1989); In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Litig., 658 F.2d 1355, 1361 n.7 (9th Cir. 1981); Amarin Plastics, Inc. v. Md. Cup Corp., 116 F.R.D. 36, 41 (D. Mass. 1987). Although it will generally be the case, many courts do not require the privileged information to have been acquired during employment. See Chancellor v. Boeing Co., 678 F. Supp. 250, 253-54 (D. Kan. 1988) (ex-employee who had personal involvement in the actions involved in the suit cannot be interviewed).

Because former employees are no longer agents of the corporate entity, corporate documents in their possession are not held in a representational capacity. Such employees, in response to discovery requests for production of the documents, may assert their Fifth Amendment rights and refuse to produce such documents if “the act of production is, itself, (1) compelled, (2) testimonial, and (3) incriminating.” See In re Three Grand Jury Subpoenas Duces Tecum Dated Jan. 29, 1999, 191 F.3d 173, 178 (2d Cir. 1999). When former employees themselves seek to access or review privileged documents from the period of their employment that are held by the corporate entity, courts have been willing to allow them to do so in limited circumstances. See People v. Greenberg, 851 N.Y.S.2d 196, 199-202 (N.Y. App. Div. 2008) (holding, in an action against a corporation and two former officers and directors, that the officers and directors could inspect privileged legal memoranda relating to the transactions that were the basis for the Attorney General’s suit in order to prepare their defenses). See Privilege Within The Corporation, § I.B.1.b(6), infra.

The issue of whether an attorney can ethically interview an opposing corporation’s former employees is discussed in Ethical Considerations: Former Employees, § VII.C.2, infra.

(5) State Court Definitions of the Organizational Client

The Upjohn opinion is controlling only for federal courts applying federal law. Nevertheless, many states have followed the Upjohn definition of the corporate client.

See:

Samaritan Found v. Goodfarb, 862 P.2d 870, 873-74 (Ariz. 1993). Not explicitly adopting Upjohn, but holding that when determining the scope of the attorney-client privilege, a court should focus on the subject matter and nature of the communication rather than the rank of the speaker.

Tabas v. Bowden, No. Civ. A. 6619, 1982 WL 17820, at *4 (Del. Ch. Feb. 16, 1982). Citing Upjohn favorably.

Wardleigh v. Second Judicial Dist. Court in & for Cnty. of Washoe, 891 P.2d 1180, 1185 (Nev. 1995). Approving the test announced in Upjohn, but holding that homeowners in a homeowners' association were not the equivalent of employees in a corporation.

Macey v. Rollins Envtl. Servs. (N.J.), Inc., 432 A.2d 960, 963-64 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1981). Citing Upjohn favorably, the court interpreted the state codification of the attorney-client privilege broadly and held that it protected communications between corporate counsel and the corporation's officers and employees.

Baisley v. Missisquoi Cemetary Ass'n, 708 A.2d 924, 931 (Vt. 1998). Agreeing with Upjohn that "the control-group test is too limited to implement fully the attorney-client privilege in the corporate or association setting," and considering the subject matter and modified subject matter tests, but failing to adopt a specific test.

State courts that have declined to follow Upjohn have established their own rules for applying the attorney-client privilege to corporations. Some states still follow the "control group" test. Under this test, only upper-level management is considered a client for purposes of the attorney-client privilege. See, e.g., ME. R. EVID. 502(a)(2) ("A 'representative of the client' is one having authority to obtain professional legal services, or to act on advice rendered pursuant thereto, on behalf of the client."); HAW. R. EVID. 503(a)(2), HAW. REV. STAT. § 626-1 (West 2016) (same). Thus, comments by lower-echelon employees to corporate counsel are unprotected. This test has been criticized because it fails to recognize that the division of functions in corporations often separates decision-makers from those knowing relevant facts. See Upjohn v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 390-91 (1981); Faloney v. Wachovia, 254 F.R.D. 204, 212-13 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (noting the policy behind applying a broad test to protecting communications between corporate employees and counsel and observing that, absent a broad test, "in-house counsel would be wary of engaging in a candid exchange to alter business decisions that may run afoul of the law"). Some states still apply the "control group" test.

See:

Wigod v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. 10-2348, Slip. Op., at *4-5 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 9, 2012). An internal company email between the legal department and the media relations department was not privileged because members of the media relations department did not advise management and were not part of the control group.

Jentz v. ConAgra Foods, Nos. 10-0474, 10-0952, 2011 WL 5325669, at *1-3 (S.D. Ill. Nov. 3, 2011). Applying Illinois law, the court held that transmission of an attorney-client privileged communication from a member of a company's control group to lower-level employees in the human resources department waived the privilege.

Resurrection Healthcare & Factory Mut. Ins. Co. v. GE Health Care, No. 07 C 5980, 2009 WL 691286, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 16, 2009). Director of Clinical Services responsible for overseeing managing all bio-medical service contracts was not “involved in decisionmaking at the highest levels” and therefore was not within protected control group.

Langdon v. Champion, 752 P.2d 999, 1002 (Alaska 1988). Noting that the commentary to Alaska Rule of Evidence 503(a) “was included in the Rules solely as a means by which to adopt the ‘control group’ test governing assertion of the attorney-client privilege by corporate clients.”

Consolidation Coal Co. v. Bucyrus-Erie Co., 432 N.E.2d 250, 256-58 (Ill. 1982). The court rejected the Upjohn approach and adopted the “control group” test, which protects communications between counsel and corporate decisionmakers or those “who substantially influence corporate decisions.” As a practical matter, the only communications that will ordinarily be protected are those made by top management who have the ability to make a final decision.

Midwesco-Paschen Joint Venture for Viking Projects v. Imo Indus. Inc., 638 N.E.2d 322, 325-26 (Ill. App. Ct. 1994). The court expanded the control group test of Consolidation Coal to include two tiers of corporate employees whose communications with corporate counsel are protected: (1) the decision makers (i.e., top management), and (2) employees who directly advise top management.

Other courts have adopted different tests. Some have adopted a “subject matter” approach, which extends the attorney-client privilege “to those communications between attorneys and all agents or employees of the organization who are authorized to act or speak for the organization in relation to the subject matter of the communication.” Hubka v. Pennfield Twp., 494 N.W.2d 800, 802 (Mich. Ct. App. 1992), rev'd in part on other grounds, 504 N.W.2d 183 (Mich. 1993).

See also:

In re Avantel, S.A., 343 F.3d 311, 318 (5th Cir. 2003). Noting that, by statutory adoption, Texas rejected the “control group” test in favor of the “subject matter” test in 1998.

United Investors Life Ins. Co. v. Nationwide Life Ins. Co., 233 F.R.D. 483, 487 (N.D. Miss. 2006). Applying Mississippi law to hold that communications by employee were protected when employee has “authority to obtain professional legal services, or to act on advice rendered pursuant thereto, on behalf of the client or [when] an employee of the client [has] information needed to enable the lawyer to render legal services to the client” (quoting MISS. R. EVID. 502 cmt.) (internal quotation marks omitted). This test may encompass a group of employees larger than the control group.

Marriott Corp. v. Am. Acad. of Psychotherapists, Inc., 277 S.E.2d 785, 791-92 (Ga. Ct. App. 1981). The court adopted the “subject matter” test of Diversified Industries, Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596 (8th Cir. 1977). Under that test, communications are privileged so long as the communication relates to a subject matter for which the organization is seeking legal representation.

E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. Forma-Pack, Inc., 718 A.2d 1129, 1139-41 (Md. 1998). Court discussed the Upjohn test, the “subject matter” test, and a test articulated by the Florida Supreme Court, but declined to adopt “a particular set of criteria for the application of the privilege in the corporate context until we are required to do so.”

Leer v. Chi., Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. Ry., 308 N.W.2d 305, 308-09 (Minn. 1981). Court noted various tests for determining the identity of a corporate client and seemed to lean towards a test that examines the nature of the communication, but declined to adopt any of them. Court held that the statements of an employee regarding an accident witnessed by the employee were not protected under any of the tests.

Finally, some states have fashioned unique tests that combine elements from some or all of the other methods of determining which corporate employees' communications with attorneys may be privileged.

See:

D.I. Chadbourne, Inc. v. Super. Court, 60 Cal. 2d 723, 736-38 (Cal. 1964). Adopting a test that examines privilege with respect to an inquiry driven by eleven principles of the attorney-client relationship.

Shew v. Freedom of Info. Comm'n, 691 A.2d 29, 34 (Conn. App. Ct. 1997). Using a four-part test "[c]onsistent with the teachings of Upjohn" to determine whether communications from government employee to attorney for public agency were privileged. Factors include the following: (1) attorney must be acting in professional capacity for the agency; (2) communications must be made by current employees; (3) communications must relate to legal advice sought by the agency; and (4) communications must be made in confidence.

S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Deason, 632 So.2d 1377, 1383 (Fla. 1994). Adopting a five-factor test that examines: (1) whether the communication would have been made but for contemplation of legal services; (2) whether employee made communication at direction of corporate superior; (3) whether superior made request of employee as part of corporation's efforts to secure legal advice; (4) whether subject matter of communication is within scope of employee's duties; and (5) whether communication was disseminated beyond people who needed to know its contents.

(6) Privilege Within the Corporation

There is some conflict among courts as to whether the attorney-client privilege can be asserted on behalf of the corporation against its own directors. In Moore Business Forms, Inc. v. Cordant Holdings Corp., Nos. 13911, 14595, 1996 WL 307444, at *4-6 (Del. Ch. June 4, 1996), Cordant attempted to assert the attorney-client privilege to prevent a director whom Moore had installed on the Cordant board from accessing information that was provided to other Cordant directors. The court rejected Cordant's attempt to assert the privilege, holding that it would be "perverse" to allow a client (the Cordant board) to assert the privilege against itself (one of Cordant's own directors). Id.

See:

Pearl City Elevator, Inc. v. Gieske, C.A. No. 2020-0419-JRS, 2020 WL 5640268, at *2, 4 (Del. Ch. Sept. 21, 2020). Explaining privileged information may be withheld from current directors: (1) when the board member limits their rights by agreement ex ante; (2) when a board forms a special committee excluding the director; (3) when "sufficient adversity" exists between the board member and the entity such that the board member could no longer have a reasonable expectation that they were a client of counsel to the entity.

Del Giudice v. Harlan, No. 15CIV7330LTSJCF, 2016 WL 5338089, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 22, 2016), objections sustained in part and overruled in part on other grounds, No. 15 CV 7330-LTS-JCF, 2016 WL 6875894 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 21, 2016). Former directors of corporation were entitled to attorney-client communications generated during their tenures as directors.

Kalisman v. Friedman, No. 8447-VCL, 2013 WL 1668205, at *4 (Del. Ch. Apr. 17, 2013). Corporate director's "essentially unfettered" right to information extends to privileged material.

People v. Greenberg, 851 N.Y.S.2d 196, 201-03 (N.Y. App. Div. 2008). Former CEO and former CFO entitled to inspect legal documents created during their employment when the documents related to the suit against them and their former employer.

See also:

Gilmore v. Turvo, Inc., C.A. No. 2019-0472-JRS, 2019 WL 3937606, at *3 (Del. Ch. Aug. 19, 2019). Former board member and CEO was not entitled to privileged communications between law firm and other board members investigating former CEO's misconduct while he was in office.

Montgomery v. eTrepid Techs., L.L.C., 548 F. Supp. 2d 1175, 1187 (D. Nev. 2008). Former manager or officer suing in his personal capacity could not access defendant's attorney-client privileged communications.

Barr v. Harrah's Entm't, Inc., No. Civ. 05-5056JEI, 2008 WL 906351, at *7 (D.N.J. Mar. 31, 2008). Noting that "a former officer or director serving as a class representative in a class action lawsuit asserting a breach of contract claim does not have the right to review privileged documents of the corporation solely based upon the officer or director's prior access to such documents during his tenure as a former officer or director with the corporation".

Dexia Credit Local v. Rogan, 231 F.R.D. 268, 276-79 (N.D. Ill. 2004) (corporation could assert privilege against former member of control group, notwithstanding member's authorship of documents at issue, because member had left the control group.

Milroy v. Hanson, 875 F. Supp. 646, 648-49 (D. Neb. 1995) (no right of dissident director to pierce privilege asserted on behalf of corporation by majority of the board). Courts are split about whether the corporation may assert the attorney-client privilege against former employees who had access to the privileged material during their employment.

Gilday v. Kenra, Ltd., No. 1:09-cv-00229-TWP-TAB, 2010 WL 3928593, at *3-4 (S.D. Ind. Oct. 4, 2010) (analyzing the court split and holding that the privilege belongs to the corporation, even when the contested documents are communications between the former employee and the corporation's outside counsel.

Disclosure of privileged information to Directors acting in their fiduciary capacity does not waive privilege, even where the Director is also employed by a different company, including a significant investor. However, disclosures of privileged information to investors, whether directly or through an investor appointed Director may waive privilege.

See:

In re: Sanchez Energy Corp., Case No. 19-34508, 2022 WL 17586713, at *4 (Bankr. S.D. Texas Dec. 12, 2022). Where a designated board member shared privileged communications with the designee investor, the attorney-client privilege was waived. "Under federal common law, the Court has no reason to believe that a designating shareholder is entitled to the privileged information of its designated board member."

Finjan, Inc. v. Sonicwall, Inc., Case No. 17-cv-04467-BLF (VKD), 2020 WL 4192285, at *4 (N.D. Cal. July 21, 2020). Privilege was waived where disclosures were made to a board observer who was not a fiduciary of the company.

Argos Holdings Inc. v. Wilmington Trust National Assoc., 18cv5773 (DLC), 2019 WL 1397150, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 28, 2019). Court analyzed complex corporate structure in which individuals acted as directors of certain affiliates and as investors of others; communications received in their role as investors waived privilege.

c. Government Agencies as Clients

Unlike private attorneys, attorneys for government agencies owe a duty to the public to ensure that laws are obeyed by their clients – governmental entities. Therefore, courts have taken special policy consideration into account when determining whether the attorney-client privilege protects communications between a government agency and the agency’s attorney. See In re Lindsey (Grand Jury Testimony), 158 F.3d 1263, 1272 (D.C. Cir. 1998); see also In re Witness Before Special Grand Jury 2000-2, 288 F.3d 289, 293-94 (7th Cir. 2002) (officeholders may not invoke the attorney-client privilege with regard to communications with government attorneys in the context of criminal grand jury proceedings).

There is a circuit court split on this issue. See generally United States v. Bravo-Fernandez, 756 F.Supp.2d 184, 197-98 (D.P.R. 2010) (noting the circuit split and analyzing cases from the Second, Seventh, Eighth, and D.C. Circuits).

For example, in Reed v. Baxter, 134 F.3d 351, 356-57 (6th Cir. 1998), the Sixth Circuit panel stated that “[t]he recognition of a governmental attorney-client privilege imposes the same costs as are imposed in the application of the corporate privilege, but with an added disadvantage. The governmental privilege stands squarely in conflict with the strong public interest in open and honest government.” The court held that communications that took place in a meeting between city council members and the city’s attorney regarding the fire department’s employee-promotion practice were not protected by the attorney-client privilege because, in that context, the council members “were not clients at a meeting with their lawyer. Rather, they were elected officials investigating the reasons for executive behavior.” Id. at 357.

In contrast to Reed, other courts have held that “the traditional rationale for the [attorney-client] privilege applies with special force in the government context. It is crucial that government officials, who are expected to uphold and execute the law and who may face criminal prosecution for failing to do so, be encouraged to seek out and receive fully informed legal advice.” Brinckerhoff v. Town of Paradise, No. CIV. S-10-0023 MCE GGH, 2010 WL 4806966, at *4 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 18, 2010); accord In re Grand Jury Investigation, 399 F.3d 527, 534 (2d Cir. 2005). See also In re Cnty. of Erie, 473 F.3d 413, 419 (2d Cir. 2007) (“At least in civil litigation between a government agency and private litigants, the government’s claim to the protections of the attorney-client privilege is on a par with the claim of an individual or a corporate entity.”). Cf. In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 828 F.3d 1083, 1092 (9th Cir. 2016) (privilege concerning communications between former governor and state attorneys regarding official actions was held by the state, not personally by the former governor).

The public interest against application of a government attorney-client privilege is particularly compelling in cases that involve allegations of criminal wrongdoing by public officials. In In re Lindsey (Grand Jury Testimony), 158 F.3d 1263, 1272 (D.C. Cir. 1998), while defining “the particular contours of the government attorney-client privilege,” the panel noted that, “[w]ith respect to investigations of federal criminal offenses, and especially offenses committed by those in government, government attorneys stand in a far different position from members of the private bar.” In that case, the court considered whether a White House attorney may refuse to appear before a federal grand jury to answer questions about possible criminal conduct of government officials within the Office of the President. Id. at 1274. The court rejected the White House attorney’s assertion of the attorney-client privilege, concluding that the duty of government attorneys to ensure that laws be faithfully executed and the duty to report possible criminal violations pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act weighed against recognizing a governmental attorney-client privilege in a federal grand jury proceeding. Id.; see also In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 112 F.3d 910, 921 (8th Cir. 1997) (“We believe the strong public interest in honest government and in exposing wrongdoing by public officials would be ill-served by recognition of a governmental attorney-client privilege applicable in criminal proceedings inquiring into the actions of public officials.”); In re Thirty-Third Statewide Investigating Grand Jury, 86 A.3d 204, 224 (Pa. 2014) (neither attorney-client privilege nor work product protection precluded the production of communications between the Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission (“PTC”) and its counsel in connection with an ongoing grand jury investigation against the PTC on suspicion of wrongdoing).

Additionally, when government agencies are clients, issues arise regarding how much legal advice the agencies can share with each other without destroying the attorney-client privilege. See Modesto Irrigation Dist. v. Gutierrez, No. 1:06-CV-00453, 2007 WL 763370, at *14-21 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 9, 2007) (rejecting the government’s theory that all government agencies can freely share legal advice without waiving the privilege because – under the “unitary executive theory” – the entire executive government functions as a single client). But see Menasha Corp. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 707 F.3d 846, 852 (7th Cir. 2013) (reversing Menasha Corp. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, No. 11 C 682, 2012 WL 252196 (E.D. Wis. Jan. 26, 2012), and holding that, for purposes of the work product doctrine, competing sections of the Department of Justice should be treated as a single party, even if they have adverse interests, and each may disclose work product to the other without waiving work product protection, but declining to address the issue of whether government documents were also protected by the attorney-client privilege and other common law privileges because the documents were protected as work product).

2. Defining the Lawyer

The second category of privileged persons is comprised of lawyers. See generally RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 72 cmt. e (2000); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5480 (1st ed. West 2019). Generally, courts have defined a “lawyer” for purposes of the attorney-client privilege as “a member of the bar of a court.” See Allen v. W. Point-Pepperell, Inc., 848 F. Supp. 423, 427 (S.D.N.Y. 1994); Wultz v. Bank of China Ltd., 979 F. Supp. 2d 479, 495 (S.D.N.Y.), modified in part on reconsideration, 2013 WL 6098484 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (attorney-client privilege did not apply to Chinese bank’s documents containing communications with in-house counsel, because in-house counsel in China, unlike attorneys, are not required to be members of the bar); but see Buyer’s Direct Inc. v. Belk, Inc., No. SACV 12-00370-DOC, 2012 WL 1416639, at *3 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 24, 2012) (extending attorney-client privilege to patent agents due to congressional goal of allowing clients to utilize either in proceedings before the United States Patent and Trademark Office (“PTO”), but limiting the privilege to “communications related to presenting and prosecuting applications before the [PTO]” and not post-issuance communications). However, most courts hold that the attorney need not be a member of the local bar in order to claim the privilege, so long as the attorney is admitted to practice in some state. See Gucci America, Inc. v. Guess? Inc., No. 09 Civ 4373 (SAS), 2011 WL 9375, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 3, 2011) (in-house counsel’s inactive bar status by itself does not destroy the privilege).

Moreover, many jurisdictions apply the “reasonable belief test,” which states that, for the purpose of establishing attorney-client privilege, a lawyer is anyone whom a client reasonably believes to be authorized to practice law. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 112 F.3d 910, 923 (8th Cir. 1997); Gucci, 2011 WL 9375, at *5 (applying reasonable belief test to corporation’s representation by in-house attorney who was on inactive status with the state bar); In re Freeway Foods of Greensboro, Inc., Bankr. No. 10-11282, Adv. No. 10-02057, 2014 WL 1652435, at *1, *3 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. Apr. 24, 2014) (communications between company personnel, CEO, Chairman, and general counsel were privileged even though general counsel did not hold an active license to practice law where the CEO and Chairman had a reasonable belief that general counsel was an attorney because he displayed a law school diploma and bar certificate in his office). But see John Ernst Lucken Revocable Trust v. Heritage Bankshares Group, Inc., No. 16-CV-4005-MWB, 2017 WL 627223, at *2 (N.D. Iowa 2017), (no privilege applied where the attorney in question had changed his status to “inactive,” the attorney was ineligible to practice, and evidence suggested that plaintiffs knew of the attorney’s “inactive status”); Charleston Cap. Advisors, LLC v. Acero Junction, Inc., No. 18CV4437JGKBCM, 2020 WL 757840, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 14, 2020) (no privilege when no demonstration of reasonable belief that the consulted person was a licensed attorney); Anwar v. Fairfield Greenwich Ltd., 306 F.R.D. 117, 120 (S.D.N.Y. 2013), (applying reasonable belief test and concluding that, although client may have misunderstood Dutch law, the client knew that Dutch attorney was unlicensed); United States v. Henry, No. 06-33-01, 2007 WL 419197, at *1 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 2, 2007) (“client’s” conversations with jailhouse lawyer not privileged even if “client” believed cellmate was an attorney); United States v. Cook, No. CR05-424Z, 2007 WL 391559, at *3 (W.D. Wash. Jan. 23, 2007) (communications between “client” and law student not subject to attorney-client privilege during the period when law student was not yet licensed, even where law student, once licensed, continued to serve as attorney for same client); Fin. Techs. Int'l, Inc. v. Smith, No. 99 Civ. 9351 (GEL) (RLE), 2000 WL 1855131, at *6-7 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 19, 2000) (refusing to apply reasonable belief test to corporate client).

a. In-House vs. Outside Counsel

Theoretically, for the purpose of asserting the attorney-client privilege, the determination of who is the attorney is straightforward, and the privilege treats in-house counsel and outside counsel equally.¹

See:

Shelton v. Am. Motors Corp., 805 F.2d 1323, 1326 n.3 (8th Cir. 1986). In-house counsel is treated no differently than outside counsel.

In re Sealed Case, 737 F.2d 94, 99 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ginsburg, J.). Status as in-house counsel does not dilute privilege, but does require a clear showing that communications with in-house counsel were in a professional legal capacity.

Nata v. Hogan, 392 F.2d 686, 692 (10th Cir. 1968). Attorney-client privilege does not depend on the number of clients an attorney has; therefore, in-house counsel is treated no differently than outside counsel.

Klaassen v. Atkinson, No. 13-2561-DDC, 2016 WL 3881334, at *3 (D. Kan. July 18, 2016). The attorney-client privilege attached to communications with in-house counsel if the communications were made at the request of management to obtain legal advice. Any privilege resulting from communications between officers and attorneys within the scope of the organization's affairs belonged to the organization, not the officer.

AIU Ins. Co. v. TIG Ins. Co., No. 07 Civ. 7052 (SHS) (HBP), 2008 WL 4067437, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 28, 2008), modified, 2009 WL 1953039 (S.D.N.Y. July 8, 2009). In-house counsel is treated the same as outside counsel, but if the in-house counsel also serves as business advisor to the corporation, only communications providing legal, not business, advice are protected by the attorney-client privilege.

Deel v. Bank of Am., N.A., 227 F.R.D. 456, 458-460 (W.D. Va. 2005). Observing that the privilege "applies to individuals and corporations, and to in-house and outside counsel" and refusing to order production of documents where the party "clearly sent these documents to its in-house and outside counsel to facilitate legal services."

United States v. Northrop Grumman Corp., No. 89 C 6111, 2002 WL 31478259, at *4 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2002). Documents produced by outside auditor retained by in-house counsel for purposes of establishing potential liability remained privileged.

Koumoulis v. Indep. Fin. Mktg. Grp., Inc., 295 F.R.D. 28, 38 (E.D.N.Y. 2013). The court noted that while "outside counsel may be more 'independent' and less likely 'to play dual roles'" in comparison to in-house counsel, "there is no presumption that communications with outside counsel are privileged."

However, several courts have made it clear that they do treat in-house counsel differently when assessing the assertion of privilege. Because in-house counsel often plays multiple roles in the corporation, many courts apply heightened scrutiny in determining whether the elements necessary for the privilege have been established. Courts often require that in-house counsel make a "clear showing" that communications were made for a legal, rather than a business, purpose.

Breneisen v. Motorola, Inc., No. 02 C 50509, 2003 WL 21530440, at *3 (N.D. Ill. July 3, 2003). Communications made by and to corporate in-house counsel regarding business matters, management decisions, or business advice are not protected by the attorney-client privilege. "Generally, there is a presumption that a lawyer in a legal department of the corporation is giving legal advice, and an opposite presumption for a lawyer who works on the business or management side. However, the lawyer's position in the corporation is not necessarily dispositive."

Ames v. Black Entm't Television, No. 9 Civ. 0226, 1998 WL 812051, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 18, 1998) (citation omitted). "We are mindful . . . [t]hat [the witness who was VP and general counsel] was a Company vice president, and had certain responsibilities outside the lawyer's sphere. The Company can shelter [the witness's] advice only upon a clear showing that [the witness] gave it in a professional legal capacity."

United States v. Chevron Corp., No. C-94-1885 SBA, 1996 WL 264769, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 13, 1996) (emphasis in original). "Some courts have applied a presumption that all communications to outside counsel are primarily related to legal advice. See Diversified Indus., Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596, 610 (8th Cir. 1977). In this context, the presumption is logical since outside counsel would not ordinarily be involved in the business decisions of a corporation. However, the Diversified presumption cannot be applied to in-house counsel because in-house counsel are frequently involved in the business decisions of a company. While an attorney's status as in-house counsel does not dilute the attorney-client privilege . . . a corporation must make a clear showing that in-house counsel's advice was given in a professional legal capacity."

*Kramer v. Raymond Corp., No. 90-5026, 1992 WL 122856, at 1 (E.D. Pa. May 29, 1992). "The attorney-client privilege is construed narrowly. This is especially so when a corporate entity seeks to invoke the privilege to protect communications to in-house counsel. Because in-house counsel may play a dual role of legal advisor and business advisor, the privilege will apply only if the communication's primary purpose is to gain or provide legal assistance. . . . [T]he corporation must clearly demonstrate that the communication in question was made for the express purpose of securing legal not business advice." (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Cf. Privilege Applies Only To Communications Made For The Purpose Of Securing Legal Advice, § I.D, infra.

Courts may also treat in-house counsel differently when determining whether the privilege has been waived. Generally, since the privilege belongs to the client, courts are unwilling to allow counsel to waive the privilege without implied, actual or apparent authority from the client. See Authority To Waive Privilege, § I.G.4, infra. However, because in-house counsel are agents of the organization itself, some courts have found that in-house counsel are capable of waiving the privilege for the organization. See Velsicol Chem. Corp. v. Parsons, 561 F.2d 671, 674 (7th Cir. 1977); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Dec. 18, 1981, 561 F. Supp. 1247, 1254 n.3 (E.D.N.Y. 1982).

b. Accountants as Privileged Parties

At common law, there was no accountant-client privilege. United States v. Bisanti, 414 F.3d 168, 170 (1st Cir. 2005); see also Couch v. United States, 409 U.S. 322, 335 (1973) (noting the lack of such a privilege under federal law); Evergreen Trading, L.L.C. v. United States, 80 Fed. Cl. 122, 134 (Fed. Cl. 2007) (same); Stoney Glen, LLC v. S. Bank & Trust Co., Civil Action No. 2:13cv8-HCM-LRL, 2013 WL 5514293, at *4 (E.D. Va. Oct. 2, 2013) (same); Cottillion v. Refining Co., 279 F.R.D. 290, 299 (W.D. Pa. 2011) (same). However, the federal government and many states have enacted statutory accountant-client privileges of varying breadth.

In 1998, Congress adopted legislation that created a limited accountant-client privilege. The IRS Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 purports, with some limitations, to extend the common-law attorney-client privilege to "federally authorized tax practitioner[s]" providing "tax advice" by amending the Internal Revenue Code § 7525. See I.R.C. § 7525 (West 2016). Several accounting firms have attempted to avail themselves of its protection in order to circumvent disclosure requirements related to clients involved in tax shelters, but most courts have limited the applicability of the privilege in this context. For example, in United States v. BDO Seidman, 337 F.3d 802, 811 (7th Cir. 2003), the Seventh Circuit held that Section 7525 does not protect the identities of accountancy clients that have purchased tax shelters. The court reasoned that because client identities are not generally protected by the attorney-client privilege at common law, and because Section 7525 does not provide any broader protection, the client identities were not protected. Id. at 811-12. Further, because federal law requires reporting of tax shelter clients, no expectation of privacy could attach, further limiting applicability of the privilege. Id. at 812.

Evergreen Trading, L.L.C. v. United States, 80 Fed. Cl. 122, 129-31, 134-35 (Fed. Cl. 2007). Scope of the tax practitioner-client privilege depends on the scope of the attorney-client privilege. Attorney-client privilege does not apply when an attorney acts as a tax return preparer; documents used in preparing tax returns are not privileged. Furthermore, a party waives the attorney-client privilege that applies to an attorney’s legal advice concerning the tax consequences of an action when the party discloses or relies on that advice.

Countryside L.P. v. Comm’r, 132 T.C. 347, 350-55 (T.C. 2009). Notes taken by the taxpayer during meetings with its longstanding tax adviser, PricewaterhouseCoopers, were privileged because: (1) the notes were not communicated to PwC, so they were not “communications” within the meaning of the statute, and (2) PwC had an ongoing relationship with the taxpayer, rendered advice when asked for it, counseled within its area of expertise, and retained no stake as an advisor to the taxpayer, but instead was paid an hourly rate, and thus the conduct did not fall within the statutory definition of “promotion.”

The effect of I.R.C. Section 7525 has not been substantial because it only attaches where an accountant, authorized to practice before the Internal Revenue Service, is involved in a civil matter before the Service or a federal court in which the United States is a party, and then only applies to the same extent the common-law privilege would apply. Thus, it is only when an accountant is performing an attorney’s work that the accountant-client privilege would apply. See United States v. Frederick, 182 F.3d 496, 502 (7th Cir. 1999) (“Nothing in the new statute suggests that these non-lawyer practitioners are entitled to privilege when they are doing other than lawyers’ work; and so the statute would not change our analysis even if it were applicable to this case, which it is not, because it is applicable only to communications made on or after July 22, 1998, the date the statute was enacted.”); Evergreen Trading L.L.C. v. United States, 80 Fed. Cl. 122, 130 (Fed. Cl. 2007) (recognizing Frederick); see also Accountants As Privileged Agents, § I.B.3.b, infra. Further, as enacted, I.R.C. § 7525 excluded communications related to corporate tax shelters from its protection. In 2004, Congress amended the provision to exclude communications related to tax shelters generally from its effect.

Several states have enacted statutes creating an accountant-client privilege. For a list and text of these statutes, see DAVID M. GREENWALD, MICHELE L. SLACHETKA & CAROLINE L. MENEAU, TESTIMONIAL PRIVILEGES § 3:6 & App. 3-1 (West 2023). In federal actions based on diversity jurisdiction, these state law protections of accountant-client communications may protect information that would not be protected under federal common law. See Choice of Law: Identifying The Applicable Law, § VII.A, infra.

3. Defining Privileged Agents

a. Privileged Agents in General

In addition to clients and lawyers, the definition of privileged persons includes agents of the client and the lawyer who assist in the representation. United States v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 89 F. Supp. 357, 358 (D. Mass. 1950). Privileged agents include non-employees such as paralegals and investigators. The presence of these third-party agents does not waive the privilege if their presence was to facilitate effective communication between lawyer and client or to further the representation in some other way. In re Grand Jury Investigation, 918 F.2d 374, 386 n.20 (3d Cir. 1990) (presence of agent does not abrogate privilege); PROPOSED FED. R. EVID. 503(b)(4), 56 F.R.D. 183, 235-36 (1973). Privileged agents are sometimes grouped into two categories: (1) communicating agents, and (2) representing agents. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 70 cmts. f, g (2000), 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5483 (1st ed. West 2019) (discussing communicating and source agents).

Both the lawyer and client typically will have communicating agents. These agents enable the lawyer and client to communicate effectively. 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2317 (Supp. 2019). The most common examples of communicating agents are employees such as couriers and secretaries. See, e.g., United States v. Bill Harbert Int'l Constr. Co., No. 95-1231 (RCL), 2007 WL 915235, at *2-3 (D.D.C. Mar. 27, 2007) (presence of client's assistant did not waive privilege when assistant's job was to witness documents and ensure a record of their creation). The presence of the communicating agent must be reasonably necessary or the privilege is waived. KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 91 (7th ed. 2016); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE §§ 5485-86 (1st ed. West 2019); see also Kevlik v. Goldstein, 724 F.2d 844, 849 (1st Cir. 1984). Note, however, that while the presence of a non-professional agent does not destroy the privilege, and while those agents may communicate the advice of an attorney, the non-professional's own advice may not itself be privileged. See HPD Labs., Inc. v. Clorox Co., 202 F.R.D. 410, 416 (D.N.J. 2001) (observing that, while communications with paralegal are privileged to the extent they pass on an attorney's advice or were made under an attorney's supervision, communications originating with the paralegal are not themselves privileged).

Representing agents include confidential assistants of the lawyer such as a file clerks or paralegal assistants. These agents are necessary for the operation of the lawyer's business. See United States v. Kovel, 296 F.2d 918, 921-22 (2d Cir. 1961) (necessary secretaries, paralegals, legal assistants, stenographers or clerks are privileged agents); Hilton-Rorar v. State & Fed. Comm'ns Inc., No. 5:09-CV-01004, 2010 WL 1486916, at *4 (N.D. Ohio Apr. 13, 2010) ("Law clerks, secretaries, paralegals, file clerks, telephone operators, messengers, clerks not yet admitted to the bar, among other aides, including consulting experts may qualify as an attorney's representative."); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 91 (7th ed. 2016); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5482 (1st ed. West 2019).

Representing agents can also include any subordinate or agent of the attorney if the attorney uses the agent to facilitate legal advice and supervises the agent's actions. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 70 cmt. g (2000). Pursuant to what has come to be called the "Kovel doctrine," a consulting expert retained by the attorney or client to assist the attorney in providing legal advice to the client qualifies as a privileged agent if consulted for the purpose of improving the attorney's comprehension of factual information or the client's comprehension of legal advice provided by the attorney. United States v. Kovel, 296 F.2d 918, 922 (2d Cir. 1961) (accountant hired by tax counsel to assist in interpreting client conversations was considered privileged agent); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 70 cmt. f, illus. 5 (2000). The Kovel doctrine has been adopted or applied by several Circuits. See Cavallaro v. United States, 284 F.3d 236, 247 (1st Cir. 2002); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 220 F.3d 568, 571 (7th Cir. 2000); United States v. Bornstein, 977 F.2d 112, 116-17 (4th Cir. 1992); Fed. Trade Comm'n v. TRW, Inc., 628 F.2d 207, 212 (D.C. Cir. 1980); United States v. Alvarez, 519 F.2d 1036, 1045-46 (3d Cir. 1975); United States v. Cote, 456 F.2d 142, 144 (8th Cir. 1972); United States v. Judson, 322 F.2d 460, 462-63 (9th Cir. 1963).

In order to be privileged, the communication with the agent must be made in confidence for the purpose of obtaining legal advice from the attorney; business advice, such as accounting services, will not be privileged. Kovel, 296 F.2d at 922. See also Cavallaro, 284 F.3d at 247-48 (no privilege if accountant not employed for purpose of assisting counsel to provide legal advice); United States v. Ackert, 169 F.3d 136, 139-40 (2d Cir. 1999) (no privilege where counsel communicated with accountant to obtain factual information rather than to assist counsel in translating or interpreting information given to counsel by the client). Privileged communications may occur where an agent is necessary to “translate” or “interpret” complicated factual information for the attorney. Kovel, 296 F.2d at 922; Sampedro v. Silver Point Cap., L.P., 818 F. App’x 14, 19 (2d Cir. 2020), as amended (June 5, 2020) (privilege applied to communications involving a third-party consulting firm that “served a specialized purpose akin to an accountant who deciphers financial information so that the lawyer can effectively counsel the client”). See also Jenkins v. Bartlett, 487 F.3d 482, 490-91 (7th Cir. 2007) (presence of police liaison officer during meeting between police officer and his attorney did not destroy privilege where liaison officer interpreted information from attorney to client); Ackert, 169 F.3d at 139-40.

Citing language from Kovel, courts extend the privilege to agents where the agent is “necessary, or at least highly useful for the effective consultation between the client and the lawyer.” Cavallaro, 284 F.3d at 247-48; Heriot v. Byrne, 257 F.R.D. 645, 666-67 (N.D. Ill. 2009). Some courts interpret this language as requiring that the agent be “nearly indispensable or serve some specialized purpose in facilitating the attorney-client communications.” Cavallaro, 284 F.3d at 247-48. See also Ravenell v. Avis Budget Grp., Inc., No. 08-CV-2113 (SLT), 2012 WL 1150450, at *3 (E.D.N.Y. Apr. 5, 2012) (Kovel doctrine did not apply when third-party consultant was hired to make initial classifications that attorneys could have made themselves); Ceglia v. Zuckerberg, No. 10-CV-00569, 2012 WL 3527935, at *2 (W.D.N.Y. Aug. 15, 2012) (Kovel doctrine did not apply when consultant did not act as translator or interpreter of communications between client and attorney); Dahl v. Bain Capital Partners, LLC, 714 F. Supp. 2d 225, 229 (D. Mass. 2010) (communications between client’s investment bankers and counsel not privileged where investment bankers acted in business capacity and were not necessary or indispensable for counsel to provide legal advice); Flo Pac, LLC v. NuTech, LLC, No. WDQ-09-510, 2010 WL 5125447, at *8-10 (D. Md. Dec. 9, 2010) (adopting a more stringent test: the third-party presence must be “nearly indispensable” in facilitating attorney-client communications, not just convenient); RCC, Inc. v. Cecchi, No. 323447, 2010 WL 5180341 (Md. Cir. Ct. Nov. 2010) (surveying cases citing Kovel and noting that Kovel has been interpreted both narrowly (“necessary”) as well as broadly (“add value”)).

See:

Jenkins v. Bartlett, 487 F.3d 482, 490-91 & n.6 (7th Cir. 2007). Presence of a police liaison officer during a meeting between a police officer and his attorney did not destroy privilege because the liaison officer served a role akin to an outside expert who assists the attorney by interpreting information from the attorney to the client. In dicta, however, the court noted that the presence of a union representative in other contexts may destroy privilege.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 220 F.3d 568, 571-72 (7th Cir. 2000). Court remanded case for further proceedings to determine whether accountants were hired by defense counsel to prepare tax returns or to assist counsel in providing legal advice. Material transmitted to an attorney or the attorney’s agent for the purpose of using that information on a tax return is not privileged. On the other hand, information transmitted to an attorney or the attorney’s agent is privileged if it was not intended for subsequent appearance on a tax return and was transmitted for the sole purpose of seeking legal advice. Documents used in both preparing tax returns and litigation are not privileged.

United States v. Adlman, 68 F.3d 1495, 1500 (2d Cir. 1995). Communications between in-house counsel and accountant held not privileged where purpose was to seek tax advice rather than legal advice.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings Under Seal, 947 F.2d 1188, 1191 (4th Cir. 1991). Client took his accountant with him to a meeting with a prospective attorney. The court held that the accountant was a privileged agent since his function was to assist the client in obtaining effective legal services.

United States v. Schwimmer, 892 F.2d 237, 243 (2d Cir. 1989). Communications made to an accountant hired to assist the lawyer in a joint defense are privileged if confidentiality is maintained.

Hernandez v. The Office of the Commissioner of Baseball, 331 F.R.D. 474, 478 (S.D.N.Y. 2019). Communications between employee and union were not privileged where there was no pending disciplinary proceeding, and noting there is no law in the Second Circuit that recognizes a “union relations privilege.”

United States v. Adams, No. 0:17-cr-00064-DWF-KMM, 2018 WL 5311410, at *2 (D. Minn. Oct. 27, 2018). Communications between attorney and accountant were privileged where the communications assisted the attorney to provide legal advice.

Bankdirect Capital Finance, LLC, 326 F.R.D. 176, 183 (N.D. Ill. 2018), quoting Stafford Trading, Inc. v. Lovely, No. 05-C-4868, 2007 WL 611252, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 2007). Communications with financial advisors were privileged where they assisted counsel to provide legal advice. “[I]n today’s [highly complex and integrated] marketplace attorneys need to have confidential communications with investment bankers to render adequate legal advice.”

Antech Diagnostics, Inc. v. Veterinary Oncology and Hematology Center, LLC, No. 3:16CV00481(AWT), 2018 WL 2254543, at *6-7 (D. Conn. May 17, 2018). Communications with financial advisors not privileged where party did not establish that the advisors explained financial concepts to counsel to enable counsel to provide legal advice.

UPMC v. CBIZ, Inc., No. 3:16-cv-204, 2018 WL 1542423, at *6-*9 (W.D. Pa. Mar. 29, 2018). Communications not privileged where plaintiff failed to show how communications with accounting firm furthered counsel’s representation and the provision of legal advice.

Williams v. Big Picture Loans, LLC, 303 F. Supp. 3d 434, 447 (E.D. Va. 2018). Communications with accountant “engaged for sole purpose of performing certain business valuation services” were not privileged.

Baylor v. Mitchell Rubenstein & Assocs., P.C., No. 113CV01995ABJGMH, 2015 WL 4624090, at *3-4 (D.D.C. July 31, 2015), objections overruled, 130 F. Supp. 3d 326 (D.D.C. 2015). Communications between a creditor and its “forwarding” company held privileged, where the forwarding company acted as the creditor’s agent for obtaining legal advice by hiring an attorney to assist in debt collection from opposing party.

MediaTek Inc. v. Freescale Semiconductor, Inc., No. 4:11-cv-05341 YGR (JSC), 2013 WL 5594474, at *4-5 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 10, 2013). Technical consultant’s report and drafts of report, which were never reviewed by counsel, relating to the purchase of patents were found to have been prepared for a business purpose, and were not created primarily to facilitate legal advice or because of the need for legal advice, and therefore were not privileged.

Prowess, Inc. v. Raysearch Labs. AB, No. WDQ-11-1357, 2013 WL 509021, at *2-3 (D. Md. Feb. 11, 2013). Communications between and among inventors and plaintiff were not privileged where plaintiff failed to establish that counsel was involved in the communications or that the communications were conducted for the purpose of providing information to counsel.

Boyer v. Rock Twp. Ambulance Dist., No. 10-2344, 2012 WL 1033007, at *4 (E.D. Mo. Mar 27, 2012). Court refused to recognize union member/union representative privilege and held that union representative's presence during meetings with members' counsel waived the privilege because there was no evidence that representative participated for the purpose of assisting counsel.

Wychocki v. Franciscan Sisters of Chicago, No. 10 C 2954, 2011 WL 244642, at *7 (N.D. Ill. June 15, 2011). Although engaged by counsel, compensation consultant provided business, not legal advice, therefore, the consultant was not an agent of counsel for the purpose of the attorney-client privilege.

Green v. Beer, No. 06 Civ. 4156(KMW)(JCF), 2010 WL 3422723, at *4-5 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 24, 2010). Communications between plaintiffs' counsel and (1) plaintiffs' financial advisors but not (2) plaintiffs' son waived the privilege. Plaintiffs' financial advisors were not "nearly indispensable" and did not serve "some specialized purpose in facilitating the attorney-client communications." By contrast, because plaintiffs did not know how to use email, the only way that they could receive timely communications with their counsel was if plaintiffs' son received the emails on their behalf.

Dahl v. Bain Capital Partners, LLC, 714 F. Supp. 2d 225, 228-29 (D. Mass 2010). Counsel's communication with JP Morgan were not privileged. Although JP Morgan reviewed legal documents, its role was to provide counsel with financial advice, not to interpret the documents.

La. Mun. Police Emps. Ret. Sys. v. Sealed Air Corp., 253 F.R.D. 300, 312-14 (D.N.J. 2008). Communications between defendant and defendant's investment bankers were not protected by attorney-client privilege because defendant failed to show that they were retained to provide or facilitate legal advice, as opposed to business and tax advice.

In re Application Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1782, 249 F.R.D. 96, 100-01 (S.D.N.Y. 2008). Communications between an art broker and a buyer were not protected by the attorney-client privilege because the art broker was not the exclusive agent of the buyer, as she was acting on the seller's behalf, and because consultation with the broker was "not necessary to facilitate attorney-client communications" between the buyer and its attorneys.

Lawrence E. Jaffe Pension Plan v. Household Int'l, Inc., 244 F.R.D. 412, 420 (N.D. Ill. 2006). Company's retention of accounting firm was necessary and indispensable to counsel's ability to render legal advice given the "complex quantitative analyses and extensive information-gathering that was beyond . . . counsel's resources and abilities, but was uniquely within [accountant's] qualifications."

Stayinfront, Inc. v. Tobin, Civil Action No. 05-4563 (SRC), 2006 WL 3228033, at *3-4 (D.N.J. Nov. 3, 2006). Communications between "lay advisor" who appeared on behalf of client in New Zealand Employment Relations Authority, client and counsel regarding action pending in New Jersey district court were not privileged because advisor did not play a "vital role in facilitating communications," nor was he "necessary to the [pending] action."

Cellco P'ship v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's London, Civil Action No. 05-3158(SRC), 2006 WL 1320067, at *2 (D.N.J. May, 12, 2006). "[W]hen the third party is a professional, such as an accountant, capable of rendering advice independent of the lawyer's advice to the client, the claimant must show that the third party served some specialized purpose facilitating the attorney-client communications and was essentially indispensable in that regard."

Farahmand v. Jamshidi, No. Civ. A.04-542, 2005 WL 331601, at *3 (D.D.C. Feb. 11, 2005). Providing privileged document to plaintiff's son-in-law did not waive privilege because son-in-law added value by translating the document.

Evergreen Trading, L.L.C. v. United States, 80 Fed. Cl. 122, 129-31, 142 (Fed. Cl. 2007). Attorney-client privilege did not attach to communications among plaintiff, plaintiff's counsel, and one of plaintiff's accountants under the Kovel doctrine where the communications predated an agreement naming the accountant as an agent of plaintiff's counsel.

*Lynch v. Hamrick, No. 1051820, 2007 WL 1098574, at 2-4 (Ala. Apr. 13, 2007). Communications between lawyer and client made in front of client's daughter not privileged because daughter was not necessary to help client interpret legal advice, but only necessary to drive the client to the appointment.

*3Com Corp. v. Diamond II Holdings, Inc., C.A. No. 3933 – VCN, 2010 WL 2280734, at 4 (Del. Ch. May 31, 2010). Delaware has a "broad[] rule" protecting attorney-client communications that include investment bankers, particularly for corporate transactions.

b. Accountants as Privileged Agents

Though generally not considered privileged parties, accountants are considered privileged agents if the accountant's role is to facilitate communication between the attorney and the client. This role is analogous to that of an interpreter: When the attorney and client "speak different languages," and the accountant's assistance will help the lawyer to understand the client's situation, the accountant is a privileged agent. See United States v. Kovel, 296 F.2d 918, 921 (2d Cir. 1961). While the court in Kovel stated that communications with an accountant could be privileged "whether [the accountant was] hired by the lawyer or by the client," id. at 922, it may be easier to assert privilege with respect to communications with an accountant hired by the attorney and designated as the attorney's agent rather than one hired by the client. See John K. Villa, The Attorney-Counsel's Agents-Accountants, Investigators, or Experts, CORPORATE COUNSEL GUIDELINES § 1:6 (West 2015).

In order for the accountant to qualify as the attorney's agent, communications with the accountant must be for the purpose of facilitating the attorney's legal advice. See Kovel, 296 F.2d at 922 (recognizing that communications with accountant for the purpose of rendering legal advice may be privileged while accountant's own advice would not be privileged); United States v. Adlman, 68 F.3d 1495, 1500 (2d Cir. 1995) (holding that accounting firm's memorandum regarding the tax consequences of reorganization was not privileged when evidence suggested that the corporation contacted the accounting firm for tax advice rather than in-house counsel contacting the accounting firm for assistance in rendering legal advice); Graff v. Haverhill North Cake Co., No. 1:09-cv-670, 2012 WL 5495514, at *15 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 13, 2012) (communications with accountant were privileged when outside counsel hired accountant for help in rendering legal advice). Where a conversation with an agent is merely helpful to the client's defense, and does not help the attorney to understand the client's communication itself, the third-party's role is not that of a privileged agent. See United States v. Ackert, 169 F.3d 136, 139 (2d Cir. 1999); La. Mun. Police Emps. Ret. Sys. v. Sealed Air Corp., 253 F.R.D. 300, 312-14 (D.N.J. Aug. 12, 2008) (communications with investment banker not protected); In re G-I Holdings, Inc., 218 F.R.D. 428, 436-37 (D.N.J. 2003); United States v. ChevronTexaco Corp., 241 F. Supp. 2d 1065, 1072 (N.D. Cal. 2002) (privilege does not apply where accountant is hired, not as a "translator," but instead to give additional legal advice about complying with the tax code, even when the accountant thereby assists the attorney in advising the client).

When a party hires an accountant to provide accounting advice, and only later hires an attorney to provide legal advice, it is particularly important for the party to show that the accountant later acted as an agent necessary to the lawyer in providing legal advice. See Cavallaro v. United States, 284 F.3d 236, 249 (1st Cir. 2002) (privilege did not apply where accountants were providing accounting services rather than facilitating communication of legal advice between counsel and client); Evergreen Trading, L.L.C. v. United States, 80 Fed. Cl. 122, 129-31, 142 (Fed. Cl. 2007) (communications with accountant predating an agency agreement between accountant and plaintiff’s counsel not privileged); Columbia Data Prods., Inc. v. Autonomy Corp., No. 11-12077-NMG, 2012 WL 6212898, at *15 (D. Mass. Dec. 12, 2012) (rejecting assertion of attorney-client privilege when accounting firm only provided accounting services and not legal advice).

Preparation of tax returns, for example, is an accounting function not meant to facilitate attorney-client communications. Communications with accountants for the purpose of filling out tax forms are not, therefore, privileged. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 220 F.3d 568, 571 (7th Cir. 2000) (documents used both in preparation of tax returns and in litigation are not privileged); see also United States v. Frederick, 182 F.3d 496 (7th Cir. 1999); Evergreen Trading, 80 Fed. Cl. at 129-30 (noting that preparation of tax returns is an accounting service, not a legal service, but stating that communications offering tax advice or discussing tax planning can qualify as “legal” communications protected by the attorney-client privilege); Accountants As Privileged Parties, § I.B.2.b, supra.

Often, companies may wish to disclose otherwise privileged information to their outside auditors as part of the auditing process. Accountants performing such audits are not acting as agents of counsel, and disclosures made in the course of annual audits create serious risks of waiver. See Disclosure To Auditors, § I.G.3.c, infra; see also United States v. Arthur Young & Co., 465 U.S. 805, 816 (1984); United States v. El Paso Co., 682 F.2d 530, 540 (5th Cir. 1982) (disclosure of tax pool analysis and underlying documentation to outside accountants for tax audit purposes waives attorney-client privilege); Medinol, Ltd. v. Bos. Scientific Corp., 214 F.R.D. 113 (S.D.N.Y. 2002); Evergreen Trading, 80 Fed. Cl. at 130 (“[I]t is generally recognized that where a party relies on or discloses the advice of counsel concerning the tax consequences of a transaction, it waives the attorney-client privilege not only as to the disclosed information, but also as to the details underlying that information); DAVID M. GREENWALD, MICHELE L. SLACHETKA & CAROLINE L. MENEAU, TESTIMONIAL PRIVILEGES § 3:5 (West 2023). See also Waiver Of Work Product Protection: Disclosure To Auditors, § III.E.3, infra.

c. Public Relations Consultants

Corporations often use public relations consultants to assist them with crisis management, and litigation defense teams often use public relations consultants to advance the overall goals of their defense strategy. The courts are split on the issue of whether communications between a corporation or defense counsel and public relations consultants will be deemed privileged.

Compare:

Kirkpatrick v. City of Oakland, California, Case No. 20-cv-05843-JSC, 2022 WL 137628, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 14, 2022). Privilege applied where public relations consultant assisted counsel in the conduct of litigation. The communications established “that while some of the communications were for a public relations purpose, that public relations purpose was part of a litigation strategy [T]he litigation purpose so permeates any [PR] purpose that the two purposes cannot be discretely separated from the factual nexus as a whole.”

Sandoz Inc. v. Lannett Company, Inc., 570 F.Supp.3d 258, 265-266 (E.D. Pa. 2021). Although public relations consultant was not indispensable, communications to counsel seeking legal advice were privileged.

NECA-IBEW Pension Trust Fund v. Precision Castparts Corp., Case No. 3:16-cv-01756-YY, 2019 WL 4750251, at 6 (D. Or. Sept. 27, 2019). Email from in-house counsel to public relations firm was privileged where firm was the functional equivalent of an employee and, in the emails, counsel provided legal advice to guide the firm’s work regarding draft proxy statement discussing seven pending lawsuits.

Schaeffer v. Gregory Village Partners, 78 F.Supp.3d 1198, 1203-1205 (N.D. Cal. 2015). Public relations consultant was within the scope of privilege where she acted as the “public face” of the company and provided information to defendant’s legal staff that was useful and necessary to evaluate the company’s legal strategy.

In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Mar. 24, 2003, 265 F. Supp. 2d 321, 326-32 (S.D.N.Y. 2003). Communications between a criminal target of a grand jury proceeding, his counsel, and a public relations firm held protected by the attorney-client privilege. The court found that one cannot effectively counsel a client, seek to avoid or narrow charges brought against a client, or zealously seek acquittal or vindication without the assistance of a public relations consultant. Therefore, communications between the client, counsel and the public relations firm are privileged if the communications were directed at giving or obtaining legal advice.

In re Copper Mkt. Antitrust Litig., 200 F.R.D. 213, 219 (S.D.N.Y. 2001). Disclosure of confidential information to third-party PR firm did not waive privilege because PR firm was effectively operating as part of client’s staff. Firm regularly consulted with client’s counsel regarding public statements on client’s behalf.

Resolute Forest Products, Inc. v. Greenpeace International, Case No. 17-cv-02824-JST (KAW), 2022 WL 885368, at *3-4 (N.D. Cal. March 25, 2022). Communications were not privileged where consultant was not “essential” to assist counsel. However, the work product doctrine did protect the consultant’s analysis of litigation strategy.

Rapp v. Fowler, 20-cv-9586 (LAK), 2021 WL 4804096, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 13, 2021) (applying New York law). Privilege did not apply where communications with public relations/media consultants were primarily for reputational protection and not for a legal purpose.

Breuder v. Board of Trustees of Community College District No. 502, No. 15 CV 0323, 2021 WL 4283464, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 21, 2021). Disclosure of privileged communications to third party public relations and media consultants waived privilege. General public relations work provided to counsel and the Board, even when it was related to ongoing litigation, fell outside the narrow scope of the attorney-client privilege.

United States ex rel. Wollman v. Massachusetts General Hospital, Inc., 475 F.Supp.3d 45, 66 (D. Mass. 2020), quoting Dahl v. Bain Capital Partners, LLC, 714 F.Supp.3d 225, 227-278 (D. Mass. 2010). Disclosure of privileged report to public relations consultant waived privilege. “The fact that an attorney’s ability to represent a client is merely improved by the assistance of the third party is not enough to avoid the waiver of privilege.”

In re Signet Jewelers Ltd. Securities Litigation, 332 F.R.D. 131, 136 (S.D.N.Y. 2019). Communications between in-house counsel and public relations firm were not privileged where the firm's aim was to burnish defendant's image, not to "perform a specific litigation task that the attorneys needed to accomplish in order to advance their litigation goals."

Universal Standard Inc. v. Target Corp., 331 F.R.D. 80, 88 (S.D.N.Y. 2019). Emails with public relations firm were not privileged because the firm was not "essential" to improve counsel's understanding of plaintiff's request for legal advice.

Anderson v. Seaworld Parks and Entertainment, Inc., 329 F.R.D. 628 (N.D. Cal. 2019). Communications with public relations consultant not privileged where consultant did not participate in legal strategy, but instead predicted public reaction to legal activities and determined how best to present such activities to the public.

Bloomington Jewish Educ. Ctr. v. Vill. of Bloomington, N.Y., 171 F. Supp. 3d 136, 147 (S.D.N.Y. 2016). Attorney-client privilege was waived as to communications shared with public relations firm where the client did not show that counsel needed public relations firm for any purpose other than communicating to the public at large.

Waters v. Drake, No. 2:14-CV-1704, 2015 WL 8281858, at *2-3 (S.D. Ohio Dec. 8, 2015). Communications between the client, counsel, and public relations firms held not privileged where the public relations firms were not a part of counsel's effort to provide legal advice.

Pemberton v. Repub. Servs., Inc., 308 F.R.D. 195, 201 (E.D. Mo. 2015). Where public relations consultant was hired by defendants during course of litigation, communications with the consultant were outside the attorney-client privilege, but communications and materials prepared by the consultant were protected by the work product doctrine.

Fine v. ESPN, Inc., No. 5:12-CV-0836 LEK/DEP, 2015 WL 3447690, at *11 (N.D.N.Y. May 28, 2015). Applying New York law, communications between the client, counsel, and public relations professional held not privileged where the public relations professional provided ordinary public relations advice, as opposed to facilitating legal advice.

Church & Dwight Co., Inc. v. SPD Swiss Precision Diagnostics, GmbH, No. 14-cv-585, 2014 WL 7238354, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 19, 2014). Court refused to apply functional equivalent doctrine to marketing firm hired to help launch a company product. Court found company was "no different than most companies who hire external advertising agencies," and stated that applying functional equivalent doctrine here would "swallow the privilege rule and would extend the attorney-client privilege to communications with any third party who was hired to assist the client with something the client could not do on its own."

McNamee v. Clemens, No. 09 CV 1647(SJ), 2013 WL 6572899, at *5-7 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 18, 2013). Disclosure of documents to public relations firm waived privilege because the public relations firm only provided standard public relations services that were not necessary for legal advice.

Egiazaryan v. Zalmayev, 290 F.R.D. 421, 431-33 (S.D.N.Y. 2013). Under New York law, communications between former Russian politician and his public relations firm were not protected by the attorney-client privilege because the public relations firm's involvement was not necessary to facilitate communications between the client and his counsel, and coordination of media campaign was not legal advice.

Baldus v. Brennan, No. 11-CV-562 JPS-DPW-RMD, 2011 WL 6385645, at *1-3 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 20, 2011). Hiring a government relations specialist through the client's law firm did not bring the consultant within the attorney-client privilege.

In re N.Y. Renu with Moistureloc Prod. Liab. Litig., No. MDL 1785, CA 2:06-MN-77777-DCN, 2008 WL 2338552, at *7 (D.S.C. May 8, 2008). Under the Kovel doctrine, communications between client and public relations consultants were not protected by attorney-client privilege because the consultants provided public relations advice, not legal advice, and thus were not “necessary to the representation.”

LG Elecs. U.S.A. v. Whirlpool Corp., 661 F. Supp.2d 958, 961-65 (N.D. Ill. 2009). Court declined to apply privilege to communications between company and its third-party advertising firm, rejecting company’s argument that employees of the advertising firm were the “functional equivalent” of company employees.

Haugh v. Schroder Inv. Mgmt., N.A., Inc., No. 02 Civ. 7955 DLC, 2003 WL 21998674, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 25, 2003). In distinguishing In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated March 24, 2003, above, the court held that communications between a public relations consultant and plaintiff’s counsel, who had engaged the consultant to work on the case, were not protected by the attorney-client privilege but were protected by the work product doctrine.

Calvin Klein Trademark Trust v. Wachner, 198 F.R.D. 53, 54 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). Communications between client, counsel, and public relations consultant not privileged.

In re: Pacific Fertility Center Litigation, Case. No. 18-cv-01586-JSC, 2020 WL 1934981, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 22, 2020) (applying California law). Company’s communications with public relations consultant were not privileged because they sought advice on how to respond to news articles and manage media inquiries.

Burke v. Lakin Law Firm, PC, No. 07-CV-0076, 2008 WL 117838 (S.D. Ill. Jan. 7, 2008). Communications with public relations firm hired at direction of counsel to minimize the effects of negative publicity stemming from litigation not protected by work product doctrine.

d. Cyber Breach Consultants

In response to cyber attacks, companies often engage outside counsel, who in turn hire third-party forensic computer consultants (“cyber consultants”). A few courts have found that cyber consultants’ work was protected by the attorney-client privilege and/or the work product doctrine where the primary purpose of the work was to assist counsel with providing legal counsel.

In re Target Corporation Consumer Data Security Breach Litigation, MDL No. 14-2522 (PAM/JJK), 2015 WL 6777384 (D. Minn. Oct. 23, 2015). Where company hired two cyber consultants, one to work with the incident response team, and one to work directly with counsel, the second consultant’s work was protected by both the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine.

In Experian Data Breach Litigation, SACV 15-01592, 2017 WL 4325583 (C.D. Cal. May 18, 2017). Where a cyber consultant was engaged at the time litigation was filed, the consultant provided its report directly to counsel, counsel demonstrated the report was used to develop legal strategy, and the full report was not disclosed to the incident response team, the report was protected by the work product doctrine.

Several courts have overruled assertions of privilege on the grounds that the primary purpose of the cyber consultants’ work was not to assist counsel to provide legal advice.

OTR Transportation, Inc. v. Data Interfuse, LLC, Case No. 21 CV 3415, 2022 WL 296056 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 1, 2022). Despite being engaged by counsel, the court found that a cyber consultant's investigation of a data breach and work to repair the system was for a business purpose, and therefore was not privileged or protected.

In re: Rutter's Data Security Breach Litigation, CIVIL ACTION NO. 1:20-CV-382, 2021 WL 3733137 (M.D. Pa. July 22, 2021). Where cyber consultant worked with the company's IT personnel to identify and remediate vulnerabilities, and provided its report directly to business personnel, the primary purpose was not legal and, therefore, the report was not privileged or protected.

Wengui v. Clark Hill, PLC, 338 F.R.D. 7 (D.D.C. 2021). Where cyber consultant's report was shared with law firm's leadership and IT team, and with the FBI, the primary purpose was not to assist counsel to provide legal advice.

In re: Capital One Data Security Breach Litigation, MDL No. 1:19md2915 (AJT/JFA), 2020 WL 2731238 (E.D. Va. May 26, 2020). Where cyber consultant's report was provided to counsel, and then was broadly disclosed to approximately 50 business personnel, four regulators, and an accounting firm, the primary purpose was not to assist counsel to provide legal advice.

In re: Dominion Dental Services U.S.A., Inc. Data Breach Litigation, 429 F.Supp.3d 190 (E.D. Va. 2019). Where cyber consultant had a prior business engagement with the company to provide incident reports, and the scope of work for counsel was almost identical, the work was not privileged or protected.

In re: Premera Blue Cross Customer Data Security Breach Litigation, 296 F.Supp.3d 1230 (D. Or. 2017). Where cyber consultant had an existing business engagement with the company, and supervision was transferred to counsel, but the scope of work was unchanged, the work was not primarily for a legal purpose and was not privileged.

C. COMMUNICATIONS MUST BE INTENDED TO BE CONFIDENTIAL

1. Confidentiality in General

To remain privileged, a communication must be made in confidence and kept confidential. The test is (1) whether the communicator, at the time the communication was made, intended for the information to remain secret from non-privileged persons, and (2) whether the parties involved maintained the secrecy of the communication. See Bogle v. McClure, 332 F.3d 1347, 1358 (11th Cir. 2003); Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 90 (3d Cir. 1992) (privilege protects verbal and written communications conveyed in confidence for purpose of legal advice); In re Sealed Case, 877 F.2d 976, 980 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (party must not be careless with confidentiality or the privilege will be waived); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 727 F.2d 1352, 1356 (4th Cir. 1984) (party must intend to keep communication secret or privilege is waived). The client must not only have a subjective expectation of confidentiality, but that expectation must also be objectively reasonable. In re Asia Global Crossing, Ltd., 322 B.R. 247, 257 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005); Scott v. Beth Israel Med. Ctr. Inc., 847 N.Y.S.2d 436, 440-41 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2007) (hospital's "no personal use" policy, hospital's policy of monitoring computer use, and physician's knowledge of these policies lessened any expectation of confidentiality concerning emails between physician and attorney); Banks v. Mario Indus. of Va., Inc., 650 S.E.2d 687, 695-96 (Va. 2007) (manager's pre-resignation memo to his attorney not protected by privilege when written on his work computer because he had no reasonable expectation of privacy). But see Stengart v. Loving Care Agency, Inc., 990 A.2d 650, 663-64 (N.J. 2010) (holding that emails sent by employee to her attorney on a company computer using a personal, password-protected, web-based email account were privileged where the company policy did not warn employees that emails sent from personal accounts were not private; court also stated that a company policy that provided unambiguous notice that the employer could retrieve and read an employee's attorney-client communications, if accessed on a personal, password-protected email account using the company's computer system, would not be enforceable).

Confidentiality is not destroyed because a non-privileged person knows a communication was made or independently knows the contents of the communication. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Dated Sept. 15, 1983, 731 F.2d 1032, 1037 (2d Cir. 1984) (disclosure of information contained in privileged communication is treated differently than disclosure of the communications themselves and may not waive the privilege); NCK Org., Ltd. v. Bregman, 542 F.2d 128, 133 (2d Cir. 1976) (noting, in dictum, that the privilege is not destroyed because the information in the privileged communication is known by an adversary). In fact, the contents of the communications need not themselves be secrets. In re Ampicillin Antitrust Litig., 81 F.R.D. 377, 388-90 (D.D.C. 1978). Similarly, the protection of the privilege is not lost even if the receiving person knew the information before the communication was made.

The key is whether the communicating person reasonably intended only the receiving attorney or privileged agent to learn of the communication's contents.

See:

United States v. Ruehle, 583 F.3d 600, 609 (9th Cir. 2009). CFO's communications with corporate counsel not "made in confidence" where purpose was to disclose information to company's outside auditors.

Reiserer v. United States, 479 F.3d 1160, 1165 (9th Cir. 2007). IRS issued subpoena to third-party bank in order to obtain checks signed by clients of defendant tax attorney. Court held that checks were not confidential, even if they reveal clients' identities, because the clients know they have "set the check[s] afloat on a sea of strangers."

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 204 F.3d 516, 522 (4th Cir. 2000). If a client authorizes an attorney to disclose the client's motives or purposes in retaining the attorney, those motives are no longer confidential, and the information is not protected.

United States v. Frederick, 182 F.3d 496, 500-01 (7th Cir. 1999) (internal citations omitted). A document with a dual purpose, such as a document prepared for use in preparing tax returns and for use in litigation, is not privileged. The transmission of information to be used on a tax return "destroys any expectation of confidentiality."

United States v. (Under Seal), 748 F.2d 871, 875 (4th Cir. 1984). If client communicated information to attorney with the understanding it would be revealed to others, no confidentiality exists and the information is not protected by the privilege. In addition, the details underlying the communicated data will also not be privileged.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 727 F.2d 1352, 1356 (4th Cir. 1984). Privilege never attached to material because client gave information to the attorney intending that it be distributed to the public in a prospectus.

DeAngelis v. Corzine, No. 11 Civ. 7866(JCF), 2015 WL 585628, at *3-*4 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 9, 2015). Investigation materials prepared by forensic accounting consultant retained by liquidating trustee were protected by both attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine despite fact that the trustee intended to publish the investigation report prepared by the consultant.

SEC v. Bilzerian, No. Civ. A 89-1854, 2001 WL 1801157, at *1 (D.D.C. June 15, 2001). Proper standard is whether the client reasonably intended that the attorney would keep the communication confidential.

Smith v. Armour Pharm. Co., 838 F. Supp. 1573, 1576 (S.D. Fla. 1993). Applying Florida law, court found that the fact that a memorandum from in-house counsel discussing the inevitability of litigation was widely circulated did not, by itself, provide sufficient grounds to negate the privilege.

But see:

United States v. Lawless, 709 F.2d 485, 487-88 (7th Cir. 1983). Information communicated to an attorney in order to prepare a document to file with a government agency is not privileged even if information is not made part of the filing.

United States v. Naegele, 468 F. Supp. 2d 165, 170 (D.D.C. 2007), appeal dismissed, 537 F. Supp. 2d 36 (D.D.C. 2008). Communications from client for the purpose of disclosure in bankruptcy filing are not privileged because no confidentiality exists in public filings. Additionally, even drafts of bankruptcy filings are not protected because the information is intended to be disclosed.

United States v. KPMG, LLP, 237 F. Supp. 2d 35, 39 (D.D.C. 2002). Privilege does not protect communications between a tax practitioner and a client conveyed for the preparation of a tax return.

Drafts of documents may be privileged even where the intent is to publish the final version of a document.

See:

In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Dated Sept. 15, 1983, 731 F.2d 1032, 1036 n.3 (2d Cir. 1984). Privilege will extend to draft memoranda containing confidential communications even though, when put into a final version, the information may be sent to third parties.

Smith v. Unilife Corp., Civil Action No. 13-501, 2015 WL 667432, at *3 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 13, 2015). Draft SEC Form 10-K's were privileged, because a review of the documents would call for disclosure of communications with corporate counsel. "Form 10-K requires extremely detailed financial, legal and structural information" and the "determination of what information should be disclosed for compliance is not merely a business operation, but a legal concern."

In re New York Renu with Moistureloc Prod. Liab. Litig., No. CA2 2:06-MN-77777-DCN, 2008 WL 2338552, at *2-6 (D.S.C. May 8, 2008). Attorney-client privilege applies to information contained in drafts of documents to the extent that the information is not in the final document or otherwise disclosed to third persons. Defendant was allowed to redact portions of the draft of a PowerPoint presentation that did not appear in the final version submitted to the FDA.

Roth v. Aon Corp., 254 F.R.D. 538, 541 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 8, 2009). Draft portion of Form 10K sent to in-house counsel for legal advice was privileged even though intention was to file final Form 10K with SEC.

Kobluk v. Univ. of Minn., 574 N.W.2d 436, 444 (Minn. 1998). Draft of letter was protected because the draft was sent to attorney for the purpose of obtaining legal advice and the surrounding circumstances indicated that the draft was intended to be confidential.

Grupo Sistemas Integrales de Telecomucacion S.A. de C.V. v. AT&T Commun. Inc., 1995 WL 102679, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). Even where the final document was public, an attorney's drafts are privileged when they are created as part of confidential legal communications.

Typically, disclosure in the presence of non-privileged persons destroys confidentiality and prevents the privilege from attaching. See In re Application of Chevron Corp., 650 F.3d 276, 288-90 (3d Cir. 2011) (presence of documentary film crew rendered conversation not privileged); United States v. Evans, 113 F.3d 1457, 1462-63 (7th Cir. 1997) (conversation between client and lawyer in front of client's friend present for emotional support not privileged); Atwood v. Burlington Indus. Equity, Inc., 908 F. Supp. 319, 323 (M.D.N.C. 1995) (communications between attorney and client in the presence of a union representative held not privileged); KENNETH S. BROUN, ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 91 (7th ed. 2016).

2. Confidentiality Within Organizations

For organizational clients, the courts have permitted “need-to-know” agents to have access to privileged documents without destroying confidentiality and relinquishing the privilege. See FTC v. GlaxoSmithKline, 294 F.3d 141, 147 (D.C. Cir. 2002); Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 863 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Diversified Indus., Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596, 602 (8th Cir. 1977); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 73 cmt. g (2000). The group of “need-to-know” agents is comprised of employees of the organization who reasonably need to know of the communication in order to act in the interest of the corporation. Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 863 (circulating confidential information beyond employees “who are authorized to speak and act for the organization in relation to the subject matter of the communication” defeats application of privilege); Scott v. Chipotle Mexican Grill, Inc., 94 F. Supp. 3d 585, 599 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) (disclosure to employees who were able to act upon or implement the information or advice they received did not waive privilege); Moffatt v. Wazana Bros. Int'l, Civ. 14-1881, 2014 WL 5410201, at *3 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 24, 2014) (privilege not waived when CFO relayed counsel's advice to CEO and President); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5484 (1st ed. West 2019). In practice, “need-to-know” agents will consist primarily of persons with responsibility for accepting or rejecting the lawyer's advice or acting on the recommendations of the lawyer. All those employees who would be held personally liable either financially or criminally, or who would benefit from the information (such as partners), will also generally be considered “need-to-know” agents. RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 73 cmt. g (2000).

Under the “need-to-know” doctrine, sharing documents with lower-echelon employees who need to know the information does not show an indifference to confidentiality and does not waive the protection of the privilege. See Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 391-95 (1981); 3 JACK W. WEINSTEIN ET AL., WEINSTEIN'S FEDERAL EVIDENCE § 503.22[4] (Lexis 2014).

United States ex rel. Lord v. NAPA Management Services Corporation, CIVIL ACTION NO. 3:13-2940, 2019 WL 5829535, at *13 (M.D. Pa. Nov. 7, 2019). A document need not be authored or addressed to an attorney in order to be properly withheld on attorney-client privilege grounds. Privileged documents may be transmitted between non-attorneys so that a corporation may be properly informed of legal advice and act appropriately.

Helget v. City of Hays, No. 13-2228-KHV-KGG, 2014 WL 1308890, at *2-3 (D. Kan. Mar. 28, 2014). Court denied plaintiff's motion to compel emails among defendant's employees, even where a lawyer was neither the author nor the recipient of the emails. The court explained that communications among non-lawyer employees may be privileged so long as they are made in confidence for the purpose of obtaining legal advice. It was undisputed here that the communications were the direct result of requests by counsel for the City and were for the purpose of obtaining legal advice with respect to responding to plaintiff's discovery requests.

Sterling Merch., Inc. v. Nestle, S.A., No. 06-1015(SEC), 2008 WL 3200702, at *1-2 (D.P.R. Aug. 5, 2008). Communication of counsel's advice from one employee to another was privileged and protected from disclosure.

Adams v. United States, No. 03-0049-E-BLW, 2008 WL 2704553, at *2-5 (D. Idaho July 3, 2008). Deliberations for the purpose of obtaining legal advice among a core group were privileged when the core group consisted of a scientist, registration expert, crop protection expert, public affairs manager, and four attorneys.

In re N.Y. Renu with Moistureloc Prod. Liab. Litig., No. CA 2:06-MN-77777-DCN, 2008 WL 2338552, at *1-2 (D.S.C. May 8, 2008). Recipients of an email to corporate counsel and high-level personnel about a possible presentation to the FDA were those who had a "need to know" counsel's advice, and the document remained privileged.

Muro v. Target Corp., 243 F.R.D. 301, 305-06 (N.D. Ill. 2007), rev'd in part on other grounds, 250 F.R.D. 350 (N.D. Ill. 2007). Attorney-client privilege can be waived "if the communication is shared with corporate employees who are not 'directly concerned' with or did not have 'primary responsibility' for the subject matter of the communication."

Williams v. Sprint/United Mgmt. Co., 238 F.R.D. 633, 641 (D. Kan. 2006), review denied by No. CIV 032200JWL, 2007 WL 2694029 (D. Kan. Sept. 11, 2007), and 2008 WL 4078778 (D. Kan. July 25, 2008). Although Tenth Circuit has not adopted the "need to know" test, ample evidence exists that such a test applies. Documents created at the order of counsel were confidential when only Human Resource employees had access to them and documents were marked "for internal use only."

Wrench LLC v. Taco Bell Corp., 212 F.R.D. 514, 517-18 (W.D. Mich. 2002). Disclosure of legal advice to lower-level employee did not waive privilege where employee was responsible for specific subject matter of the communication.

Verschoth v. Time Warner, Inc., No. 00 Civ. 1339AGSJCF, 2001 WL 286763, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 22, 2001), adhered to as amended by 2001 WL 546630 (S.D.N.Y. May 22, 2001). While corporate executives may share legal advice with lower-level corporate employees without waiving the privilege, the privilege extends only to those employees with a "need to know," including those employees with general policymaking authority and those with specific authority for the subject matter of the legal advice.

Gallo v. Eaton Corp., 122 F. Supp. 2d 293, 308 (D. Conn. 2000). For purposes of the employee's defamation claim under Connecticut law, former employer had a qualified privilege when it drafted and circulated employee's disciplinary letter only among those in the company who had a business need to know of reasons for employee's discipline.

In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Dec. 18, 1981, 561 F. Supp. 1247, 1258-59 (E.D.N.Y. 1982). Disclosure allowed to low-level employee who had direct responsibility over the subject matter.

3. Email and Confidentiality

Email presents two challenges to the confidentiality of communications and the attorney-client privilege. First, like other forms of communication, email is susceptible to breaches of security in transmission. Second, the ease with which email is copied, transmitted to large numbers of people, and sometimes incorrectly transmitted due to operator error, presents challenges unique to the confidentiality of email communications. See, e.g., Multiquip, Inc. v. Water Mgmt. Sys. LLC, No. CV 08-403-S-EJL-REB, 2009 WL 4261214, at *4-5 (D. Idaho Nov. 23, 2009) (email program's auto-fill feature inadvertently caused privileged documents to be sent to opposing counsel); Muro v. Target Corp., 243 F.R.D. 301, 307-10 (N.D. Ill. 2007) (noting that emails sent to at least ten employees or to unidentified distribution lists "does not suggest confidentiality, and no privilege can be maintained for communications that were shared with a group of unidentified persons"), rev'd in part on other grounds, 250 F.R.D. 350 (N.D. Ill. 2007); United States v. Chevron Texaco Corp., 241 F. Supp. 2d 1065, 1075 n.6 (N.D. Cal. 2002) ("If an e-mail with otherwise privileged attachments is sent to a third party, Chevron loses the privilege with respect to that e-mail and all of the attached e-mails.") (emphasis in original).

Perhaps in response to these concerns, some early state bar decisions took the position that the use of email violated the attorney's duty of confidentiality. Later opinions have generally expressed more comfort with the use of email as the technology has become better understood. See ABA Comm. on Ethics & Prof'l Responsibility, Formal Op. 99-413, n.40 (1999) (noting such opinions). Compare Iowa Bar Ass'n Op. 1997-1 (1997) (sensitive material should not be transmitted over non-secure networks); N.C. State Bar Op. 215 (1995) (cautioning against the use of email); Pa. Bar Ass'n Comm. on Legal Ethics & Prof'l Responsibility, Informal Op. 97-130 (1997) (rejecting the use of unencrypted email absent client's consent), with D.C. Bar Op. 281 (1998) (finding the use of unencrypted email to be consistent with confidentiality); Ill. State Bar Ass'n Advisory Op. on Prof'l Conduct No. 96-10 (1997) (absent "extraordinary" sensitivity, use of email is consistent with the duty of confidentiality); N.Y. State Bar Ass'n Comm. on Prof'l Ethics Op. 709 (1998) (same); D.C. Bar Op. 281 (1998).

Though more easily susceptible to interception, email is generally considered to be no less secure than other forms of communication, such as facsimile, telephone, and mail transmission, which are already used with an expectation of privacy. See ABA Comm. on Ethics & Prof'l Responsibility, Formal Op. 99-413 (1999); see also United States v. Maxwell, 45 M.J. 406, 417-19 (C.A.A.F. 1996) ("The fact that an unauthorized 'hacker' might intercept an email message does not diminish the legitimate expectation of privacy in any way."). In reviewing various communications technologies, the ABA ethics committee compared email favorably to facsimile technology, noting the security each offers in transmission, but the ease with which documents could be misdirected due to operator error. The ABA observed that "[a]uthority specifically stating that the use of fax machines is consistent with the duty of confidentiality is absent, perhaps because . . . courts assume the conclusion to be self-evident." ABA Comm. on Ethics & Prof'l Responsibility, Formal Op. 99-413 (1999). The same is likely true of email, to which courts have extended privileged status without differentiation from other "documents." See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Proceeding, 43 F.3d 966, 968 (5th Cir. 1994) (considering email messages along with other documents); McCook Metals L.L.C. v. Alcoa, Inc., 192 F.R.D. 242, 255 (N.D. Ill. 2000) (holding email correspondence between attorneys to be protected under the attorney-client privilege).

Some states have enacted statutes that reject the notion that use of email could automatically constitute a waiver. CAL. EVID. CODE § 917(b) (West 2017) (“A communication between persons in a relationship listed in subdivision (a) [including lawyer-client] does not lose its privileged character for the sole reason that it is communicated by electronic means or because persons involved in the delivery, facilitation, or storage of electronic communication may have access to the content of the communication.”); N.Y.C.P.L.R. LAW § 4548 (McKinney 2014) (“No communication privileged under this article shall lose its privileged character for the sole reason that it is communicated by electronic means or because persons necessary for the delivery or facilitation of such electronic communication may have access to the content of the communication.”).

In the Fourth Amendment context, courts have held that the transmission of email occurs with a reasonable expectation of privacy, but once received by the intended party, such an expectation disappears. Thus, an email may be sent without an expectation of interception, but no such expectation as to the recipient’s actions is appropriate. See United States v. Heckenkamp, 482 F.3d 1142, 1146-47 (9th Cir. 2007) (although a person’s reasonable expectation of privacy in electronic communication may diminish after a sender’s information reaches a recipient, the mere connection to a network that has no monitoring policy does not extinguish the reasonable expectation of privacy); United States v. Charbonneau, 979 F. Supp. 1177, 1184-85 (S.D. Ohio 1997); United States v. Maxwell, 45 M.J. 406, 417-19 (C.A.A.F. 1996).

The prudent attorney should therefore feel comfortable in taking advantage of the relative security and ease-of-use of email technology but bear in mind the risks associated both with accidental transmission to an unintended party and the ease with which the intended party may forward the email to unprivileged persons. This concern may be particularly acute for in-house counsel, who may regularly send email messages to large user or distribution groups that may include non-privileged employees.

Many attorneys have adopted the practice of placing a boiler-plate confidentiality notice on email transmissions. Such notices may prove valuable in the case of documents erroneously transmitted to another attorney. Several courts have held that an attorney’s inspection of obviously privileged documents may lead to varying degrees of exclusion at trial and potentially to sanctions as well. See Am. Express v. Accu-Weather, Inc., No. 92-Civ-705, 1996 WL 346388, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 25, 1996) (sanctioning attorney who opened a package and reviewed its contents despite having received a call beforehand indicating that the package contained privileged information and should be returned); Resolution Trust Corp. v. First Am. Bank, 868 F. Supp. 217, 221 (W.D. Mich. 1994) (lawyer receiving materials on their face subject to attorney-client privilege has a duty to return them without examining further; ordering destruction of document and all copies, but noting that Michigan state rules would allow their introduction for impeachment). Thus, to the extent that such boilerplate does put a receiving attorney on notice that he is in possession of privileged material, he may have an ethical obligation to cease review of the material and return it to the transmitting party. Moreover, a court may consider the absence of such language as evidence that reasonable efforts to maintain confidentiality were not taken. See Muro v. Target Corp., 243 F.R.D. 301, 308-09 (N.D. Ill. 2007), rev'd in part on other grounds, 250 F.R.D. 350 (N.D. Ill. 2007); see also Clarke v. J.P. Morgan Chase & Co., No. 08 Civ. 02400, 2009 WL 970940, at *1-2, *5-6 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 10, 2009) (inadvertently produced email memorandum discussing reclassification of certain positions from “exempt” to “nonexempt” for overtime purposes, prepared in part by defendant’s deputy general counsel, could not be clawed back because it did not, on its face, state that it was prepared by counsel, that it contained legal advice, or that recipients should treat the document as confidential, so recipient had no way of knowing that the memorandum reflected legal advice). Nevertheless, the presence of boilerplate language is not dispositive on the issue of whether the attorney-client privilege protects the email. Chrysler Corp. v. Sheidan, No. 227511, 2001 WL 773099, at *4 n.3 (Mich. Ct. App. July 10, 2001) (distinguishing Resolution Trust).

If a party does not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the use of email, transmission of otherwise-protected material may result in a waiver. This problem may arise, for example, if an employee uses a corporate email system to communicate with his personal attorney. In In re Asia Global Crossing, Ltd., the court adopted a four-part test to determine if an employee had a legitimate expectation of privacy in using his employer’s email system, and consequently whether the communications were at issue:

[A] court should consider four factors: (1) does the corporation maintain a policy banning personal or other objectionable use, (2) does the company monitor the use of the employee’s computer or email, (3) do third parties have a right of access to the computer or emails and (4) did the corporation notify the employee, or was the employee aware, of the use and monitoring policies?

322 B.R. 247, 257 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005) (footnote omitted). The court was unable to determine whether the employees had such an expectation on the record presented. Id. at 263.

Kreuze v. VCA Animal Hospitals, Inc., No. PJM-17-1169, 2018 WL 1898248, at *2 (D. Md. Apr. 20, 2018). Employee emails with personal attorney on company’s email system remained privileged where employer did not ban personal email use and did not actively monitor email use.

United States v. Nagle, No. 1:09-CR-384, 2010 WL 3896200, at *3-5 (M.D. Pa. Sept. 30, 2010). Court applied In re Asia Global Crossing’s four-factor test and held that a document prepared on the employee’s work computer was confidential, even though the document was not password protected and others knew the employee’s log-in password. First, the company did not prohibit employees from using their work computer for personal reasons. It monitored Internet and email usage, but not the local hard drive. Second, others had not logged onto the computer without the employee’s consent.

DeGeer v. Gillis, No. 09 C 6974, 2010 WL 3732132, at *9 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 17, 2010). An employee’s personal emails to his lawyer remained privileged even though sent on company-issued computers. Earlier in the litigation, the company sought not to produce such communications and, thus, demonstrated that it believed that its employee had not waived the attorney-client privilege.

Convertino v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 674 F. Supp. 2d 97, 109-10 (D.D.C. 2009). Court held that emails sent by Assistant United States Attorney to his personal counsel on his work computer remained privileged, noting that the DOJ maintains a policy that does not ban personal use of company computers.

Although the DOJ has access to personal emails sent through AUSAs' accounts, the AUSA involved was unaware that the DOJ would be regularly accessing and saving emails from his account, therefore the AUSA's expectation of confidentiality was reasonable.

Mason v. ILS Techs., L.L.C., No. 3:04-CV-139-RJC-DCK, 2008 WL 731557, at *4 (W.D.N.C. Feb. 29, 2008). An employee's email communications with his attorney were privileged despite having been sent on a company computer. Although the employer argued that it had a policy that computers should be used only for business purposes and that the company reserved the right to review employee emails, the court found that the employer had not demonstrated that it had, in fact, effectively conveyed its restricted email policy to the employee, and the employee demonstrated he was unaware of this policy. The court refused to find waiver merely on the basis that the employee "should have known" about the email policy.

May 15, 2006). Plaintiff's use of her employer-owned laptop did not waive attorney-client privilege where the lack of enforcement by defendant-employer of its computer usage policy created a "false sense of security" that "'lull[ed]" employees into believing that the policy would not be enforced."

People v. Jiang, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 184, 203-08 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005). Documents typed on company-owned laptop by criminal defendant's wife for transmission to defendant's counsel were privileged where the documents were password-protected and located in file labeled "Attorney."

Transocean Capital, Inc. v. Fortin, No. 05-0955-BLS2, 2006 WL 3246401, at *5 (Mass. Super. Ct. Oct. 20, 2006). In the absence of any evidence that defendant had ever seen or known about the manual, or any evidence that defendant knew that plaintiff had any policy or practice of monitoring employees' computer use or prohibiting personal use of company email, there was no reason to find that defendant waived attorney-client privilege.

Nat'l Econ. Research Assocs., Inc. v. Evans, No. 04-2618-BLS2, 2006 WL 2440008, at *3-4 (Mass. Super. Ct. Aug. 3, 2006). Attorney-client privilege attached to emails sent by employee to his personal attorney from a private email account while using his work computer because employee did not know that employer monitored personal internet-based email communications, stored them on hard drives, and retained "screen shots" of messages.

Stengart v. Loving Care Agency, Inc., 990 A.2d 650, 660-61 (N.J. 2010). Emails sent by employee to her attorney on a company computer using a personal, password-protected, web-based email account were privileged where the company policy did not warn employees that emails sent from personal accounts were not private. The court also stated that a company policy that provided unambiguous notice that the employer could retrieve and read an employee's attorney-client communications, if accessed on a personal, password-protected email account using the company's computer system, would not be enforceable.

United States v. Finazzo, No. 10-CR-457 (RRM) (RML), 2013 WL 619572, at *7 (E.D.N.Y. Feb. 19, 2013). Email that employee received from counsel in employee's work account was not privileged, despite the fact that employee did not request or expect the email, because employee had previously sent emails to counsel from that account and because employer had a standing policy of monitoring emails.

Aventa Learning, Inc. v. K12, Inc., 830 F. Supp.2d 1083, 1109 (W.D. Wash. 2011). Attorney-client privileged documents lost their privileged status when the employee saved them on the hard drive of his work computer, due to employer's policy that files saved on employer devices were subject to view by the employer.

Alamar Ranch LLC v. Cnty. of Boise, No. CV-09-004, 2009 WL 3669741, at *3-4 (D. Idaho Nov. 2, 2009). Employee's use of company's email account to correspond with her personal attorney waived the privilege where company put its employees on notice that emails were company property, would be monitored, stored, accessed, and disclosed by the company, and should not be assumed to be confidential.

Long v. Marubeni Am. Corp., No. 05 Civ. 639 (GEL)(KNF), 2006 WL 2998671, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 19, 2006). Plaintiffs' voluntary, intentional, and repeated use of work computers, with knowledge of company's electronic communications policy, to exchange protected communications with their attorney constituted waiver of the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine.

Holmes v. Petrovich Dev. Co., 119 Cal. Rptr. 3d 878, 897-88 (Cal. Ct. App. 2011). Where employee was aware of detailed company policy prohibiting personal use of computers, personal emails sent on company computer by employee to her personal attorney were not privileged.

In re Information Mgmt. Servs., Inc., 81 A.3d 278, 285-98 (Del. Ch. 2013). A corporate officer's emails to his personal attorney from his work account were not privileged, based on the corporation's standing policy of monitoring emails, even though the corporation had never actually checked its employees' emails.

Scott v. Beth Israel Med. Ctr., 847 N.Y.S.2d 436, 440-41 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2007). Attorney-client privilege did not apply to emails doctor sent using his employer's email system where the effect of employer's email-use policy was "to have the employer looking over your shoulder each time you send an e-mail."

Feinwachs v. The Minnesota Hospital Association, Case No. 11-cv-0008 (WMW/SER), 2019 WL 4298085, at *7 (D. Minn. Sept. 11, 2019). Although attorney-client privilege had been waived where co-defendant forwarded personal joint attorney's advice to co-defendant's work email address, the communication reflected opinion work product and the court granted a motion in limine to exclude any evidence of or reference to the email.

SEC v. Finazzo, 543 F. Supp. 2d 224, 227-29 (S.D.N.Y. 2008). Court denied former officer's motion to quash SEC subpoena where basis of subpoena was disclosure by company of former officer's purportedly privileged email to his personal attorney sent on his company computer that was discovered during company's internal investigation. The court declined to rule on whether employee's email and attachment was privileged, noting that the SEC sought nonprivileged information for the investigation, not for evidence at trial.

Sims v. Lakeside Sch., No. C06-1412RSM, 2007 WL 2745367, at *1 (W.D. Wash. Sept. 20, 2007). Plaintiff-employee had no reasonable expectation of privacy in emails he sent using the email account provided and maintained by his employer, but emails sent to his attorney using his personal, password-protected, web-based email account were protected by the attorney-client privilege although they were sent using his employer-owned computer and internet access.

Parnes v. Parnes, 915 N.Y.S.2d 345, 348-50 (N.Y. App. Div. 2011). In a divorce proceeding, court held that husband waived privilege with respect to a hard copy of an email with his attorney that he left on a desk in the marital home, but he did not waive privilege with respect to password protected emails that his wife discovered by using his personal password.

D. PRIVILEGE APPLIES ONLY TO COMMUNICATIONS MADE FOR THE PURPOSE OF SECURING LEGAL ADVICE

1. Legal Purpose

The final requirement to establish the privilege is that the protected communication was made for the purpose of securing or providing legal advice. See Federal Trade Commission v. Boehringer Ingelheim Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 892 F.3d 1264, 1267 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (attorney-client privilege covers both attorney’s provision of legal advice to the client and client’s provision of facts to attorney so that the attorney can understand the client’s problems and provide legal advice); Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist. 100, 600 F.3d 612, 618 (7th Cir. 2010) (client must seek “legal advice”); Valero Energy Corp. v. United States, 569 F.3d 626, 630 (7th Cir. 2009) (communications providing business or accounting advice, as opposed to legal advice, are not protected by the attorney-client privilege); In re Six Grand Jury Witnesses, 979 F.2d 939, 943 (2d Cir. 1992) (privilege protects communications made in confidence to lawyer to obtain legal counsel); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 72 cmt. c (2000).

The privilege does not apply to communications where a lawyer is not acting in a legal capacity, for example, where a lawyer acts as a friend, political adviser, business adviser, or business agent.

In re: Lindsey (Grand Jury Testimony), 158 F.3d 1263, 1270 (D.C. Cir. 1998). Advice given by White House counsel to Office of the President “on political, strategic, or policy issues . . . would not be shielded from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege.”

United States v. Tedder, 801 F.2d 1437, 1442-43 (4th Cir. 1986). Where defendant admitted perjury to an attorney in her capacity as a friend rather than as a lawyer, privilege did not apply.

Republican Party of North Carolina v. Martin, 136 F.R.D. 421, 426 (E.D.N.C. 1991). If a communication essentially involves the giving of political advice, then it is not privileged.

Resolution Trust Corporation v. Diamond, 773 F.Supp. 597, 600-601 (S.D.N.Y. 1991). The attorney-client privilege does not normally protect communications between client and lawyer where the lawyer is acting as a regulatory decisionmaker rather than as a legal advisor.

An initial communication between a lawyer and a prospective client seeking legal advice may be privileged even if no engagement results from the communication.

Barton v. U.S. District Court for Central District of California, 410 F.3d 1104, 1111 (9th Cir. 2005). “Prospective clients’ communications with a view to obtaining legal services are plainly covered by the attorney-client privilege under California law, regardless of whether they have retained the lawyer, and regardless of whether they ever retain the lawyer.”

Lucas v. Gold Standard Baking, Inc., No. 13 CV 1524, 2017 WL 1436863, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 4, 2017). Under federal common law, determining whether privilege attaches to an initial consultation hinges on the client’s belief that they are consulting a lawyer in that capacity and their manifested intention to seek professional legal advice. The court held that communications with prospective clients during a free, one-on-one legal clinic after a seminar were privileged.

Hilton-Rorar v. State and Federal Communications Inc., No. 5:09-CV-01004, 2010 WL 1486916, at *7 (N.D. Ohio Apr. 13, 2010), quoting Banner v. City of Flint, 99 Fed. Appx. 29, 36 (6th Cir. 2004). “When a potential client consults with an attorney, the consultation establishes a relationship akin to that of an attorney and existing client[.]”

Vodak v. City of Chicago, No. 03 C 2463, 2004 WL 1381043, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. May 10, 2004). Communications with prospective class members were privileged. The court noted that “the existence of an attorney-client relationship is not dependent upon the payment of fees or upon the execution of a formal contract.”

Grand Jury Proceedings Under Seal v. United States, 947 F.2d 1188, 1190 (4th Cir. 1991). “Statements made while intending to employ a lawyer are privileged even though the lawyer is not employed.”

Calandra v. Sodexho, No. 3:06CV49 (WWE), 2007 WL 1245317, at *2-4 (D. Conn. Apr. 27, 2007). A party’s notes, prepared in an effort to retain an attorney and reviewed by the party in preparation for their deposition, were protected by the attorney-client privilege because they were prepared for the purpose of seeking legal advice and were kept confidential.

See also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 70 CMT. C; § 72(1) (2000).

A communication will not be privileged unless the purpose of the communication is to seek or provide legal advice. Communications relating only to business advice do not fall within the privilege.

See:

United States v. Richey, 632 F.3d 559, 568 (9th Cir. 2011). Communications between attorney and appraiser hired by counsel not privileged where purpose of communications was to prepare a valuation report for submission to the IRS, which was a business purpose, and not for the purpose of providing legal advice.

Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 94 (3d Cir. 1992). Privilege protects confidential communications made to an attorney in a professional capacity.

United States v. Wilson, 798 F.2d 509, 513 (1st Cir. 1986). Lawyer functioned as a negotiator and messenger for a business deal, rather than as a lawyer, and therefore the communications were not privileged.

AU New Haven, LLC v. YKK Corporation, 15-CV-03411 (GHW)(SN), 2016 WL 6820383, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 18, 2016). Parties to an asset purchase agreement (APA) could not withhold the APA from a third-party litigation adversary. The APA was a commercial agreement, did not reflect legal strategy, and was not a communication between client and counsel.

In re Domestic Drywall Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 2437, No. 13-MD-2437, 2014 WL 5090032, at *4 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 9, 2014). Internal corporate antitrust compliance policy, which was widely distributed throughout the organization, and which provided general compliance guidance but no specific legal advice regarding a particular matter was “more akin to a reference or instructional guide,” and was not privileged.

MediaTek Inc. v. Freescale Semiconductor, Inc., No. 4:11-cv-05341, 2013 WL 5594474, at *4-5 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 10, 2013). Technical consultant’s report and drafts of report, which were never reviewed by counsel, relating to the purchase of patents were found to have been prepared for a business purpose.

In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Mar. 9, 2001, 179 F. Supp. 2d 270, 285 (S.D.N.Y. 2001). Attorney-client privilege did not apply to communications among attorneys who were working to obtain presidential pardon. The attorneys were acting as lobbyists rather than as attorneys.

Ga.-Pac. Corp. v. GAF Roofing Mfg. Corp., No. 93 Civ. 5125, 1996 WL 29392, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 25, 1996). The attorney-client privilege did not apply to communications made between an in-house attorney and his corporate client while the attorney was acting as a contract negotiator because the attorney was acting in a business capacity rather than executing a traditional function of an attorney.

In re Air Crash Disaster, 133 F.R.D. 515, 519 (N.D. Ill. 1990). No privilege applies if the role of the lawyer is minor or was intended merely to immunize documents from production.

Greer v. County of San Diego, 634 F.Supp.3d 911, 920 (S.D. Cal. 2022). Merely adding an attorney to a review board does not make its work privileged. “[R]espondent’s claim to privilege appears to be premised on a gimmick: exclude counsel from conducting the internal investigation but retain them in a watered-down capacity to ‘consult’ on the investigation in order to cloak the investigation with privilege. Unfortunately for the respondent, this sort of ‘consultation lite’ does not qualify the Audit Report for the protections of the attorney-client privilege,” quoting United States v. ISS Marine Servs., Inc., 905 F.Supp.2d 121, 129-30 (D.D.C. 2012).

The courts can be particularly skeptical that the primary purpose is legal when a party asserts privilege over communications relating to the preparation of tax returns or use of tax shelters.

In re Grand Jury, 23 F.4th 1088 (9th Cir. 2022), cert. granted 143 S. Ct. 80 (2022), dismissing cert. as improvidently granted, 598 U.S. --, 143 S. Ct. 543 (2023). Circuit court affirmed district court holding that communications with counsel made for the dual purposes of enabling counsel to provide legal advice and to prepare tax returns were primarily for a business purpose and were not privileged. Before the U.S. Supreme Court, Petitioner argued that the Court should adopt the “a primary purpose” test adopted by the D.C. Circuit in In re Kellogg Brown & Root, Inc., 756 F.3d 754, 757-760 (D.C. Cir. 2014) and in F.T.C. v. Boehringer Ingelheim Pharm., 892 F.3d 1262, 1268 (D.C. Cir. 2018).

United States v. Frederick, 182 F.3d 496, 502 (7th Cir. 1999). “[A] dual-purpose document – a document prepared for use in preparing tax returns and for use in litigation – is not privileged; otherwise, people in or contemplating litigation would be able to invoke, in effect, an accountant’s privilege, provided that they used their lawyer to fill out their tax returns.”

United States v. Abrahams, 905 F.2d 1276, 1284 (9th Cir. 1990). Annual questionnaires prepared by attorney attorney/tax preparer’s clients while tax litigation was either pending or anticipated were not privileged absent showing that client submitted the questionnaires to seek legal advice rather than simply for return preparation.

United States v. Bornstein, 977 F.2d 112, 116-17 (4th Cir. 1992). Preparation of tax returns does not ordinarily constitute legal advice within the scope of the privilege. However, accounting services that are ancillary to legal advice may be privileged, and preparation of tax returns can fall within this area. Court remanded case to determine whether the defendant benefited more from the attorney’s services as an attorney or as an accountant-tax preparer.

Bodega Invs., LLC v. United States, No. 08 Civ 4965, 2009 WL 1456642, at *4-5 (S.D.N.Y. May 14, 2009). Communications between client and its tax counsel regarding the establishment of a tax shelter were legal and not business communications, so they were privileged.

United States v. El Paso Co., 682 F.2d 530, 539 (5th Cir. 1982) (internal citations omitted). Stating in dicta that “[t]he line between accounting work and legal work in the giving of tax advice is extremely difficult to draw. We have held that the preparation of tax returns is generally not legal advice within the scope of the privilege. . . . Nevertheless, we would be reluctant to hold that a lawyer’s analysis of the soft spots in a tax return and his judgments on the outcome of litigation on it are not legal advice.”

United States v. Textron Inc., 507 F. Supp. 2d 138, 147 (D.R.I. 2007), vacated on other grounds, 577 F.3d 21 (2009). Tax accrual workpapers for corporation protected by attorney-client privilege despite containing accounting information because they also analyzed uncertain areas of the law and assessed the corporation’s chances of winning ensuing litigation. However, privilege was waived by disclosure to company’s auditors.

2. Cases of Mixed Purpose

Lawyers representing businesses, whether as in-house counsel or outside counsel, often serve dual roles as legal and business advisors. When attorney-client communications mix business and legal concerns, and the legal aspects of the communications cannot be separated, courts face the challenge of determining when privilege will protect the communications.

Courts typically apply the “primary purpose” test to determine whether a communication is sufficiently legal in nature to be protected by the privilege despite a dual business purpose. In its narrowest application, the court determines whether the predominant purpose of a communication is business or legal. Under the broader approach, the court is not required to make a binary choice. A communication may be privileged if a significant purpose of the communication is legal even if there is also a significant business purpose.

The broader approach was first articulated by then Circuit Court Judge Brett Kavanaugh in In re Kellogg Brown & Root, Inc., 756 F.3d 754, 757-60 (D.C. Cir. 2014). In that case, the company conducted an internal investigation in response to allegations of corruption. The trial court held that the investigation was not privileged because the company’s compliance program required the investigation, therefore the predominant purpose was to comply with the company’s internal business policies and procedures. The Circuit court reversed, holding that the investigation could be deemed privileged where there was a significant legal purpose even where there were also significant business purposes. Under this approach, obtaining legal advice need not be the “sole purpose” of the investigation so long as “a primary purpose” was to obtain or provide legal advice. Then Circuit Court Judge Kavanaugh applied this broader approach in F.T.C. v. Boehringer Ingelheim Pharm., 892 F.3d 1264, 1268 (D.C. Cir. 2018), and held that employee communications providing information at the request of the general counsel, and communications between the general counsel and company executives regarding possible settlement of litigation, were privileged despite dual business and legal purposes.

The United States Supreme Court had an opportunity to address whether the broader or narrower approach should be applied to dual purpose communications. In a case involving communications between client and tax counsel, which were for the mixed purposes of providing legal advice and preparing tax returns, the district court applied the narrower “primary purpose” test. The court held that the communications were not privileged, because the primary purpose was the business of preparing tax returns, and the legal purpose was less significant than the business purpose. The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court application of the “primary purpose” test and the holding that the dual communications were not privileged. In re Grand Jury, 23 F.4th 1088 (9th Cir. 2022), cert. granted 143 S. Ct. 80 (2022), dismissing cert. as improvidently granted 598 U.S. --, 143 S. Ct. 543 (2023). The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari, but following oral argument, the Court dismissed the petition on the grounds that certiorari was improvidently granted.

Compare: Cases Applying “A” Primary Purpose Test:

Edwards v. Scripps Media, Inc., Case No. 18-10735, 2019 WL 2448654, at *1 (E.D. Mich. June 10, 2019). Court applied “a” primary purpose test.

Pitkin v. Corizon Health, Inc., No. 3:16-cv-02235-AA, 2017 WL 6496565, at *4 (D. Or. Dec. 18, 2017). Attorney-client privilege attached to results of an investigation where “at least one primary purpose of the investigation was to ‘assess the situation from a legal perspective, provide legal guidance, and prepare for possible litigation and/or administrative proceedings.’”

Smith v. Ergo Sols., LLC, No. 14-382 (JDB), 2017 WL 2656096, at *3 (D.D.C. June 20, 2017). Attorney-client privilege attached to report because it included legal conclusions, recommendations, and strategies and a “significant purpose” of the report was to provide legal advice.

In re General Motors LLC Ignition Switch Litig., 80 F. Supp. 3d 521, 530 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 15, 2015). Internal investigation materials are protected by the attorney-client privilege if a primary purpose of the investigation is legal in nature; the primary purpose test does not require a showing that obtaining or providing legal advice was the sole purpose or that the communications at issue “would not have been made ‘but for’ the fact that legal advice was sought.”

With: Cases Applying Narrower Primary Purpose Test:

Rowan v. Sunflower Elec. Power Corp., No. 15-cv-9227-JWL-TJJ, 2016 WL 3745680, at *3-5 (D. Kan. July 13, 2016). Draft letters attached to privileged emails to general counsel were not privileged when those drafts did not reveal legal advice; addressed business, not legal, issues; and were drafts of a document intended to be sent to a third party.

Phillips v. C.R. Bard, Inc., 290 F.R.D. 615, 628-30 (D. Nev. 2013). Courts either ask whether the “primary purpose” of the communication was to ascertain legal advice, or whether the communication was created “because of” a legal purpose; also noting that courts consider the breadth of the recipient list and whether the communication explicitly sought advice of counsel.

United States v. ISS Marine Servs., Inc., 905 F. Supp. 2d 121, 130 (D.D.C. 2012). An audit report prepared by non-lawyer employees was not privileged because counsel did not oversee the audit or the creation of the report, even though outside counsel had been consulted briefly when the audit was initiated.

Preferred Care Partners Holding Corp. v. Humana, Inc., 258 F.R.D. 684, 689 (S.D. Fla. 2009) (quoting In re Seroquel Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 6:06-md-1769-Orl-22DAB, 2008 WL 1995058, at *4 (M.D. Fla. May 7, 2008) (internal citations and quotations omitted). Under Florida law, “the privilege applies only if the primary or predominate purpose of the attorney-client consultations is to seek legal advice or assistance When the business simultaneously sends communications to both lawyers and non-lawyers, it usually cannot claim that the primary purpose of the communication was for legal advice or assistance because the communication served both business and legal purposes.”

Visa U.S.A., Inc. v. First Data Corp., No. C-02-1786 KSW EMC), 2004 WL 1878209, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 23, 2004). Where documents have both a legal and a non-legal purpose, the proper standard is whether it can be said that the document was created “because of” a legal purpose; documents prepared for a dual purpose will not be privileged if the documents have a “clear, readily separable business purpose.”

Gen. Elec. Capital Corp. v. DirectTV, Inc., No. 3:97 CV 1901, 1998 WL 849389, at *6 (D. Conn. July 30, 1998). “When he acts as an advisor, the attorney must give predominantly legal advice to retain his client’s privilege of non-disclosure, not solely, or even largely, business advice . . . in the case where a lawyer responds to a request not made primarily for the purpose of securing legal advice, no privilege attaches to any part of the document.”

United States v. Chevron Corp., No. C-94-1885, 1996 WL 264769, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 13, 1996). A party seeking to withhold discovery based on the attorney-client privilege must prove that all communications it seeks to protect were made “primarily for the purpose of generating legal advice.” “No privilege can attach to any communication as to which a business purpose would have served as a sufficient cause, i.e., any communication that would have been made because of a business purpose, even if there had been no perceived additional interest in securing legal advice. If the document was prepared for purposes of simultaneous review by legal and non-legal personnel, it cannot be said that the primary purpose of the document is to secure legal advice.”

In re Polaris, 967 N.W.2d 397, 408 (Sup. Ct. Minn. 2022). The Supreme Court of Minnesota adopted the predominant purpose test and affirmed the trial court’s ruling that an Audit Report was predominantly for a business purpose and, therefore, the entirety of the report was not privileged. However, embedded legal advice remained privileged. “We stress, however, that even when the predominant purpose of the communication is business advice, the attorney-client privilege will protect portions of the document that contain legal advice.” The court noted the following as indicating a business purpose: the engagement letter with outside counsel stated that they had been hired “to make the company better” when it comes to dealing with safety concerns; the report included recommendations in the areas of safety, engineering, design, and corporate practices; the report was distributed to the company’s management and the board of directors to implement operational changes with respect to product design, engineering and manufacturing practices.

While the communication must have a legal purpose, the attorney-client privilege is not lost merely because the communication contains some non-legal information.

See:

Fed. Hous. Fin. Agency v. UBS Americas Inc., No. 11 Civ. 5201(DLC), 2013 WL 1700923, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 16, 2013). The court ordered defendant to produce portions of memorandum from counsel that constituted factual summary of communications with third parties.

In re OM Sec. Litig., 226 F.R.D. 579, 587 (N.D. Ohio 2005). Concluding that, in cases of dual purpose, the attorney-client privilege is broader than the work product doctrine and that “documents prepared for the purpose of obtaining or rendering legal advice are protected even though the documents also reflect or include business issues.”

Status Time Corp. v. Sharp Elec. Corp., 95 F.R.D. 27, 31 (S.D.N.Y. 1982). Communications of exclusively technical information to patent attorneys not privileged. Documents containing considerable amounts of technical information will be privileged if they are concerned primarily with a request for a provision of legal advice.

The existence of the privilege and its protection of legal communications will not bring non-legal communications within the privilege. See Motley v. Marathon Oil Co., 71 F.3d 1547, 1551 (10th Cir. 1995) (“the mere fact that an attorney was involved in a communication does not automatically render the communication subject to the attorney-client privilege”); Thurmond v. Compaq Computer Corp., 198 F.R.D. 475, 483 (E.D. Tex. 2000). (“[C]ommon sense tells us that there is a difference between merely providing legal information and providing legal ‘advice.’ . . . [T]he attorneys were acting more as ‘courier[s] of factual information,’ rather than ‘legal advisers.’”); Mass. Sch. of Law at Andover, Inc. v. Am. Bar Ass’n, 895 F. Supp. 88, 91 (E.D. Pa. 1995); Hardy v. N.Y. News, 114 F.R.D. 633, 643-44 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (“[T]he business aspects of the decision are not protected simply because legal considerations are also involved.”); Foseco Int’l Ltd. v. Fireline, Inc., 546 F. Supp. 22, 24 (N.D. Ohio 1982) (“Communications made in the routine course of business, however, such as transmittal letters or acknowledgment of receipt letters, which disclose no privileged matters and which are devoid of legal advice or requests for such advice are not protected.”). Moreover, the attorney-client privilege does not reach facts within the client’s knowledge, even if the client learned of those facts through communications with counsel.

When an attorney acts solely as a business advisor, negotiator, or scrivener, communications are not privileged because they do not have a legal purpose. See In re Lindsey, 148 F.3d 1100, 1106 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (communications not privileged when attorney acts as a policy advisor, media expert, business consultant, banker, referee or friend); In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 731 F.2d 1032, 1037 (2d Cir. 1984) (communications that did not evidence legal advice, but merely business advice, were not privileged, as opposed to documents which did show that the client was seeking legal advice); United States v. El Paso Co., 682 F.2d 530, 539 (5th Cir. 1982) (preparation of tax returns); United States v. Davis, 636 F.2d 1028, 1042-43 (5th Cir. 1981) (business adviser role is not privileged); Koumoulis v. Indep. Fin. Mktg. Grp., Inc., 295 F.R.D. 28, 44-46 (E.D.N.Y. 2013) (communications of outside counsel who supervised and directed an internal investigation as an adjunct member of the human resources team were not privileged where predominant purpose of the communications concerned business, not legal, advice); Marceau v. Int’l Bhd. of Elec. Workers Local 1269, 246 F.R.D. 610, 613-14 (D. Ariz. 2007) (internal investigation report conducted by outside counsel, detailing manipulation of sales performance calculations to favor union agents, was undertaken for a business, not legal, purpose and thus not covered by the attorney-client or work product privileges); NXIVM Corp. v. O’Hara, 241 F.R.D. 109, 131-32 (N.D.N.Y. 2007) (when attorney acted solely as coordinator of media relations, communications between attorney and client not protected); Pfizer Inc. v. Ranbaxy Labs. Ltd., No. 03-209-JJF, 2004 WL 2323135, at *2 (D. Del. Oct. 7, 2004) (privilege not applicable where communications included only factual, not legal, information); Navigant Consulting, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 220 F.R.D. 467, 474-75 (N.D. Tex. 2004) (“Where an attorney is functioning in some other capacity – such as an accountant, investigator, or business advisor – there is no privilege.”); Rattner v. Netburn, No. 88 CIV.2080(GLG), 1989 WL 223059, at *5-6 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (counsel acting as press agent). However, “factual investigations performed by attorneys as attorneys fall comfortably within the protection of the attorney-client privilege.” Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist. 100, 600 F.3d 612, 619-20 (7th Cir. 2010) (citing Upjohn and circuit courts) (emphasis in original). See generally Internal Investigations, § VI, infra.

Similarly, when a lawyer is merely providing factual information rather than legal advice, communications will not be protected. See Dawson v. N.Y. Life Ins. Co., 901 F. Supp. 1362, 1366 (N.D. Ill. 1995). Additionally, communications that are prompted by personal friendships or family relationships, as opposed to the desire for legal advice, are not protected. United States v. Tedder, 801 F.2d 1437, 1441-42 (4th Cir. 1986); In re Kinoy, 326 F. Supp. 400, 403 (S.D.N.Y. 1970).

If documents are prepared for simultaneous review by legal and non-legal personnel, a court may not deem them privileged, on the grounds that they were not prepared primarily for the purpose of providing legal advice.

See:

United States v. Frederick, 182 F.3d 496, 501-02 (7th Cir. 1999). A document prepared for simultaneous use in tax return preparation and litigation is not privileged.

Phillips v. C.R. Bard, Inc., 290 F.R.D. 615, 628-30 (D. Nev. 2013). The fact that a communication was sent to both lawyers and non-lawyers is not dispositive as to whether the “primary purpose” of the communication was to solicit legal advice; the court reviewed each communication for an individual privilege determination.

In re Vioxx Prods. Liab. Litig., 501 F. Supp. 2d 789, 806-07 (E.D. La. 2007). Where company routinely sent communications for simultaneous review by legal and non-legal personnel, company failed to demonstrate that communications were primarily for a legal purpose. “The structure of Merck’s enterprise, with its legal department having such broad powers, and the manner in which it circulates documents, has consequences that Merck must live with relative to its burden of persuasion when privilege is asserted. When, for example, Merck simultaneously sends communications to both lawyers and non-lawyers, it usually cannot claim that the primary purpose of the communication was for legal advice or assistance because the communication served both business and legal purposes.”

Allied Irish Banks v. Bank of Am., N.A., 240 F.R.D. 96, 104 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). Under New York law, privilege did not protect memos of attorney’s interviews or summary drafts of investigative findings because the attorney prepared them for the primary purpose of an investigative report, not for purpose of rendering legal advice.

In re Sulfuric Acid Antitrust Litig., 432 F. Supp. 2d 794, 796-97 (ND. Ill. 2006). Hypotheticals posed in antitrust compliance manuals created by employer’s attorney for distribution to employees not privileged because manuals were instructional devices based on real life scenarios rather than requests for legal advice.

*Visa U.S.A., Inc. v. First Data Corp., No. C-02-1786SJW(EMC), 2004 WL 1878209, at 4, 7 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 23, 2004). Rejecting proposition that primary purpose of communication must be legal and adopting a broader standard (used for work product purposes by the Ninth Circuit) that provides that where a communication was made “because of” a legal purpose, the privilege applied. Nonetheless, the court held that the documents at issue were not privileged because they would have been created in substantially the same way solely for business purposes.

In re Buspirone Antitrust Litig., 211 F.R.D. 249, 252-53 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). The fact that a request to counsel was sent simultaneously to non-legal personnel did not, by itself, dictate the conclusion that a document was not prepared for the purpose of obtaining legal advice.

*United States v. Chevron Corp., No. C-94-1885, 1996 WL 264769, at 6-7 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 13, 1996). If a document was prepared for purposes of simultaneous review by legal and non-legal personnel, it cannot be said that the primary purpose of the document was to secure legal advice.

In re 3 Com Corp. Sec. Litig., No. C-89-20480, 1992 WL 456813, at *1-2 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 10, 1992). Draft press release documents that were sent to counsel for review were not privileged since attorney's comments related to factual information and not legal advice.

Similarly, summary documents based on attorney-client communications, but which do not reveal any individual communications, may not be privileged if they were prepared for purposes other than securing legal advice.

See:

Simon v. G.D. Searle & Co., 816 F.2d 397, 401-04 (8th Cir. 1987). The "risk management" documents prepared from privileged case reserve information for general business purposes were not privileged, at least to the extent that they revealed aggregate claims information and not individual privileged communications.

In re Hillsborough Holdings Corp., 132 B.R. 478, 480 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1991). Privilege does not protect compilations of litigation data made by an attorney for business rather than legal purposes. Where counsel collected information on judgments against the company and insurance coverage, court held data was for the business purposes of accounting and insurance planning, and not for the purpose of seeking or providing legal advice.

The issue of mixed legal and business purposes arises frequently in the context of communications with in-house counsel. The fact that in-house counsel often play multiple roles in the corporation has caused many courts to apply heightened scrutiny in determining whether the elements of the attorney-client privilege have been established. While courts do not want to weaken the privilege, they are mindful that corporate clients could attempt to hide mountains of otherwise discoverable information behind a veil of secrecy by using in-house legal departments as conduits of otherwise non-privileged information. "The fact that the attorney is in-house counsel does not mean that the privilege is unavailable. . . . However, in-house counsel's law degree and office are not to be used to create a 'privileged sanctuary for corporate records.'" United States v. Davis, 131 F.R.D. 391, 401 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (internal citations omitted). As a result, many courts impose a higher burden on in-house counsel to "clearly demonstrate" that advice was given in a legal capacity. See, e.g., Acosta v. Target Corp., 281 F.R.D. 314, 322 (N.D. Ill. 2012) (noting that "[an] expanded role of legal counsel within corporations has increased the difficulty for judges in ruling on privilege claims [and] has concurrently increased the burden that must be borne by the proponent of corporate privilege claims relative to in-house counsel"). See also Defining The Lawyer: In-House vs. Outside Counsel, § I.B.2.a, supra.

See:

United States v. Adlman, 68 F.3d 1495, 1500 (2d Cir. 1995). In-house counsel, who was also the company's Vice President for Taxes, resisted a summons served by the IRS for the production of a preliminary and final draft of a memorandum prepared by the company's auditors. The court rejected counsel's assertion of the attorney-client privilege because counsel failed to demonstrate that the auditor's work in this instance was to provide legal rather than business advice. The court found that there was no contemporaneous documentation, such as a separate retainer agreement, supporting the position that the auditor, in this task alone, was working under a different arrangement from that which governed the rest of its work with the company.

MediaTek Inc. v. Freescale Semiconductor, Inc., No. 4:11-cv-05341, 2013 WL 5594474, at *4-5 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 10, 2013). Technical consultant's report and drafts of report, which was requested and retained by company's general counsel, was not privileged. The fact that the report was requested by the general counsel was insufficient to establish that the report was created primarily to facilitate the provision of legal advice; there was no indication that the report was ever reviewed by counsel, and the report was commissioned in the context of a business purpose (i.e., the decision whether to purchase certain patents).

In re Vioxx Prods. Liab. Litig., 501 F. Supp. 2d 789 (E.D. La. 2007). Defendant drug company asserted two new theories regarding attorney-client privilege. First, defendant argued the "Pervasive Regulation Theory" – that because drug companies are heavily regulated, all communications between in-house counsel and company employees carry legal problems and should be covered by privilege. Second, defendant asserted the "Reverse Engineering Theory" – that drafts of otherwise non-privileged documents should be privileged where an adverse party could "discern the content of legal advice that was subsequently offered [by in-house counsel]." The court rejected both novel theories on the grounds that companies cannot be allowed to immunize all of their communications by passing them through the companies' legal departments.

Deel v. Bank of Am., N.A., 227 F.R.D. 456, 458, 460 (W.D. Va. 2005). Observing that the privilege "applies to individuals and corporations, and to in-house and outside counsel" and refusing to order production of documents where party "clearly sent these documents to its in-house and outside counsel to facilitate legal services."

United States v. ChevronTexaco Corp., 241 F. Supp. 2d 1065, 1076 (N.D. Cal. 2002). "Because in-house counsel may operate in a purely or primarily business capacity in connection with many corporate endeavors, the presumption that attaches to communications with outside counsel does not extend to communications with in-house counsel." However, tax advice provided by in-house counsel who had both legal and business role was privileged. "Determining the tax consequences of a particular transaction is rooted virtually entirely in the law. The advisor must analyze the tax code, IRS rulings, decisions of the Tax Court, etc. Communications offering tax advice or discussing tax planning or the tax consequences of alternate business strategies are 'legal' communications."

United States v. Philip Morris Inc., 209 F.R.D. 13, 17 (D.D.C. 2002). Court allowed government to depose corporation's in-house attorneys regarding non-privileged information relating to "public relations," "corporate conduct and positions," marketing strategies, and tobacco research and development. The court noted that "deponents are employees to whom Defendants have knowingly assigned substantial non-legal, non-litigation responsibilities, including corporate business, managerial, public relations, advertising, scientific, and research and development responsibilities. Testimony on these subjects . . . is not subject to attorney-client or work-product privilege protections."

Ames v. Black Entm't Television, No. 98 Civ. 0226, 1998 WL 812051, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 18, 1998). In order to protect communications with in-house counsel, a company must meet the burden of "clearly showing" that in-house counsel "gave advice in her legal capacity, not in her capacity as a business advisor."

United States v. Chevron Corp., No. C-94-1885, 1996 WL 264769, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 13, 1996). No presumption of privilege can be made with respect to documents generated by in-house counsel. "Some courts have applied a presumption that all communications to outside counsel are primarily related to legal advice. See Diversified Indus., Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596, 610 (8th Cir. 1977). In this context, the presumption is logical since outside counsel would not ordinarily be involved in the business decisions of a corporation. However, the Diversified presumption cannot be applied to in-house counsel because in-house counsel are frequently involved in the business decisions of a company. While an attorney's status as in-house counsel does not dilute the attorney-client privilege [citing Upjohn], a corporation must make a clear showing that in-house counsel's advice was given in a professional legal capacity" (emphasis removed).

Ga.-Pac. Corp. v. GAF Roofing Mfg. Corp., No. 93 Civ. 5125 (RPP), 1996 WL 29392, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 25, 1996). “[T]he need to apply [the privilege] cautiously and narrowly is heightened in the case of corporate staff counsel, lest the mere participation of an attorney be used to seal off disclosure.”

Kramer v. Raymond Corp., No. 90-5026, 1992 WL 122856, at *1 (E.D. Pa. May 29, 1992) (internal citation omitted). “[T]he attorney-client privilege is construed narrowly. This is especially so when a corporate entity seeks to invoke the privilege to protect communications to in-house counsel. Because in-house counsel may play a dual role of legal advisor and business advisor, the privilege will apply only if the communication in question was made for the express purpose of securing legal not business advice.”

Teltron, Inc. v. Alexander, 132 F.R.D. 394, 396 (E.D. Pa. 1990). Teltron asserted the attorney-client privilege during the deposition of Siegel, who had been at various times Teltron’s outside counsel, executive vice president and in-house counsel, and president. The court overruled assertions of privilege on the ground that Teltron had failed to meet its burden of proving that deposition questions sought legal advice rather than business advice on the ordinary business activities of the company. “As a general rule, an attorney who serves a client in a business capacity may not assert the attorney-client privilege because of the lack of a confidential relationship.” When a corporation seeks to protect communications made by an attorney who serves the corporation in a legal and business capacity, the corporation “must clearly demonstrate” that advice was given in a professional legal capacity. This is to prevent a corporation from shielding business transactions “simply by funneling their communications through a licensed attorney.”

Lobbying activity by lawyers presents a particular challenge. See Lobbying, § VII.E, infra.

E. ASSERTING THE PRIVILEGE

1. Procedure for Asserting the Privilege

The proponent of the privilege must make a timely objection to the disclosure of a privileged communication. Failure to object may constitute a waiver of the privilege. See 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5507 (1st ed. West 2019).

See also:

Rowe v. Liberty Mut. Grp., Inc., 639 F. App’x 654, 656 (1st Cir. 2016). Defendant’s failure to provide detailed support for privilege assertions until reply brief for its motion for protective order was a factor in the court’s analysis and ultimate decision not to sustain the privilege designations; party had “waited too long” to provide the information.

Intellectual Ventures I LLC v. Capital One Fin. Corp., No. PWG-14-111, 2016 WL 5920904, at *2 (D. Md. Oct. 11, 2016). Discovery Guidelines for the U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland require that, where a requesting party objects to assertion of privilege, the producing party must “provide sufficient factual information, including by affidavit, to establish the factual basis for each claim of privilege,” and failure to do so results in waiver.

It is generally recognized that the privilege belongs to the client and that the client has the sole power to waive it. See Douglas v. DynMcDermott Petroleum Operations, Co., 144 F.3d 364, 372 (5th Cir. 1998) (in-house counsel breached ethical duties by revealing client confidences during the course of an investigation into alleged Title VII violations). However, an attorney may assert the privilege on the client’s behalf. Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975

F.2d 81, 90 (3d Cir. 1992). But the attorney cannot assert the privilege against the client's wishes. See Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist. 100, 600 F.3d 612, 618 (7th Cir. 2010) (noting that "[t]he privilege belongs to the client, although an attorney may assert the privilege on the client's behalf"); Evan Law Grp. LLC v. Taylor, No. 09 C 4896, 2011 WL 72715, at *6 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 6, 2011) (lawyer may not assert the privilege for self-serving interests; rather, he may only assert the privilege to benefit the client).

The party asserting the privilege bears the burden of establishing that a communication is privileged. In re Excel Innovations, Inc., 502 F.3d 1086, 1099 (9th Cir. 2007) ("Ordinarily, the party asserting attorney-client privilege has the burden of establishing all of the elements of the privilege."); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 415 F.3d 333, 338-39 (4th Cir. 2005) ("The burden is on the proponent of the attorney-client privilege to demonstrate its applicability."); United States v. Bisanti, 414 F.3d 168, 170 (1st Cir. 2005) (same); United States v. BDO Seidman, 337 F.3d 802, 811 (7th Cir. 2003) ("The mere assertion of a privilege is not enough; instead, a party that seeks to invoke the attorney-client privilege has the burden of establishing all of its essential elements."); von Bulow v. von Bulow, 811 F.2d 136, 144 (2d Cir. 1987) (same); United States v. Nat'l Ass'n of Realtors, 242 F.R.D. 491, 493-94 (N.D. Ill. 2007) ("The party claiming the privilege has the burden of proving all of its essential elements."). Once the party asserting the existence of the privilege establishes a prima facie case that the privilege applies, the party seeking the production or other disclosure of the protected information bears the burden of establishing that an exception to the privilege applies. See, e.g., Mass. Eye & Ear Infirmary v. QLT Phototherapeutics, Inc., 412 F.3d 215, 225 (1st Cir. 2005). Inadmissible evidence may be considered by the court while determining whether the preliminary facts of the privilege have been demonstrated by the proponent of the privilege. FED. R. EVID. 104(a); see also United States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554, 566-67 (1989) (allowing court to look at potentially privileged and therefore inadmissible documents to determine if privilege exists).

Blanket objections are not sufficient. See Holifield v. United States, 909 F.2d 201, 204 (7th Cir. 1990) (blanket objection that the documents requested by the government in a subpoena were protected by the attorney-client privilege did not invoke the privilege); Med. Assurance Co., Inc. v. Miller, No. 4:08-cv-29, 2010 WL 2710607, at *4 (N.D. Ind. July 7, 2010) (privilege "must be made and sustained on a question-by-question or document-by-document basis"); Navigant Consulting, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 220 F.R.D. 467, 473 (N.D. Tex. 2004) (blanket objection did not invoke the privilege); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5507 (1st ed. West 2019). For example, in Eureka Financial Corp. v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 136 F.R.D. 179, 186 (E.D. Cal. 1991), the court found that the defendant's blanket objection to the discovery of privileged communications warranted sanctions against the defendant's counsel.

Mere conclusory assertions or vague representations of facts that are the basis for the privilege claim are also insufficient to meet the burden of establishing the attorney-client privilege. See United States v. Constr. Prods. Research, Inc., 73 F.3d 464, 473-74 (2d Cir. 1996) (if a party invoking a privilege does not provide sufficient detail – through privilege log, affidavit or deposition testimony – to demonstrate fulfillment of all of the legal requirements for application of the privilege, the claim will be rejected); PYR Energy Corp. v. Samson Res. Co., No. 1:05-CV-530, 2007 WL 446025, at *1-2 (E.D. Tex. Feb. 7, 2007) (party waived attorney-client privilege as to some documents where privilege log's descriptions were "so vague and oblique as to be meaningless”); CSC Recovery Corp. v. Daido Steel Co., No. 94 Civ. 9214, 1997 WL 661122, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 22, 1997) (conclusory allegations that elements of privilege are met is insufficient to invoke the privilege).

a. Privilege Logs

The use of privilege logs and affidavits of the authors and recipients of the documents containing privileged communications are common ways in which the privilege is invoked. See Carnes v. Crete Carrier Corp., 244 F.R.D. 694, 698 (N.D. Ga. 2007) (“The party asserting the attorney-client privilege . . . bears the burden to provide a factual basis for its assertions. This burden is met when the party produces a detailed privilege log . . . [and] an accompanying explanatory affidavit from counsel.”); CSC Recovery Corp. v. Daido Steel Co., No. 94 Civ. 9214, 1997 WL 661122, at *11 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 27, 1997) (privilege logs and affidavits were sufficient to assert the privilege). Some courts require that a privilege log contain basic information about each separate communication over which a party asserts a privilege. See, e.g., Allendale Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bull Data Sys., Inc., 145 F.R.D. 84, 88 (N.D. Ill. 1992).

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide only general guidance on the contents of a privilege log:

[A party must] describe the nature of the documents, communications, or tangible things not produced or disclosed--and do so in a manner that, without revealing information itself privileged or protected, will enable other parties to assess the claim.

FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(5)(A)(ii); see also Wolk v. Green, No. C06-5025 BZ, 2007 WL 3203050, at *1-2 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (“[Federal] Rule 26(b)(5) is commonly satisfied by filing a privilege log. Blanket refusals or boilerplate objections are insufficient to assert the privilege . . .”). The 1993 Advisory Committee Note that accompanied what is now Rule 26(b)(5)(A) declined to specify exactly what information needs to be provided in a privilege log: “The rule does not attempt to define for each case what information must be provided when a party asserts a claim of privilege or work product protection.” However, the Advisory Committee suggested that document-by-document privilege logs may be unduly burdensome where large numbers of documents are withheld:

Details concerning time, persons, general subject matter, etc., may be appropriate if only a few items are withheld, but may be unduly burdensome when voluminous documents are claimed to be privileged or protected, particularly if the items can be described by categories.

In general, the description should be sufficient “to permit the adversary to make an intelligent assessment as to the applicability of a privilege.” SEC v. Beacon Hill Asset Mgmt. LLC, 231 F.R.D. 134, 145 (S.D.N.Y. 2004).

Perez v. Mueller, No. 13-CV-1302-PP, 2016 WL 5372811, at *3 (E.D. Wis. Sept. 26, 2016). Court found that the plaintiff’s invocation of various privileges – “attorney-client, work product, and government/executive, among others” – was improper where plaintiff made blanket claims of privilege, describing hundreds of pages of emails as containing “thoughts and opinions of the agency in preparation of litigation” and “content of attorney-client conversation.” Court noted that the assertions made it “impossible to evaluate the claims of privilege because there is no way of knowing how many emails are included within those pages, much less the nature of each separate communication.”

PYR Energy Corp. v. Samson Res. Co., No. 1:05-CV-530, 2007 WL 446025, at *1-2 (E.D. Tex. Feb. 7, 2007). Privilege log that was two weeks late and incomplete as to who received or created documents was insufficient and basis for sanctions.

St. Joe Co. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., No. 3:05-cv-1266-J-25MCR, 2006 WL 3391208, at *5-6 (M.D. Fla. Nov. 22, 2006). Defendant’s privilege log of withheld communications between counsel and defendant’s employees was inadequate to protect privilege where log failed to specify or allege that the communications had not been disclosed to those beyond corporate control group, provide adequate subject matter descriptions, and identify positions or authors and recipients of some of the documents. However, court allowed defendants to amend log with affidavits, deposition testimony, or other evidence necessary to establish the elements of the attorney-client privilege over the documents.

In re Gen. Instrument Corp. Sec. Litig., 190 F.R.D. 527, 532 (N.D. Ill. 2000). “Case law, and Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5) should have made it clear to defendant, at some point over the last three years, that its privilege log was woefully deficient. When the plaintiff pointed out obvious flaws in the log, however, the defendant stridently refused to provide required information. It is apparent from review of the privilege log that defendants are under the mistaken impression either that plaintiffs must prove documents are not privileged, or that it is the court’s burden to establish the applicability of the privilege as to defendant’s documents.”

Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., No. 95 Civ. 8833, 1998 WL 474206, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 1998). “The Court . . . deplores the presentation of a privilege log arranged neither chronologically nor by subject matter, suggesting that the discovery documents, or the log, may have been arranged as a litigation tactic to inconvenience opposing counsel, which, in this case, has the added result of making the Court’s review more difficult and more time-consuming.”

Echavarría v. Roach, Civil Action No. 16-cv-11118-ADB, 2018 WL 6788525, at *4 (D. Mass. Dec. 26, 2018). Where a party asserts common interest protection, the party’s privilege log should identify the third-party’s attorneys who sent or received the documents at issue, the represented third-party, the common legal interest, and the date of the communication with the third-party’s attorney.

The case law reflects differing views about the detail to be included on a privilege log. Some courts continue to require onerous document-by-document logging.

Compare: Courts Requiring Document-by-Document Logging

First Horizon Nat’l Corp. v. Houston Cas. Co., No. 2:15-CV-2235-SHL-DKV, 2016 WL 5867268, at *7 (W.D. Tenn. Oct. 5, 2016). Court granted defendants’ motion to compel production of a document-by-document privilege log, stating that in the absence of a document-by-document log, neither the court nor the defendants could assess whether privilege claims were well founded.

Wanzer v. Town of Plainville, No. 3:15CV00016 (AWT), 2016 WL 1258456, at *3 (D. Conn. Mar. 30, 2016). Defendants’ privilege log did not provide sufficient information to determine whether withheld emails were indeed communications between client and counsel for the purpose of soliciting or rendering legal advice where defendants did not provide any information regarding the contents of the emails.

Am. Sav. Bank, FSB v. UBS Painewebber, Inc., No. M8-85, 2002 WL 31833223, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 16, 2002). Noting that the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and local court rules require identification of documents on privilege log by type of document, date of creation, and identification of subject matter and that the assertion of privilege requires the production of a privilege log, notwithstanding the burden of detailing each privileged document.

In re Diet Drugs (Phentermine, Fenfluramine, Dexfenfluramine) Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 1203, 2000 WL 1545028, at *3 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 12, 2000). Privilege log listing date, author, and “skeletal” subject matter description was insufficient to establish deliberative process privilege in response to FOIA request.

Torres v. Kuzniasz, 936 F. Supp. 1201, 1208 (D.N.J. 1996). Party claiming privilege must specify the date of the documents, the author, the intended recipient, the names of all people given copies of the document, the subject of the document, and the privilege or privileges asserted.

Allendale Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bull Data Sys., Inc., 145 F.R.D. 84, 88 (N.D. Ill. 1992). “For each document, the log should identify the date, the author and all recipients, along with their capacities. The log should also describe the document’s subject matter, purpose for its production, and a specific explanation of why the document is privileged or immune from discovery. These categories, especially this last category, must be sufficiently detailed to allow the court to determine whether the discovery opponent has discharged its burden. . . . Accordingly, descriptions such as ‘letter re claim,’ ‘analysis of claim’ or ‘report in anticipation of litigation’ – with which we have grown all too familiar – will be insufficient. This may be burdensome, but it will provide a more accurate evaluation of a discovery opponent’s claims and takes into consideration the fact that there are no presumptions operating in the discovery opponent’s favor.”

With Courts Allowing Categorical or Otherwise Less Burdensome Logging:

A.I.A. Holdings, S.A. v. Lehman Bros., Inc., No. 97 Civ. 4978(LMM)(HB), 2002 WL 31385824, at *4-6 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 21, 2002). Criticizing view in Bowne, above, requiring the party asserting the privilege to offer evidence sufficient to establish the privilege as to each item listed on log. Rather, assertion of privilege can be supplemented as to challenged documents only.

In re Papst Licensing, GmbH Patent Litig., No. Civ. A. MDL 1298, 2001 WL 1135268, at *2 (E.D. La. Sept. 19, 2001). Observing that, ordinarily, privilege logs require detailed disclosure, but noting that courts may allow departures from that requirement and concluding that, because listed communications between attorney and client were within core of the privilege, detailed descriptions would be unnecessary.

An increasing number of courts allow parties to log by category or use alternate methods instead of logging on a document-by-document basis.

See:

Deutsche Bank Securities, Inc. v. Kingate Global Fund Ltd., 19 Civ. 10823 (ER), 2022 WL 3644822, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 24, 2022). Local rules encourage categorical logs for complex cases. Categorical logs are adequate if they provide information sufficient to enable the reviewing party to make an intelligent determination about the validity of the assertion of privilege.

City of New York v. FedEx Ground Package Sys., Inc., No. 13 Civ. 9173 (ER), 2016 WL 1718261, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 27, 2016). Court ordered plaintiff to provide defendant with a privilege log that did not log document by document, but instead identified documents by category in a way that provided sufficient detail to enable defendant to evaluate and challenge the City’s privilege claims, noting that categorical logs are designed to mitigate the burden of responding to discovery requests.

Patriot Rail Corp. v. Sierra R.R. Co., No. 2:09-CV-0009 TLN AC, 2016 WL 1213015, at *1-2 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 29, 2016). The discovery rules do not require the production of a document-by-document privilege log and a party can comply with the rules by crafting a privilege log in some other format.

Mfrs. Collection Co., LLC v. Precision Airmotive, LLC, No. 3:12-cv-853-L, 2014 WL 2558888, at *4-5 (N.D. Tex. June 6, 2014). Plaintiff's categorical privilege log was sufficient where document-by-document privilege log would be unduly burdensome.

Auto Club of New York v. Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, No. 11 Civ. 6746 (RKE)(HBP), 2014 WL 2518959, at *1-2, *5, *7 (S.D.N.Y. June 4, 2014). Court noted that the purpose of categorical privilege logs is to reduce the potential burden imposed by document-by-document privilege logging in cases involving high volumes of privileged material, and that categorical logs are permitted by federal and local rules. Court held that defendant's amended categorical privilege log was sufficient.

Genesco, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. 3:13-0202, 2014 WL 935329, at *26-29 (M.D. Tenn. Mar. 10, 2014). Detailed affidavit provided sufficient information to assert privilege over non-testifying consultant's work product; requiring document-by-document log in complex, international computer investigation was impracticable and unnecessary.

Koumoulis v. Indep. Fin. Mktg. Grp. Inc., No. 10-cv-0887, 2014 WL 223173, at *7 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 21, 2014). A magistrate judge's decision to accept a declaration in lieu of a document-by-document privilege log was not clearly erroneous. The declaration satisfied the requirements of Fed. R Civ. P. 26(b)(5)(A) because it provided the information necessary for the court and the requesting party to assess the privilege claims.

Teledyne Instruments, Inc. v. Cairns, No. 6:12-cv-854, 2013 WL 5781274, at *15-16 (M.D. Fla. Oct. 25, 2013). A categorical privilege log was sufficient when a document-by-document listing would be unduly burdensome and the additional material in a more detailed log would be of no material benefit to the discovering party.

Games2U, Inc. v. Game Truck Licensing, LLC, No. 13-00053, 2013 WL 4046655, at *7 (D. Ariz. Aug. 9, 2013). A privilege log that included descriptions of withheld documents by category rather than document-by-document was sufficient as long as the log provided sufficient information to the court and the opposing party to evaluate the propriety of the assertions of privilege.

F.D.I.C. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, No. 3:11-cv-19, 2013 WL 2421770, at *8 (S.D. Ind. June 3, 2013). The court, agreeing that a document-by-document privilege log for 12,000 electronic documents would be unduly burdensome, allowed for a categorical privilege log.

Goldstein v. FDIC, 494 B.R. 82, 88, 92 (D.D.C. 2013). In lieu of a detailed privilege log, the court suggested that the parties negotiate a FRE 502(d) protective order that would enable requesting party to review documentation without waiving privilege.

Auto. Club of New York, Inc. v. Port Auth. of New York & New Jersey, No. 11 Civ. 6746, 2013 WL 1903782, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. May 8, 2013). A categorical privilege log is adequate if it provides sufficient information about the nature of the withheld documents to enable the receiving party to determine the validity of the privilege assertion.

Phillips v. C.R. Bard, Inc., 290 F.R.D. 615, 636-38 (D. Nev. 2013). A categorical privilege log was sufficient where there is a large volume of documents and a party provides a privilege log with sufficient details.

Assured Guar. Mun. Corp. v. UBS Real Estate Sec. Inc., No. 12 Civ. 1579 (HB)(JCF), 12 Civ. 7322 (HB)(JCF), 2013 WL 1195545, at *9-10 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 25, 2013). A categorical privilege log is sufficient.

Vasudevan Software, Inc. v. Microstrategy, Inc., No. 11-cv-06637-RS-PSG, 2012 WL 5637611, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 15, 2012). "[Defendant's] request for item-by-item logs is also unreasonable.

[Plaintiff] may provide categorical logs, essentially grouping documents by type and indicating how each of those categories is privileged.”

Graff v. Haverhill North Coke Co., No. 1:09-CV-670, 2012 WL 5495514, at *50 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 13, 2012). A categorical privilege log was sufficient because it provided enough detail to “permit a determination as to whether a document is potentially protected by defendants’ various asserted privileges.”

GenOn Mid-Atl. LLC v. Stone & Webster, Inc., No. 11 Civ. 1299 (HB)(FM), 2011 WL 5439046, at *11 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 10, 2011). A categorical privilege log was sufficient. The court observed that there was no apparent benefit to plaintiff of logging each document separately.

In re Motor Fuel Temp. Sales Practices Litig., No. 07-MD-1840-KHV, 2009 WL 959491, at *3 (D. Kan. Apr. 3, 2009). The court denied a motion for protective order regarding communications with counsel after litigation began, but allowed party to log by category.

Muro v. Target Corp., 250 F.R.D. 350, 362-63 (N.D. Ill. 2007). Rule 26(b)(5)(A) does not require logging each email in an email string individually. The rule “requires only that a party provide sufficient information for an opposing party to evaluate the applicability of privilege, ‘without revealing information itself privileged.’”

United States v. Magnesium Corp. of Am., No. 2:01-CV-00040, 2006 WL 1699608, at *5 (D. Utah June 14, 2006). Detailed privileged log was not necessary when the documents to be logged would number in the thousands and when “it seem[ed] clear that most of the documents at issue would be protected from disclosure by the work product privilege, the attorney-client privilege, or the joint defense privilege.”

In re Imperial Corp. of America, 174 F.R.D. 475, 478-479 (S.D. Cal. 1997). Logging by category was appropriate in litigation involving 50 parties, 20 law firms, and at least hundreds of thousands of documents.

Durkin v. Shields (In re Imperial Corp. of Am.), 174 F.R.D. 475, 478-79 (S.D. Cal. 1997). Plaintiffs were not required to produce a document-by-document privilege log but could instead prepare a privilege log on a categorical basis when the litigation involved approximately 50 parties, 20 law firms, and at least hundreds of thousands of documents. The court noted that “[t]o force the creation of a document-by-document privilege log of documents of that magnitude is unreasonable and overly burdensome.”

SEC v. Thrasher, No. 92 Civ. 6987 1996 WL 125661, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 20, 1996). Finding that defendant was not obligated to provide a detailed privilege log for his communications with counsel after noting that a document-by-document listing would be unduly burdensome and that the documents sought were likely protected by the work product or attorney-client privilege.

But see:

Neelon v. Krueger, Civ. No. 12-cv-11198-IT, 2015 WL 1037992, at *2-*4 (D. Mass. Mar. 10, 2015). Court held plaintiff’s categorical privilege log was inadequate and ordered plaintiff to produce withheld documents.

Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Keet, Inc., No. 6:14-cv-749-Orl-41TBS, 2015 WL 1470971, at *8-*9 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 31, 2015). Due to insufficiency of plaintiff’s categorical privilege log, plaintiff waived privilege with respect to internal correspondence and was required to submit an itemized privilege log for correspondence with outside counsel.

S.E.C. v. Yorkville Advisors, LLC, 300 F.R.D. 152, 162-68 (S.D.N.Y. 2014). Court ordered S.E.C. to produce documents listed on its categorical privilege log where descriptions were inadequately detailed and where S.E.C.'s revised log was untimely.

In 2014, the New York Commercial Division adopted Rule 11-b in order to reduce the time and cost associated with preparing privilege logs. 22 N.Y.C.R.R. § 202.70(g), Rule 11-b. Rule 11-g provides that it is the “preference” in the Commercial Division for parties to log documents by category rather than document-by-document. Rule 11-b(b)(1). Rule 11-b provides that parties are to meet and confer and where possible agree to use a categorical approach. Where a requesting party refuses to permit a categorical approach, and instead insists on document-by-document logging, the producing party, upon a showing of good cause, may apply to the court to shift costs incurred by the producing party to prepare the log, including attorneys’ fees. Rule 11-b(b)(2).

The Local Rules of the United States District Courts for the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York (effective June 26, 2017), encourage parties to cooperate in developing more efficient ways to provide information about withheld documents without the need for a traditional privilege log. Local Civil Rule 26.2(c) provides:

(c) Efficient means of providing information regarding claims of privilege are encouraged, and parties are encouraged to agree upon measures that further this end. For example, when asserting privilege on the same basis with respect to multiple documents, it is presumptively proper to provide the information required by this rule by group or category. A party receiving a privilege log that groups documents or otherwise departs from a document-by-document or communication-by-communication listing may not object solely on that basis, but may object if the substantive information required by this rule has not been provided in a comprehensible form.

Where parties log document-by-document, failure to provide sufficient detail in privilege logs may have severe consequences, including waiver of the privilege. For example, in In re General Instrument Corp. Securities Litigation, 190 F.R.D. 527, 532 (N.D. Ill. 2000), the court ordered defendant to produce 396 documents that defendant claimed were privileged. The court’s decision to compel the production of those documents was based on the fact that defendant’s privilege log contained “sketchy, cryptic, often mysterious descriptions of subject matter” that were insufficient to fulfill the defendant’s burden of establishing the elements of the privilege for each document. Id. at 531-32; see also McNamee v. Clemens, No. 1:09-cv-01647-SJ-CLP, 2013 WL 6572899, at *2 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 18, 2013) (holding privilege was waived due to an insufficient privilege log which failed to sufficiently describe the bases for asserted privileges and protections); Nordock Inc. v. Sys. Inc., No. 11-C-118, 2012 WL 4760784, at *7 (E.D. Wis. Oct. 5, 2012) (where the court held that a party’s failure to timely log counsel’s opinion letters waived otherwise applicable privileges); Acosta v. Target Corp., 281 F.R.D. 314, 323-25 (N.D. Ill. 2012) (ordering the production of certain documents listed on privilege log where defendant had failed to provide supporting factual material showing the documents were created and maintained as confidential legal advice); Viet. Veterans of Am. v. CIA, No. 09-cv-0037 CW (JSC), 2012 WL 1156398, at *2-4 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 6, 2012) (Department of Veterans Affairs had waived privilege over documents after lengthy and unexplained delay in producing privilege log); In re Chevron Corp., 749 F. Supp. 2d 170, 180-85 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (an attorney's failure to provide a privilege log prior to the return date of a subpoena, an intentional strategic delay, resulted in waiver of any privilege because, while FRCP 26(b)(5) does not explicitly state when a privilege log must be provided, FRCP 45, which applies to subpoenas, requires that a person objecting to a subpoena must serve either written objections or move to quash within the earlier of the time fixed for compliance or fourteen days after service and, if withholding subpoenaed material on grounds of privilege, provide a privilege log); Felham Enters. (Cayman) Ltd. v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyds, No. Civ. A. 02-3588 C/W 0, 2004 WL 2360159, at *3 (E.D. La. Oct. 19, 2004) (finding a waiver where defendant failed to produce a timely privilege log and the log it ultimately produced failed to sufficiently describe withheld documents); B.F.G. of Ill., Inc. v. Ameritech Corp., No. 99 C 4604, 2001 WL 1414468, at *2, 5-8 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 13, 2001) (court ordered hundreds of documents produced and imposed sanctions where party failed to provide adequate privilege log and, based on in camera review, improperly asserted privilege).

A party is required to claim privilege for documents withheld in a timely manner. See In re DG Acquisition Corp., 151 F.3d 75, 81 (2d Cir. 1998) (party responding to subpoena must assert privilege within 14 days); Marx v. Kelly, Hart & Hallman, P.C., 929 F.2d 8, 12 (1st Cir. 1991) (noting that Rule 34(b) requires responses, including privilege objections, to discovery requests to be made within 30 days and stating that the "burden is on the party asserting a privilege to do so in a timely and proper manner"); Horace Mann Ins. Co. v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 240 F.R.D. 44, 48 (D. Conn. 2007) (party objecting to a subpoena must assert privilege within 14 days, then submit privilege log within "reasonable time"; four-month delay in submitting log was not reasonable). While some courts will permit parties to submit privilege logs sometimes months after documents are produced, leaving it to the parties to work out the when the logs should be exchanged, other courts may demand that the logs be disclosed at the time of the initial production or shortly thereafter. See First Savs. Bank, F.S.B. v. First Bank Sys., Inc., 902 F. Supp. 1356, 1360 (D. Kan. 1995), rev'd on other grounds, 101 F.3d 645 (10th Cir. 1996) ("[Rule 26] contemplates that the required notice and information is due upon a party withholding the claimed privileged material. Consequently . . . the producing party must provide the [privilege log] at the time it is otherwise required to produce the documents.").

Although failure to list documents on a privilege log may result in waiver of the privilege, such waiver is not necessarily automatic, at least where the document at issue is subject to another pending objection. In United States v. Philip Morris Inc., 347 F.3d 951, 954 (D.C. Cir. 2003), the government moved to compel production of a document not listed on the defendant's privilege log. The lower court held that, notwithstanding any other applicable objections made by the defendant, the defendant waived the privilege. The D.C. Circuit reversed, holding that it was error not to consider the defendant's objections to production (other than those based on the attorney-client privilege) prior to finding a waiver. Id. The appellate court held that "if a broad discovery request includes an allegedly privileged document, and if there is an objection to the scope of the request, the court should first decide whether the objection covers the document." Id. Thus, the court held that only after an objection (other than one based on privilege) is resolved must a party list documents falling within the objection (assuming the objection is allowed). Id. In a subsequent proceeding, United States v. British American Tobacco (Investments) Ltd., 387 F.3d 884, 891-92 (D.C.

Cir. 2004), the D.C. Circuit again reviewed the defendant's objections and failure to log the responsive document. Although the court concluded that none of the defendant's objections applied, it nonetheless again reversed the lower court and held that, because the defendant had a reasonable belief that its objection applied, waiver of the attorney-client privilege was an excessive sanction. Id. It directed the lower court to allow the defendant to log the document at issue and further allow the government to challenge the defendant's assertion of privilege. Id. at 892. Cf. Monco v. Zoltek Corp., 317 F. Supp. 3d 995, 1000 (N.D. Ill. 2018) (where party withholds document "surreptitiously" and fails to include it on a privilege log, "a court should have no qualms" about finding waiver as to that document).

Describing emails and other electronically stored information ("ESI") on a privilege log presents particular challenges. In Rhoads Industries, Inc. v. Building Materials Corp. of America, 254 F.R.D. 238 (E.D. Pa. 2008), the court provided guidance on how to log emails on a privilege log in a manner that meets the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(5). The court explained that an email "string" or "chain" is actually comprised of several different individual communications. Id. at 240. A relatively simple example would be an initial email between a third party vendor and a company employee ("initial email"), that is forwarded to the company's CEO ("email string #1"), which the CEO then forwards to outside counsel seeking legal advice ("email string #2"). Id. at 240-41. The question is, how should these emails be presented on a privilege log? The court in Rhoads explained that a separate privilege determination must be made for each of the three communications. The court explained that the entirety of "string #2" could be privileged, analogizing it to a situation in which a client sends a letter to counsel seeking legal advice in which the client quotes an earlier conversation or document verbatim. Id. at 241-42. The court's ruling regarding how to log emails was less than clear. Where a party has produced the initial email and string #1, the court apparently would not require the log description for string #2 to list those underlying emails. However, if a party claims that the initial email and string #1 become privileged because they were sent to counsel, then each must be logged. Id. See also Muro v. Target Corp., 250 F.R.D. 350, 363 (N.D. Ill. 2007) (log need not separately itemize each individual email in an email string); United States v. ChevronTexaco Corp., 241 F. Supp. 2d 1065, 1074 (N.D. Cal. 2002) (email chains should be logged as a single entry because "[a]ddressing each e-mail separately does not accurately reflect what was communicated with that e-mail because each (chronologically) successive e-mail apparently attached those that preceded it"). But see In re Universal Serv. Fund Tel. Billing Practices Litig., 232 F.R.D. 669, 674 (D. Kan. 2005) ("[T]he court strongly encourages counsel, in the preparation of future privilege logs, to list each email within a strand as a separate entry. Otherwise, the client may suffer a waiver of attorney-client privilege or work product protection . . ."); St. Andrews Park, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Army Corps of Eng'rs, 299 F. Supp. 2d 1264, 1271-72 (S.D. Fla. 2003) (the government's privilege log, which did not individually list emails in email chains, identify the author and recipient and their roles for each email, and identify any non-privileged portions of the emails, was insufficient).

A second challenge presented by logging ESI is how to adequately disclose attachments to emails. In SEC v. Beacon Hill Asset Management L.L.C., 231 F.R.D. 134, 145-46 (S.D.N.Y. 2004), the court found that defendant waived privilege with respect to attachments to privileged emails where the defendant did not satisfy its burden of demonstrating that each attachment was privileged.

A law review article co-authored by Judge John M. Facciola and Jonathan M. Redgrave provides a detailed discussion of problems encountered with reviewing voluminous electronic information for privilege and logging withheld information. Hon. John M. Facciola & Jonathan M. Redgrave, Asserting and Challenging Privilege Claims in Modern Litigation: The Facciola-Redgrave Framework, 4 FED. CTS. L. REV. 44 (2009). The authors provide detailed suggestions for ways in which parties may use the meet and confer process, the 2006 amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and Federal Rule of Evidence 502 to avoid unnecessary and costly review and logging and propose a streamlined method for resolving legitimate disputes. See also The Sedona Conference, Commentary on Protection of Privileged ESI, Comm. 4(b) (2015); David M. Greenwald, Slaying the Traditional Privilege Log, Bloomberg BNA Big Law Business (Dec. 17, 2015); Electronic Discovery Institute, THE FEDERAL JUDGES' GUIDE TO DISCOVERY, EDITION 2.0, 2015, Ch. 7 "Privilege Review and Logging" (discussing ways to decrease the cost and burden of privilege logs); Milberg LLP & Hausfield LLP, E-Discovery Today: The Fault Lies Not in Our Rules . . ., 4 Fed. Hirt, The Quest for "Proportionality" in Electronic Discovery – Moving From Theory to Reality in Civil Litigation, 5 Fed. Cts. L. Rev. 171, 176-78, 180, 185-87, 193-96 (2011) (identifying the "meet and confer" process and multi-tiered or phased discovery as opportunities to define the scope of discovery, and advocating the implementation of the Sedona Conference Working Group on Electronic Document Retention & Production's Principles of Proportionality to civil litigation). Accord Goldstein v. FDIC, 494 B.R. 82, 88, 92 (D.D.C. 2013) (suggesting that the parties negotiate a FRE 502(d) protective order instead of preparing a detailed privilege log).

There are several practical recommendations that can be drawn from this section. First, it is important to determine what, if any, local rules or rules specific to a particular court may apply to privilege logs. Second, reaching an agreement among the parties at an early stage of litigation regarding how to log documents, including ESI, may prevent disputes later regarding the adequacy of the parties' privilege logs. Third, to the extent that the parties agree to a privilege log protocol, they should seek the court's approval and assistance by incorporating the protocol into a court order, such as a Rule 16 scheduling order or a protective order.

b. Electronic Mail and Other Electronic Data: Cost Shifting

As anyone who has litigated a complex case knows, one of the largest cost drivers is the cost associated with producing ESI, and reviewing it for privilege. See, e.g., Zubulake v. UBS Warburg L.L.C., 217 F.R.D. 309, 317-20 (S.D.N.Y. 2003); Rowe Entm't, Inc. v. William Morris Agency, Inc., 205 F.R.D. 421, 429 (S.D.N.Y. 2002); see also Manual for Complex Litigation § 11.446 (4th ed. 2011). ESI is only the latest form of discovery, which has exacerbated the excessive cost of litigation, threatening to price litigants out of court. See Mancina v. Mayflower Textile Servs. Co., 253 F.R.D. 354, 359 (D. Md. 2008) ("Although the civil justice system is not broken, it is in serious need of repair. The survey shows that the system is not working; it takes too long and costs too much. Deserving cases are not brought because the cost of pursuing them fails a rational cost-benefit test, while meritless cases, especially smaller cases, are being settled rather than being tried because it costs too much to litigate them.") (citing Am. Coll. of Trial Lawyers & Inst. for the Advancement of the Am. Legal Sys., Interim Report on the Joint Project of the American College of Trial Lawyers Task

Joseph, Trial Balloon: Federal Litigation-Where Did It Go Off Track?, 34 LITIG. 5, 6, 62 (2008) (observing that discovery costs, particularly related to ESI discovery, is partly responsible for making federal litigation “procedurally more complex, risky to prosecute, and very expensive,” causing litigants to avoid litigating in federal court); The Sedona Conference, The Sedona Conference Cooperation Proclamation 1 (2008), available at <https://thesedonaconference.org/sites/default/files/publications/The%2520Sedona%2520Conf%2520Cooperation%2520Proclamation%25201.pdf> (accessed July 2, 2023) (“The costs associated with adversarial conduct in pre-trial discovery have become a serious burden to the American judicial system. This burden rises significantly in discovery of electronically stored information (‘ESI’). In addition to rising monetary costs, courts have seen escalating motion practice, overreaching, obstruction, and extensive, but unproductive discovery disputes – in some cases precluding adjudication on the merits altogether . . .”). See also FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(5) (2006 amendments) advisory committee’s notes (“The Committee has repeatedly been advised that the risk of privilege waiver, and the work necessary to avoid it, can increase substantially because of the volume of electronically stored information.”).

Historically, the Federal Rules generally placed the burden of paying for compliance with a discovery request on the respondent, and early courts were not sympathetic to the beleaguered keeper of electronic records. See In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., Nos. 94 C 897, MDL 997, 1995 WL 360526, at *2 (N.D. Ill. June 15, 1995); Daewoo Elecs. Co. v. United States, 650 F. Supp. 1003, 1006 (Ct. Int’l Trade 1986) (“The normal and reasonable translation of electronic data into a form usable by the discovering party should be the ordinary and foreseeable burden of a respondent in the absence of a showing of extraordinary hardship.”).

However, prior to 2006, some courts were willing to shift the substantial burden, at least partially, to the party seeking electronic discovery. For example, the court in Rowe set forth a multi-factor balancing test for determining when cost-shifting is appropriate:

- (1) the specificity of the discovery requests;
- (2) the likelihood of discovering critical information;
- (3) the availability of such information from other sources;
- (4) the purposes for which the responding party maintains the requested data;
- (5) the relative benefit to the parties of obtaining the information;
- (6) the total cost associated with production;
- (7) the relative ability of each party to control costs and its incentive to do so; and
- (8) the resources available to each party.

Rowe, 205 F.R.D. at 429. Subsequently, in Zubulake v. UBS Warburg LLC, 217 F.R.D. 309, 322 (S.D.N.Y. 2003), the court set forth a similar test for cost-shifting. This test includes an analysis of:

- (1) the extent to which the request is specifically tailored to discover relevant information;
- (2) the availability of such information from other sources;
- (3) the total cost of production, compared to the amount in controversy;
- (4) the total cost of production, compared to the resources available to each party;
- (5) the relative ability of each party to control costs and its incentive to do so; and
- (6) the importance of the issues at stake in the litigation; and (7) the relative benefits to the parties of obtaining the information.

The Zubulake court modified the Rowe test to account for the requirement in Rule 26 that courts look to the “amount in controversy or the importance of the issues at stake in the litigation” in requiring production. Id. at 321; see also Hagemeyer N. Am., Inc. v. Gateway Data Scis. Corp., 222 F.R.D. 594, 602-03 (E.D. Wis. 2004) (adopting the Zubulake test).

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure were amended, first in 2006 and then in 2015, to explicitly address common issues associated with discovery. See FED. R. CIV. P. 16, 26, 34, 37 (2006 & 2015 amendments) advisory committee’s notes. The 2006 Amendments to the Federal Rules and Federal Rule of Evidence 502, enacted in 2008, resulted from an effort started in 2000 to implement rules that enable litigants to rein in the cost of discovery, generally, and electronic discovery, specifically. The 2015 Amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, effective December 1, 2015, built upon the 2006 Amendments and made further, significant changes designed to streamline litigation and reduce discovery costs by focusing on the “proportionality” of discovery. Rule 1, effective December 1, 2015, sets the tone by instructing the parties and the court that the Federal Rules should be “construed, administered, and employed . . . to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action and proceeding.” FED. R. CIV. P. 1.

Rule 26 was significantly revised to return the focus of discovery to documents and information relevant to the merits of the parties’ claims and defenses. The 2015 Amendments removed language from Rule 26 that ostensibly allowed the discovery of any relevant information so long as “the discovery appear[ed] reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.” As amended, Rule 26 provides that information is discoverable if it is both relevant and proportional to the needs of the case:

Parties may obtain discovery regarding any nonprivileged matter that is relevant to any party’s claim or defense and proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties’ relative access to relevant information, the parties’ resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit. Information within this scope of discovery need not be admissible in evidence to be discoverable.

FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(1) (amended Dec. 1, 2015). Many of the proportionality considerations in Rule 26(b)(1) were previously listed in Rule 26(b)(2)(C)(iii), although the 2015 Amendments added a new consideration—i.e., “the parties’ relative access to relevant information”—and relocated them so as to require the parties to consider them in defining the scope of discovery. This emphasis on proportionality is reflected in Rules 30, 31, and 33, which reference Rule 26(b)(1). See FED. R. CIV. P. 30, 31, 33 (2015 amendments) advisory committee’s notes.

The Federal Rules acknowledge that parties “may begin discovery without a full appreciation of the factors that bear on proportionality.” See FED. R. CIV. P. 26 (2015 amendments) advisory committee's notes. The parties' Rule 26(f) conference and scheduling and pretrial conferences with the court are intended to address this. See id. Rule 26(f) requires parties to meet and confer to discuss "any issues about preserving discoverable information" and to "develop a proposed discovery plan." FED. R. CIV. P. 26(f)(2). The parties' discovery plan must state the parties' views and proposals on "any issues about disclosure, discovery, or preservation of electronically stored information, including the form or forms in which it should be produced" and "any issues about claims of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation materials, including . . . whether to ask the court to include their agreement in an order under Federal Rule of Evidence 502." FED. R. CIV. P. 26(f)(3)(C)-(D) (amended Dec. 1, 2015).

The Federal Rules also address the actual production of ESI and the failure to preserve ESI. First, Rule 26 creates a two-tiered system for the production of information: the producing party must produce ESI that is "reasonably accessible," but it "need not provide discovery of electronically stored information from sources that the party identifies as not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or cost." See FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(2)(B) (as amended Dec. 1, 2006). A party seeking ESI that is "not reasonably accessible" may still be able to obtain the production of the information upon a showing of "good cause." See id. "The definition of 'undue burden' is an issue of local substantive law," so cases like Rowe and Zubulake may still be relevant under the amendments. See Joseph Gallagher, E-Ethics: The Ethical Dimension of the Electronic Discovery Amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 20 GEO. J. LEGAL ETHICS 613, 619 (2007). As amended in 2015, the Federal Rules explicitly allow courts to shift the costs of discovery by entering protective orders that allocate the expenses of disclosure or discovery among the parties. See FED. R. CIV. P. 26(c)(1)(B) (2015 amendments) advisory committee's notes.

Second, the Federal Rules set forth the requirements that must be satisfied before a court may award sanctions for failure to preserve ESI. Rule 37, as amended in 2015, removes language prohibiting courts from imposing sanctions for the loss of ESI "as a result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system" and instead ties the availability of sanctions to the reasonableness of a party's efforts to preserve ESI for use in litigation. Rule 37 provides that a court may award sanctions only if ESI that "should have been preserved in the anticipation or conduct of litigation is lost because a party failed to take reasonable steps to preserve it, and it cannot be restored or replaced through additional discovery." FED. R. CIV. P. 37(e). If the court finds that the information was of such importance to the litigation that its loss resulted in prejudice to another party, it may, in its discretion, order measures necessary to cure the prejudice. FED. R. CIV. P. 37(e)(1). In the event the court finds that a party acted with the "intent to deprive" another party of the information, it may impose more severe sanctions, such as presuming (or instructing the jury it may presume) that the information lost was unfavorable to the producing party, or dismissing the action or entering a default judgment. FED. R. CIV. P. 37(e)(2).

With respect to dealing with the costs of privilege reviews of ESI (as opposed to the costs of production or the consequences from failing to preserve ESI), the Federal Rules "allow the parties to define their own processes for dealing with privilege issues" Id. at 622 (2007) (citing JUDICIAL CONFERENCE COMMITTEE OF THE UNITED STATES, REPORT OF THE JUDICIAL CONFERENCE COMMITTEE ON RULES OF PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE 23, at C-54 (2005)). Rule 16 permits parties to include agreements regarding “disclosure, discovery, and preservation of electronically stored information” and privilege waiver agreements, “including agreements reached under Federal Rule of Evidence 502” as part of their scheduling orders. See FED. R. CIV. P. 16(b)(3)(B) (as amended Dec. 1, 2015). Under Rule 16, parties and judges may be able to implement “claw back” agreements, “quick peek” agreements, and a variety of other creative methods to address privilege issues. See Kindall C. James, Electronic Discovery: Substantially Increasing the Risk of Inadvertent Disclosure and the Costs of Privilege Review – Do the Proposed Amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure Help?, 52 LOY. L. REV. 839, 850-52 (2006) (defining and discussing clawback and quick-peek agreements).

For creative cost- and burden-shifting agreements and decisions, see:

Rajala v. McGuire Woods, LLP, No. 08-2638-CM-DJW, 2010 WL 2949582, at *6-7 (D. Kan. July 22, 2010). Where the parties could not agree on a claw back provision, the court entered one for them. The court held that it had the authority to do this under Federal Rule of Evidence 502. Furthermore, the court decided that this is the kind of case that would benefit from a claw back provision: (1) discovery would include an extensive amount of ESI; (2) McGuire Woods was a large law firm, and, thus, there was a risk that it would disclose other clients’ privileged communications and materials; and (3) there had already been numerous discovery motions in the case and a claw back provision might help prevent further disputes.

Wiginton v. CB Richard Ellis, Inc., 229 F.R.D. 568, 577 (N.D. Ill. 2004). Following Rowe and Zubulake and allocating to the plaintiff seeking production 75 percent of the cost of restoring backup tapes, searching data, and transferring it to an electronic data viewer, where expense of production was enormous and only limited numbers of emails would be responsive.

Convolve, Inc. v. Compaq Computer Corp., 223 F.R.D. 162, 169-70 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). Denying Convolve’s request for access to Compaq’s hard drives, servers, and databases where Compaq’s production of documents had “for the most part conformed” to the court-appointed Special Master’s orders.

Hagemeyer N. Am., Inc. v. Gateway Data Scis. Corp., 222 F.R.D. 594, 603 (E.D. Wis. 2004). Allowing defendant to restore only a sample of requested backup tapes and requiring the parties to make additional submissions addressing whether the burden of producing all of the backup tapes would be proportionate to the probable benefit to the plaintiff.

Medtronic Sofamor Danek, Inc. v. Michelson, 229 F.R.D. 550, 561 (W.D. Tenn. 2003). Ordering the production of a sample of 993 back-up tapes with a 61-terabyte data volume where the parties agreed the tapes probably contained relevant data and requiring the requesting party to assume 40 percent of the cost of producing the sample data and the entire cost of additional requested data.

Murphy Oil USA, Inc. v. Fluor Daniel, Inc., No. Civ. A. 99-3564, 2002 WL 246439, at *3-9 (E.D. La. Feb. 19, 2002). Following Rowe and shifting cost of reconstituting backup data to the requesting party, but refusing to shift the responding parties’ cost of conducting a privilege review of these documents.

In re Commercial Fin. Servs., Inc., 247 B.R. 828, 838, 847-56 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 2000). Entering a protective order in which debtor could allow inspection of documents subject to confidentiality agreements and holding that such an arrangement would not affect a waiver of the attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine. Debtor had over 8,000 bankers’ boxes of documents and 8,500 magnetic tapes of information that it could not review for privilege. The court observed that “[i]n the absence of a protective order, CFS is justifiably unwilling to determine whether to waive privileges in any particular documents until all have been reviewed. Such a review would result in a significant delay in the administration of the estate and would be extremely costly to the estate.” The court concluded that CFS would not be disclosing documents for tactical advantage, but concluded that, if it did in the future, such action would create a waiver.

Federal Rule of Evidence 502 (“FRE 502”) plays an important role in streamlining discovery and is referenced explicitly in the amended Federal Rules. Prior to the adoption of FRE 502, there was no assurance that a non-waiver agreement between the parties, or even a court order finding no waiver, would be binding in other cases involving different litigation adversaries. See, e.g., Hopson v. Mayor & City Council of Balt., 232 F.R.D. 228, 235 (D. Md. 2005) (stating that, even if non-waiver agreements are enforceable between the parties, “it is questionable whether they are effective against third-parties”); David M. Greenwald, Robert R. Stauffer & Erin R. Schrantz, New Federal Rule of Evidence 502: A Tool for Minimizing the Cost of Discovery, Bloomberg Law Reports (Litigation), Vol. 3, No. 4, Jan. 26, 2009.

FRE 502, signed into law September 19, 2008, provides a mechanism for enforcing parties’ non-waiver agreements and court rulings regarding waiver on other proceedings and other parties. The purpose of FRE 502 is to “respond to widespread complaint[s] that litigation costs necessary to protect against waiver of attorney-client privilege or work product have become prohibitive.” FED. R. EVID. 502 advisory committee’s note. In crafting FRE 502, the “Advisory Committee noted that the existing law on the effect of inadvertent disclosures and on the scope of waiver is far from consistent” and that agreements between parties were “unlikely to decrease the costs of discovery due to the ineffectiveness of such agreements as to persons not party to them.” Letter from Lee H. Rosenthal, Chair, Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure, to Honorable Patrick J. Leahy, Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, and Senator Arlen Specter, Ranking Member, Committee on the Judiciary, at 3 (Sept. 26, 2007). The Advisory Committee also recognized that the increased use of email and electronic media has exacerbated the waiver problem, and that although “most documents produced during discovery have little value, lawyers must nevertheless conduct exhaustive reviews to prevent the inadvertent disclosure of privileged material.” S. REP. NO. 110-264, pt. 1, at 2 (2008). Prior to adoption, Proposed FRE 502 had strong support from Congress, major legal organizations, and courts. See id.; see also Victor Stanley Inc. v. Creative Pipe, Inc., 250 F.R.D. 251, 259 n.5 (D. Md. 2008) (“Federal Evidence Rule 502 would solve the problems Hopson discussed and protect against privilege waiver . . . if the parties entered into a non-waiver agreement that meets the requirement of the proposed rule . . .”).

FRE 502 solves the discovery problems recognized in Hopson by allowing parties to enter into non-waiver agreements that will bind third parties. Under FRE 502(d), when a confidentiality order governing the consequences of disclosure of privileged information in a case is entered in a federal proceeding, the agreement is enforceable against non-parties in any other federal or state proceeding. FED. R. EVID. 502(d). The agreement must be entered as a court order to be enforceable against non-litigants, FRE 502(e), and the terms of the order, not the agreement, ultimately control. FED. R. EVID. 502(d) advisory committee’s note. This means a court order that does not actually memorialize the parties’ agreement will control, and parties must be careful to ensure the court’s order accurately reflects their bargain. See id.

FRE 502 is meant to be flexible. The committee notes contemplate that parties may seek a court order providing for the return of documents without waiver irrespective of the care taken by the disclosing party. Id. The goal is to provide parties with predictable protection against waiver, so they may plan in advance to limit the costs of production. Id.; see also Containment Tech. Grp. v. Am. Soc’y of Health Sys. Pharmacists, No. 1:07-cv-997-DFH-TAB, 2008 WL 4545310, at *4 (S.D. Ind. Oct. 10, 2008) (stating that new FRE 502 “represents a specific response to the costs involved in extensive document review necessitated by electronic discovery”). FRE 502 applies to all proceedings commenced after its enactment and to all pending proceedings insofar as it is just and practicable. Pub. L. The best practice for minimizing discovery costs related to ESI is to conduct an early case assessment, seek to reach agreement with the opposing party regarding discovery that is proportional to the amount in controversy, and seek the assistance of the court in adopting discovery protocols, including phased discovery that will enable efficient development of the case toward trial. As Judge Paul Grimm explained in detail in Mancia v. Mayflower Textile Services Co., 253 F.R.D. 354, 357-58 (D. Md. 2008), Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(g) has long required that litigants engage in pretrial discovery in a reasonable manner that avoids excessive discovery or discovery that is propounded for the purpose of harassment, delay, or imposing a needless increase in the cost of litigation. As Judge Grimm highlights in his opinion, The Sedona Conference’s Cooperation Proclamation is a step toward developing a process by which parties may minimize the onerous costs of discovery without weakening the adversary system of dispute resolution. Id. at 361, 363. See also Tamburo v. Dworkin, No. 04 C 3317, 2010 WL 4867346, at *3 (N.D. Ill. John M. Facciola & Jonathan M. Redgrave, Asserting and Challenging Privilege Claims in Modern Litigation: The Facciola-Redgrave Framework, 4 FED. CTS. L. REV. 44 (2009). As described above, the 2015 Amendments to the Federal Rules have taken an important step in formalizing some of the best practices by instructing parties to consider the scope of discovery and privilege agreements early in the litigation. See FED. R. CIV. P. 16 (2015 amendments) advisory committee’s notes.

c. In Camera Review

Preliminary questions pertaining to the existence of the privilege are to be decided by the court. FED. R. EVID. 104(a). At common law, a judge could not require disclosure of communications in order to make a determination of their privileged status. See 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5507 (1st ed. West 2019); see also CAL. EVID. CODE § 915 (West 2019). However, in almost every case, federal courts have supported the power of the judge to order disclosure of documents for the court's review in order to assess a claim of privilege.

See:

United States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554, 568-69 (1989) (internal citations omitted). "This Court has approved the practice of requiring parties who seek to avoid disclosure of documents to make the documents available for in camera inspection."

In re Grand Jury Subpoena (Mr. S.), 662 F.3d 65, 70 (1st Cir. 2011). Upholding the district court's use of in camera review of subpoenaed documents, which the government contested were subject to the attorney-client privilege, stating that "in camera reviews should be encouraged," and observing that "federal courts commonly—and appropriately—conduct such reviews to determine whether particular documents are or are not privileged."

Am. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 406 F.3d 867, 878-80 (7th Cir. 2005). Detailing an extensive discovery fight that ended in a magistrate's review of a sample of disputed documents listed on a privilege log. After the magistrate concluded that the number of non-privileged documents in the sample implied bad faith, he ordered production of all documents on the log. The Seventh Circuit reversed, holding that there was no finding of bad faith and indicating that in camera inspection of all documents on the log would have been more appropriate.

NLRB v. Interbake Foods LLC, 637 F.3d 492, 495 (4th Cir. 2011). Court held that, although an administrative law judge may make rulings on privilege issues, only an Article III judge may enforce such orders. Here, the ALJ ordered company to produce documents for in camera review by the ALJ, the company refused to comply, and the NLRB filed an application with the district court to compel compliance with the subpoena and to order the company to submit documents to the ALJ for in camera review. The district court held that only an Article III court may determine whether subpoenaed documents are protected by privilege. On appeal, the Fourth Circuit clarified the role of an ALJ: While an ALJ may rule on issues of privilege, only an Article III court may enforce an administrative order. In making its privilege determination, the court must evaluate the claims of privilege and, if necessary, conduct its own in camera review. The court may not delegate the task of conducting an in camera review to the ALJ.

Some courts have held that it is within a district court's power to order the production of documents for in camera review sua sponte. See, e.g., Renner v. Chase Manhattan Bank, No. 98 Civ. 926(CSH), 2001 WL 1819215, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. July 13, 2001) (ordering sua sponte that defendants submit to the Court for in camera inspection all documents withheld on the basis of attorney client privilege); Fed. Election Comm'n v. Christian Coal., 178 F.R.D. 456, 462-63 (E.D. Va. 1998) (party's due process rights were not violated by magistrate judge's in camera review of purportedly privileged documents). Courts also have the discretion to reject a party's request for in camera review, particularly where it finds that review is unnecessary and a waste of judicial resources. See King v. Univ. Healthcare Sys., L.C., 645 F.3d 713, 720-21 (5th Cir. 2011) (district court did not err in declining to engage in a full in camera review of documents for which plaintiff contested the applicability of the attorney-client privilege; court relied on privilege log showing that documents were clearly covered by the privilege and found that plaintiff offered only speculation that the documents were not covered); Abbott Labs. v. Andrx Pharm., Inc., 241 F.R.D. 480, 489 (N.D. Ill. 2007) (suggesting that a court may refuse to conduct in camera review after considering factors, including the volume of materials to be reviewed); Guy v. United Healthcare Corp., 154 F.R.D. 172, 176 (S.D. Ohio 1993). A court may refuse to conduct in camera review if the party asserting the privilege has not met its burden. See Johnson v. Couturier, Nos. CIV S-05-2046, S-08-2732, 2009 WL 649791, at *2 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 2009) (refusing to conduct in camera review of documents withheld by defendant where plaintiff made a prima facie showing that the attorney-client privilege did not apply and defendant provided no evidence in response; merely asserting the privilege and requesting in camera review is not sufficient when the opposing party has presented facts that an exception to the privilege applies); Bowne of N.Y.C., Inc. v. AmBase Corp., 150 F.R.D. 465, 475 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (review is not to be routinely undertaken, particularly in a case involving a substantial volume of documents, as a substitute for a party's submission of an adequate record in support of its privilege claims).

While in camera inspection may be used by a federal court to determine whether the privilege applies to certain documents, submitting documents to the court for in camera inspection may not be sufficient in and of itself to establish the attorney-client privilege. See Navigant Consulting, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 220 F.R.D. 467, 473-74 (N.D. Tex. 2004) (“Although a privilege log and an in camera review of documents may assist the court in conducting its analysis, a party asserting the privilege still must provide a detailed description of the materials in dispute and state specific and precise reasons for their claim of protection from disclosure.”) (internal citations and quotations omitted); Claude P. Bamberger Int’l, Inc. v. Rhom & Haas Co., No. Civ. 96-1041(WGB), 1997 WL 33768546, at *3 (D.N.J. Aug. 12, 1997) (“submission of the memorandum for an in camera review is not a substitute for the proper privilege log”). Because in camera inspection consumes the court’s time, parties should exercise care to ensure that in camera inspection is necessary to establish the privilege without revealing privileged information to an adversary. Unnecessary requests for in camera inspection will likely frustrate the court and have negative results. See, e.g., Victor Stanley, Inc. v. Creative Pipe, Inc., 250 F.R.D. 251, 266 (D. Md. 2008) (“It should go without saying that the court should never be required to undertake in camera review unless the parties have first properly asserted privilege/protection, then provided sufficient factual information to justify the privilege/protection claimed for each document, and, finally, met and conferred in a good faith effort to resolve any disputes without court intervention.”); Conopco v. Wein, No. 05 Civ. 09899, 2007 WL 1859757, at *2-3 (S.D.N.Y. June 28, 2007) (refusing to undertake in camera review or order production of thousands of documents where requesting attorney was making “much ado about nothing” and the documents were “voluminous”); B.F.G. of Ill., Inc. v. Ameritech Corp., No. 99 C 4604, 2001 WL 1414468, at *7 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 13, 2001) (“Unless in-house counsel and litigation counsel are scrupulous in their assertion of privilege, the courts will be asked to review all documents in which an in-house attorney’s involvement is the basis for assertion of privilege or work product. That would impose an unbearable burden Thus, where the court finds that a party used in-house counsel to apply a veneer of privilege to non-privileged business communications, the court should impose costs on that party.”).

d. Maintaining the Privilege After Government Seizure of Documents or Other Monitoring of Communications

In certain circumstances, the government may seize files that are potentially subject to the attorney-client privilege, whether from a law office or otherwise. Where such a seizure is made pursuant to a valid warrant, courts have generally approved the government's practice of conducting an initial review of the documents with a "privilege team" of attorneys not involved in the investigation. However, courts have raised alarm when the government's filter protocols sidestep defense counsel and the court, in disregard of a defendant's right to assert the attorney-client privilege. And while several federal appellate courts have blessed the government's use of filter teams as a general practice, the Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Eleventh Circuits have signaled that only filter team protocols with significant safeguards will survive judicial scrutiny—even if the court has to create those safeguards itself.

See:

United States v. Scarfo, 41 F.4th 136, 174 (3d Cir. 2022) Noting that "[t]he use of filter teams is an acceptable method of protecting constitutional privileges" but expressly declining to rule on the propriety of the protocol that allowed unilateral determinations by the filter teams.

In re Sealed Search Warrant & Application for a Warrant by Tel. or Other Reliable Elec. Means, 11 F.4th 1235, 1249 (11th Cir. 2021) (collecting cases). District court did not abuse its discretion by modifying filter team protocol to allow privilege holder to conduct initial privilege review and requiring either privilege holder permission or court order for any privileged documents to be released to the investigation team.

Harbor Healthcare Sys., L.P. v. United States, 5 F.4th 593 (5th Cir. 2021). The district court incorrectly concluded that the government did not show a "callous disregard" for a party's rights simply because it obtained a search warrant prior to seizing privileged materials. Despite knowing that the office and computer contained attorney-client privileged documents and attorney work product, the government did not seek express prior authorization from the issuing Magistrate Judge for the seizure of privileged materials.

In re Search Warrant Issued June 13, 2019, 942 F.3d 159 (4th Cir. 2019). Court rejected filter team protocol that allowed filter team to forward purportedly nonprivileged documents to government investigation team, contact the privilege holder to seek an agreement on potentially privileged documents, and turn over disputed documents to the court for final determination.

In re Search of Elec. Comm's in the Acct. of chakafattah@gmail.com at Internet Serv. Provider Google, Inc., 802 F.3d 516, 530 n.53 (3d Cir. 2015). "[A] court always retains the prerogative to require the use of a special master or reviewing the seized documents in camera itself."

In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 454 F.3d 511, 523-524 (6th Cir. 2006). The court rejected taint team protocol that allowed taint team to turn over potentially privileged documents to the court for final determination, and required privilege holders to prove privilege applied on a case-by-case basis. The Court found that the need for secrecy surrounding grand jury proceedings and investigation of criminal conduct did not outweigh an individual's privilege protections.

United States v. Richey, 605 F.Supp.3d 891 (S.D. Miss. 2022). The government's filter team unilaterally determined what was and was not privileged and released those documents to the prosecution team, without notice to defense counsel. The court vacated the government's filter team protocol, ordered the prosecution team to return the original seized documents to the filter team and to destroy all copies in their possession, and enjoined the government from taking further action until the court approved a new protocol. Filter teams present “inevitable and reasonably foreseeable risks to privilege;” as a result “courts necessarily view filter teams with a certain level of suspicion.

United States v. Vepuri, 585 F.Supp.3d 760, 764 (E.D. Pa. 2021). A government protocol that permitted the filter team to provide the prosecution team with “all materials it deem[ed] not to be privileged without any opportunity for the defendant to mount a challenge” was improper, and the court admonished the government that the “authority to determine issues of privilege belongs to the courts and the courts alone.” The court’s modified protocol gave the defendant the opportunity to review seized materials and assert privilege. Any disputes were to be resolved by a court-appointed special master at the government’s expense.

United States v. Jackson, No. 07-0035(RWR), 2007 WL 3230140, at *5-6 (D.D.C. Oct. 30, 2007) Court applied four-factor test and granted criminal defendant’s request for a special master to review files rather than a government “taint team.”

United States v. Stewart, No. 02 CR 396 JGK, 2002 WL 1300059, at *6-7 (S.D.N.Y. June 11, 2002) Court appointed a special master to review files, rather than a privilege team as requested by the government, and reviewed cases in which ethical firewalls of privilege teams became problematic.

e. Imposition of Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Discovery Rules

Courts have wide discretion in forming discovery sanctions, which may include the imposition of costs associated with bringing a motion to compel, a waiver of the privilege, the reversal of evidentiary presumptions, the barring of testimony, or resolution of issues against the party improperly asserting the privilege. Residential Funding Corp. v. DeGeorge Fin. Corp., 306 F.3d 99, 107 (2d Cir. 2002) (noting wide discretion vested in district court to impose discovery sanctions); Mancia v. Mayflower Textile Servs. Co., 253 F.R.D. 354, 357 (D. Md. 2008) (“If a lawyer or party makes a Rule 26(g) certification that violates the rule, without substantial justification, the court (on motion, or sua sponte) must impose an appropriate sanction, which may include an order to pay reasonable expenses and attorney’s fees, caused by the violation.”). In extreme cases, a court may order dismissal of an entire case or enter a directed verdict in favor of a plaintiff where the defendant fails to comply with discovery obligations. See Ponte v. Sage Bank, No. 14-115 S, 2015 WL 5568087, at *3-4 (D.R.I. Sept. 22, 2015) (court may enter a sanction of dismissal against plaintiff who, after receiving inadvertently disclosed privileged material, used that material to the detriment of defendant and defied the court’s order for the return of the privileged material); Ridge Chrysler Jeep, L.L.C. v. DaimlerChrysler Fin. Servs., 516 F.3d 623, 625-26 (7th Cir. 2008) (affirming dismissal and stating “[n]either a statute nor the Constitution requires an elevated burden for dismissal as a sanction, when the burden in the underlying suit is the preponderance of the evidence”); Henry v. Onsa, No. 05-2406 HHK/DAR, 2008 WL 552627, at *3 (D.D.C. Feb. 27, 2008) (dismissal was warranted and lesser sanctions would have been insufficient where defendants failed to provide any discovery information). Accord Ramirez v. T&H Lemont, Inc., 845 F.3d 772, 781 (7th Cir. 2016) (in Title VII action involving allegations of witness tampering, holding that in order for a court to dismiss a case as a sanction for discovery-related misconduct, the misconduct needs to be established only by a preponderance of the evidence, and not by clear and convincing evidence) (overruling Maynard v. Nygren, 332 F.3d 462, 468 (7th Cir. 2003)). But see ClearValue, Inc. v. Pearl River Polymers, Inc., 560 F.3d 1291, 1306-07 (Fed. Cir. 2009) (following Fifth Circuit precedent that a district court must impose the least severe sanction that will achieve the deterrent value of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 37 and reversing non-monetary sanctions, including dismissal, entered as sanction for discovery abuse but upholding the majority of monetary sanctions).

Stengart v. Loving Care Agency, Inc., 990 A.2d 650 (N.J. 2010). Defendant hired a computer forensic expert to recover all files stored on plaintiff’s laptop, which included copies of the emails exchanged with her attorney that were automatically saved to the laptop’s hard drive in the form of temporary Internet files. At least two of defendant’s outside attorneys reviewed the emails but did not advise opposing counsel about the emails until months later, when they responded to plaintiff’s interrogatories. The court held that defendant’s counsel’s review of the privileged emails and use of the contents of at least one email violated New Jersey Rule of Professional Conduct 4.4(b), which provides that a “lawyer who receives a document and has reasonable cause to believe that the document was inadvertently sent shall not read the document or, if he or she has begun to do so, shall stop reading the document, promptly notify the sender, and return the document to the sender.” The court remanded the case to the trial court to determine the appropriate sanction.

Discovery sanctions can also be imposed where the recipient of discovery responses fails to meet its ethical and procedural responsibilities. Ethical rules in many jurisdictions place attorneys under a professional obligation, upon identifying the privileged nature of documents, to cease review of the documents and inform the privilege holder. See, e.g., COLO. RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 4.4(c) (West 2017) (“Unless otherwise permitted by court order, a lawyer who receives a document relating to the representation of the lawyer’s client and who, before reviewing the document, receives notice from the sender that the document was inadvertently sent, shall not examine the document and shall abide by the sender’s instructions as to its disposition.”); N.J. RULES OF PROF’L RESPONSIBILITY R. 4.4(b) (West 2017) (“A lawyer who receives a document and has reasonable cause to believe that the document was inadvertently sent shall not read the document or, if he or she has begun to do so, shall stop reading the document, promptly notify the sender, and return the document to the sender.”). See also N.Y. City Bar Ass’n Comm. On Prof’l Ethics, Op. 2012-1 (2012) (an opinion from the New York City Bar Association Committee on Professional ethics stating that a lawyer who receives a document that was sent by mistake and continues to read the document if it contains confidential or privileged information may be subject to court-imposed sanctions, including disqualification and evidence preclusion).

In October 2005, the American Bar Association (“ABA”) changed its guidance for attorneys who receive privileged documents inadvertently produced by opposing counsel. ABA Comm. on Ethics & Prof’l Responsibility, Formal Op. 05-437 (2005). Previously, the ABA had instructed that attorneys “must refrain from viewing such materials” except “to the extent necessary to determine the manner in which to proceed” and “should completely refrain from using the materials until a court makes a determination as to their proper disposition.” ABA Comm. on Ethics & Prof’l Responsibility, Formal Op. 92-368 (1992) (discussing the inadvertent disclosure of confidential materials). In 2006, the ABA explained that this advice “was influenced by principles involving the protection of confidentiality, the inviolability of the attorney-client privilege, the law governing bailments and misdirected property, and general considerations of common sense, reciprocity, and professional courtesy,” which the ABA now recognized were “beyond the scope of the Rules.” ABA Comm. on Ethics & Prof’l Responsibility, Formal Op. 06-440 (2006). The new guidance recognizes that the plain language of Rule 4.4(b) of the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct “requires only that a lawyer who receives a document relating to the representation of the lawyer’s client and who knows or reasonably should know that the document was inadvertently sent shall promptly notify the sender. The Rule does not require refraining from reviewing the materials or abiding by instructions of the sender.” Id. The 2006 opinion notes that “the Rules do not exhaust the moral and ethical considerations that should inform a lawyer,” and “the considerations that influenced the Committee in Formal Opinion 92-368, which carried over to Formal Opinion 94-382, are part of the broader perspective that may guide a lawyer’s conduct in the situations addressed in those opinions.” Id.; see also DEL. LAWYERS’ RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 4.4 cmt. 2 (2003) (“Whether the lawyer is required to take additional steps, such as returning the original document, is a matter of law beyond the scope of these Rules”); FLA. RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 4-4.4(b) (2006) (same); WASH. RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 4.4(b) cmt. 2 (2013) (same).

Whether the applicable rule is the limited obligation to notify opposing counsel or a stricter approach that forbids viewing or using the document, an attorney who receives privileged information inadvertently produced by opposing counsel should tread carefully. Several courts have been willing to impose sanctions – sometimes as severe as the dismissal of claims – for improper conduct in such situations. See, e.g., Maldonado v. N.J. ex rel. Admin. Office of Courts, 225 F.R.D. 120, 138 (D.N.J. 2004) (“New Jersey Rules of Professional Conduct also subscribe to the ‘cease, notify, and return’ steps as appropriate ethical conduct.”); Arnold v. Cargill Inc., No. 01-2086 (DWF/AJB), 2004 WL 2203410, at *10 (D. Minn. Sept. 24, 2004); George v. Indus. Maint. Corp., 305 F. Supp. 2d 537, 539 (D.V.I. 2002); Richards v. Jain, 168 F. f. Obtaining Appellate Review of a Court's Decision Rejecting a Claim of Privilege in Federal Courts

Discovery orders directing a party to the litigation to disclose communications protected by the attorney-client privilege are not final orders immediately appealable pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. However, in some instances, particularly where a discovery order is directed at someone other than the holder of the privilege, discovery orders directing non-parties to disclose privileged communications may be appealed immediately. See Perlman v. United States, 247 U.S. 7, 12-15 (1918). The justification for this exception lies in the lack of incentive of the directed party to risk contempt in protecting another's claim to the privilege.

See:

Doe No. 1 v. United States, 749 F.3d 999, 1006-07 (11th Cir. 2014). Court had jurisdiction to decide interlocutory appeal by criminal defense attorneys regarding an adverse privilege ruling relating to documents held by the government where defense counsel would not be able to appeal a final judgment against the government and would otherwise be left "without an avenue to appeal the denial of their claims of privilege."

In re Grand Jury, 705 F.3d 133, 145-46, 149 (3d Cir. 2012). Mohawk did not narrow the Perlman doctrine in the grand jury context, and an immediate appeal of an adverse ruling was permitted under Perlman because an appellate court has jurisdiction to hear an interlocutory appeal of a privilege ruling where the privilege holder is not in the possession of the documents, and the party that has possession does not have an interest in the privilege such that they would risk contempt to protect the privilege holders' interests.

United States v. Krane, 625 F.3d 568, 572-73 (9th Cir. 2010). The Perlman doctrine survives Mohawk Industries, Inc. v. Carpenter, 130 S. Ct. 599 (2009), because "Perlman and Mohawk are not in tension," and finding that appeal would be the only opportunity for the third party to seek review of the district court's order adverse to its claims of privilege.

Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist. 100, 600 F.3d 612, 617-18 (7th Cir. 2010). Court reiterated that, under Seventh Circuit precedent, a non-party subject to a discovery order rejecting a privilege claim may obtain immediate review of a discovery order because he has no remedy at the end of the litigation, but noting that it was unclear whether that reasoning survived after Mohawk.

John B. v. Goetz, 531 F.3d 448, 458 n.6 (6th Cir. 2008). Noting that Perlman applies to the holder of the privilege but this does not include the state as a custodian of records.

In re Air Crash at Belle Harbor, N.Y. on Nov. 12, 2001, 490 F.3d 99, 106 (2d Cir. 2007). Perlman applies only when holder of the privilege appeals order regarding a subpoena directed at someone else and does not apply when appealing party has the power to comply or not comply with the subpoena.

In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 288 F.3d 83, 90 n.9 (3d Cir. 2002). Distinguishing Perlman.

FDIC v. Ogden Corp., 202 F.3d 454, 459-60 (1st Cir. 2000). “A substantial privilege claim that cannot effectively be tested by the privilege-holder through a contemptuous refusal ordinarily will qualify for immediate review if the claim otherwise would be lost.”

But see:

Drummond Co., Inc. v. Collingsworth, 816 F.3d 1319, 1327 (11th Cir. 2016). There is no immediate appeal from an adverse privilege determination in connection with responding to a third-party subpoena.

United States v. Copar Pumice Co., 714 F.3d 1197, 1208-09 (10th Cir. 2013). Perlman doctrine was inapplicable where the privilege holder was a party to the action, and that although the finality doctrine may still be recognized, it may be invoked only in truly unique circumstances and not where the dispute can adequately be reviewed on appeal from a final judgment.

Wilson v. O'Brien, 621 F.3d 641 (7th Cir. 2010). Where a student attorney was deposed about an interview he conducted of another individual who took responsibility for plaintiff's criminal acts, and during the deposition the student attorney refused to answer certain questions on grounds of privilege but then answered those questions in a hearing with the district court, the Seventh Circuit noted that the Mohawk decision “calls Perlman and its successors into question” and held that the appeal was moot because “[i]nterlocutory review permits a decision before the cat is out of the bag” and the student attorney had already disclosed the information.

Cf.:

In re Naranjo, 768 F.3d 332, 343-44, 346 (4th Cir. 2014). Drawing distinction between adverse privilege rulings on “ancillary” Rule 45, which are not subject to immediate appeal, and adverse privilege rulings relating to discovery requests under 28 U.S.C. § 1782, which are immediately appealable because they are a “sufficiently final order” to convey subject matter jurisdiction to the appellate court.

The United States Supreme Court has held that disclosure orders directed to parties to litigation that are adverse to the attorney-client privilege do not qualify for immediate appeal under the collateral order doctrine. Mohawk Indus., Inc. v. Carpenter, 130 S. Ct. 599, 609 (2009). The Court reasoned that “[a]ppellate courts can remedy the improper disclosure of privileged material in the same way they remedy a host of other erroneous evidentiary rulings: by vacating an adverse judgment and remanding for a new trial in which the protected material and its fruits are excluded from evidence.” Id. at 607. Mohawk resolved a circuit split and abrogated the decisions of several circuits that previously held that orders requiring the disclosure of privileged communications may be appealed as collateral orders. See In re Napster, Inc. Copyright Litig., 479 F.3d 1078, 1088-89 (9th Cir. 2007); United States v. Philip Morris Inc., 314 F.3d 612, 620-21 (D.C. Cir. 2003); In re Ford Motor Co., 110 F.3d 954, 957 (3d Cir. 1997).

For parties who wish to maintain the confidentiality of a privileged communication, there may be other options: the Mohawk Court noted that a party may ask the district court to certify the issue for interlocutory appeal, may seek a writ of mandamus, or may withhold the material and appeal a resulting order of contempt, at least where the order of contempt is criminal in nature. Id. at 607-08.

(1) Appeal from Contempt Citation

In Mohawk Industries, Inc. v. Carpenter, the United States Supreme Court indicated that a party may obtain immediate appellate review of an adverse attorney-client privilege ruling by disobeying a disclosure order and incurring a contempt citation. 130 S. Ct. 599, 608 (2009). However, the Court suggested that civil contempt may not be sufficient: “The party can then appeal directly from that ruling, at least when the contempt citation can be characterized as a criminal punishment.” Id. In United States v. Myers, the Fourth Circuit discussed Mohawk and held that it could not immediately review a civil contempt order for disobeying a discovery order. 593 F.3d 338 (4th Cir. 2010). See also In re Grand Jury, 705 F.3d 133, 146-47 (3d Cir. 2012) (Perlman doctrine is still viable because Mohawk did not directly overrule Perlman).

Prior to Mohawk, some courts did not distinguish between civil and criminal contempt when allowing immediate review. See, e.g., In Re Keeper of Records (XYZ Corp.), 348 F.3d 16, 21 (1st Cir. 2003); United States v. Almani, 169 F.3d 1189 (9th Cir. 1999). However, many courts limited immediate appeal to criminal contempt orders. See, e.g., Byrd v. Reno, 180 F.3d 298, 301 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (despite the confusion in case law on the issue, the Supreme Court has not overruled precedent by holding that a party may obtain review of civil contempt); In re Joint E. & S. Asbestos Litig., 22 F.3d 755, 764-65 (7th Cir. 1994) (holding that an order for civil contempt enforcing a discovery order is not appealable because it is not a final decision for the purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 1291); see also 15B CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 3914.23 n.46 (2d ed. West 2019).

Non-parties, however, may appeal both civil and criminal contempt orders. Cacique, Inc. v. Robert Reiser & Co., 169 F.3d 619, 622 (9th Cir. 1999) (“A contempt order and imposition of sanctions on a non-party for failure to obey a discovery order or subpoena is a final order for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 1291.”); Petersen v. Douglas Cnty. Bank & Trust Co., 967 F.2d 1186, 1188 (8th Cir. 1992) (“An order finding a nonparty witness in contempt of court is appealable even if final judgment has not been entered in the underlying action.”); 15B CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 3914.23 (2d ed. West 2019).

(2) Mandamus

Immediate appellate review may be obtained by filing a petition for a writ of mandamus in the appellate court. “Mandamus provides the most direct route around the rule that generally bars final judgment appeals from discovery orders.” 15B CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 3914.23 (2d ed. West 2019). While a writ of mandamus is an extraordinary remedy, some circuit courts have found that the potential irreversible harm that a party may incur if it is directed in error to turn over a privileged communication justifies the issuance of the writ.

See:

In re Kellogg Brown & Root, Inc., 756 F.3d 754, 760-63 (D.C. Cir. 2014). Granting petition for writ of mandamus, finding that district court’s ruling that internal investigation into alleged breaches of company’s Code of Business Conduct was not privileged under the attorney-client privilege would “vastly diminish the attorney-client privilege in the business setting.

United States v. Jicarilla Apache Nation, 564 U.S. 162, 165, 131 S. Ct. 2313, 2318 (2011). Granting petition for writ of mandamus filed by government to prevent disclosure of privileged documents, and holding that the fiduciary exception did not apply to the general trust relationship between the United States and the Indian tribes.

Hernandez v. Tanninen, 604 F.3d 1095, 1101-02 (9th Cir. 2010). Court granted writ of mandamus where it found that the trial court erred by holding there was a blanket waiver of privilege between a plaintiff and his former attorney, noting that “[t]he finding of a blanket waiver of both privileges [attorney-client and work product] could result in matters far beyond the scope of the waiver being disclosed, including case strategy, the strengths and weaknesses of [plaintiff’s] claims, and all communications between [plaintiff’s former attorney and plaintiff]” and that “[t]he breadth of the waiver finding, untethered to the subject-matter disclosed, constitutes a particularly injurious privilege ruling.”

In re United States, 590 F.3d 1305, 1312-13 (Fed. Cir. 2009), cert. granted, 79 U.S.L.W. 3210 (U.S. Jan. 7, 2011), and argued (Apr. 20, 2011). In a matter of first impression, granting writ of mandamus to determine whether the fiduciary exception to the attorney-client privilege applies in tribal trust cases.

In re Cnty. of Erie, No. 07-5702-op, 2008 WL 4554920, at *3 (2d Cir. Oct. 14, 2008). Reiterating the long standing rule that “the potential invasion of a privilege appropriately calls forth a writ of mandamus.”

In re Avantel, S.A., 343 F.3d 311, 317 (5th Cir. 2003). Mandamus was appropriate where district court erred in discovery order that would not be reviewable on appeal.

In re Spalding Sports Worldwide, Inc., 203 F.3d 800, 804 (Fed. Cir. 2000). Court issued writ of mandamus vacating district court order directing the disclosure of patent invention record that was protected by the attorney-client privilege.

Rhone-Poulenc Rorer Inc. v. Home Indem. Co., 32 F.3d 851, 866 (3d Cir. 1994). Court issued writ of mandamus to vacate district court’s order finding that plaintiff waived the attorney-client privilege.

In re Bieter Co., 16 F.3d 929, 931 (8th Cir. 1994). Court issued writ to vacate order compelling disclosure of privileged communications.

Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A. v. Turner & Newall, P.L.C., 964 F.2d 159, 163 (2d Cir. 1992). Court issued writ of mandamus to vacate order directing defendant to disclose privileged communications without the district court first determining the merits of defendant's claim of privilege.

In Chase Manhattan Bank, the court enumerated three factors as prerequisites for mandamus review of discovery orders directing the disclosure of privileged communications: “(i) an issue of importance and of first impression is raised; (ii) the privilege will be lost in the particular case if review must await a final judgment; and (iii) immediate resolution will avoid the development of discovery practices or doctrine undermining the privilege.” 964 F.2d at 163; see also In re Bieter Co., 16 F.3d at 931 (adopting same three criteria); In re Burlington N., Inc., 822 F.2d 518, 523 (5th Cir. 1987) (mandamus review appropriate where documents at issue went to the heart of the controversy, erroneous disclosure of documents could have been irreparable, and the district court's order turned on legal questions appropriate for appellate review). But see In re Dow Corning Corp., 261 F.3d 280, 285 (2d Cir. 2001) (noting that mandamus was rarely granted in the Second Circuit and declining to grant relief from erroneous district court order compelling disclosure of privileged communication where exceptions to the privilege might apply but were not addressed below); In re Occidental Petroleum Corp., 217 F.3d 293, 295-96 (5th Cir. 2000) (distinguishing Burlington Northern, cited above, because that decision involved a clear error of law and called for an important and far-reaching solution, while the order at issue applied to an extraordinary number of documents).

(3) Permissive Interlocutory Appeal

28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) provides that a federal Court of Appeals has discretion to consider an immediate appeal from an interlocutory order if the district court certifies in writing that the “order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation.” There are few published opinions in which Section 1292(b) has been used successfully by a party seeking appellate review of an order rejecting an assertion of the privilege. See, e.g., Sokaogon Gaming Enter. Corp. v. Tushie-Montgomery Assocs., Inc., 86 F.3d 656, 658-59 (7th Cir. 1996) (accepting jurisdiction pursuant to Section 1292(b)); Tennenbaum v. Deloitte & Touche, 77 F.3d 337, 339 (9th Cir. 1996) (same); In re Boileau, 736 F.2d 503, 504 (9th Cir. 1984) (accepting jurisdiction pursuant to Section 1292(b) to review order issued by bankruptcy court compelling debtor to produce privileged documents).

(4) Standard of Review

The circuits are split as to the appropriate standard of review for determining whether district courts properly analyzed discovery issues. See Winbond Elecs. Corp. v. Int'l Trade Comm'n, 262 F.3d 1363, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2001) (noting division). The Fourth, Sixth, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits have reviewed discovery decisions de novo. See, e.g., Adkins v. Christie, 488 F.3d 1324, 1327 (11th Cir. 2007) (“The decision to recognize a privilege is a mixed question of law and fact, which we review de novo.”); United States v. Dakota, 197 F.3d 821, 825 (6th Cir. 1999) (de novo review of determination regarding waiver of privilege); Chaudhry v. Gallerizzo, 174 F.3d 394, 402 (4th Cir. 1999) (discovery disputes reviewed de novo as mixed questions of fact and law); United States v. Mendelsohn, 896 F.2d 1183, 1188

(9th Cir. 1990) (de novo review of determination regarding waiver of privilege). See also In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 176 F. App'x 72, 73 (11th Cir. 2006) (in the context of the Fifth Amendment's privilege against self-incrimination, noting that the applicability of a privilege involves a mixed question of law and fact, that purely factual issues are reviewed for clear error, and that the application of law to fact is reviewed de novo).

The Second, Third, Fifth and Tenth Circuits have applied an abuse of discretion standard in similar cases. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 219 F.3d 175, 182 (2d Cir. 2000) (abuse of discretion standard applied to reviewing waiver determination); In re Grand Jury (Impounded), 138 F.3d 978, 980-81 (3d Cir. 1998) (same); Frontier Ref. Inc. v. Gorman-Rupp Co., 136 F.3d 695, 699 (10th Cir. 1998) (abuse of discretion standard applied to discovery orders generally); United States v. Neal, 27 F.3d 1035, 1048 (5th Cir. 1994) (“The application of the attorney-client privilege is a question of fact, to be determined in the light of the purpose of the privilege and guided by judicial precedents.”). Where, however, the application of the privilege turns on an issue of law (for example, the application of the “control group” versus “subject matter” tests for corporate application of the privilege), courts in the second category may also review lower court determinations on a de novo basis. See In re Avantel, S.A., 343 F.3d 311, 318 (5th Cir. 2003); Neal, 27 F.3d at 1048.

The Seventh Circuit reviews questions of law, such as the scope of the attorney-client privilege, de novo, but reviews the district court's findings of fact and the application of law to fact for clear error. Shaffer v. Am. Med. Ass'n, 662 F.3d 439, 446 (7th Cir. 2011) (scope of privilege is a question of law that is reviewed de novo, while findings of fact and the application of law to fact is reviewed for clear error). The First Circuit combines these groups, stating that privilege determinations are reviewed based on the nature of the issue involved: questions of law are reviewed de novo, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, and evidentiary determinations are reviewed for abuse of discretion. In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 662 F.3d 65, 69 (1st Cir. 2011).

2. Assertion of the Attorney-Client Privilege and Depositions of Counsel

Protecting litigation or in-house counsel from depositions implicates both the attorney-client privilege and (possibly to a greater extent) the work product doctrine. Notwithstanding that the practice of compelling counsel to testify has long been discouraged, deposing opposing counsel is considered an acceptable litigation tactic by some lawyers. See Shelton v. Am. Motors Corp., 805 F.2d 1323, 1327 (8th Cir. 1987). Recognizing that depositions of counsel, whether in-house counsel or trial counsel, constitute potentially dilatory tactics that may chill legal representation, many courts have imposed special rules restricting this practice, which are discussed in Special Circumstances – Rule 30(B)(6) Depositions And Depositions Of Counsel, § V.B, infra.

3. Assertion of the Privilege by Organizations: Employees and Successor Corporations

Generally, courts consider the power to assert an organization's privilege to rest in the controlling management of the organization. See JOHN W. STRONG, MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 93 (7th ed. 2016). Management can only assert the privilege on behalf of the organization, not to protect the interests of individual officers or managers. See Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 348-49 (1985); United States v. Chen, 99 F.3d 1495, 1502 (9th Cir. 1996); Chronicle Publ'g Co. v. Hantzis, 732 F. Supp. 270, 272-73 (D. Mass. 1990).

However, where employees have established an independent attorney-client relationship with the corporation's counsel, they may assert or waive the privilege as to conversations made in the course of that relationship. Typically, an individual asserting the privilege must meet a five-prong test:

First, they must show they approached [counsel] for the purpose of seeking legal advice. Second, they must demonstrate that when they approached [counsel] they made it clear that they were seeking legal advice in their individual rather than in their representative capacities. Third, they must demonstrate that [counsel] saw fit to communicate with them in their individual capacities, knowing that a possible conflict could arise. Fourth, they must prove that their conversations with [counsel] were confidential. And, fifth, they must show that the substance of their conversations with [counsel] did not concern matters within the company or the general affairs of the company.

In re Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Mgmt. Corp., 805 F.2d 120, 123-25 (3d Cir. 1986); see also United States v. Graf, 610 F.3d 1148, 1161 (9th Cir. 2010) (adopting Bevill approach); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 274 F.3d 563, 571 (1st Cir. 2001) (following Bevill); Intervenor v. United States (In re Grand Jury Subpoenas), 144 F.3d 653, 659 (10th Cir. 1998) (same); United States v. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 119 F.3d 210, 215 (2d Cir. 1997) (same).

An employee or officer cannot assert the corporation's privilege if the corporation waives it. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 469 F.3d 24, 26 (1st Cir. 2006) (CEO, acting in his individual capacity, did not have standing to assert attorney-client privilege); Bevill, 805 F.2d at 124-25; In re Hechinger Inv. Co., 285 B.R. 601, 606 (D. Del. 2002) (former officers and employees could not assert corporation's privilege).

Likewise, an officer or employee cannot waive the corporation's privilege if the corporation asserts it. See Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 132 F.Supp.3d 558, 564-65 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) (in SEC enforcement action against the bank and bank employee, employee was prohibited from asserting advice of counsel defense over the bank's assertion of privilege; court explained that the attorney-client privilege is not subject to a balancing test); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 219 F.3d 175, 184-85 (2d Cir. 2000) (waiver of corporate attorney-client privilege by corporate officer's testimony would not necessarily waive corporate privilege where officer was not communicating corporation's intent to waive); United States v. Chen,

99 F.3d 1495, 1502 (9th Cir. 1996) (communication between former employee and government did not waive privilege because former employee never had authority to waive); Alexander v. FBI, 198 F.R.D. 306, 315-16 (D.D.C. 2000); Las Vegas Sands v. Eighth Judicial Dist. Court, No. 63444, 2014 WL 3887779, at *5-8 (Nev. Aug. 7, 2014) (corporation's current management was sole holder of the attorney-client privilege, with sole authority to assert or waive privilege, and former president and CEO could not use the company's privileged documents even though he was a party to the privileged communications). Only employees with authority to waive the privilege may waive it on behalf of the corporation. United States v. Ghavani, 882 F.Supp.2d 532, 543 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) (“[A] corporate employee without authority cannot effect a waiver of privilege that belongs to the corporation”); Brinckerhoff v. Town of Paradise, No. CIV. S-10-0023 MCE GGH, 2010 WL 4806966, at *5 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 18, 2010) (dissent directors, former employees, and employees outside the control group cannot waive privilege); Business Integration Services, Inc. v. AT&T Corp., 251 F.R.D. 121, 127 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (non-executive manager lacked authority to waive privilege). But see Denney v. Jenkins & Gilchrist, 362 F.Supp.2d 407 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (finding even a lower level employee may waive privilege when corporation authorizes employee's possession of the privileged communication and takes inadequate steps to prevent disclosure). \

When legal control of an organization passes to new management, the authority to assert or waive the attorney-client privilege flows with corporate control to the new management. See Weintraub, 471 U.S. at 349 (bankruptcy trustee had the power to waive the corporation's privilege for pre-bankruptcy communications; moreover, “new managers installed as a result of takeover, merger, loss of confidence of shareholders, or simply normal successor may waive the attorney-client privilege [of the corporation]”). Generally, a transfer of assets is not enough to establish control. See MacKenzie-Childs LLC v. MacKenzie-Childs, 262 F.R.D. 241, 248 (W.D.N.Y. 2009) (asset transfer must be accompanied by a transfer of control of the business and management of the acquiring corporation must continue the business of the selling corporation) (citing numerous cases). See also Lynx Servs. Ltd. v. Horstman, No. 3:14CV01967, 2016 WL 4565895, at *2-3 (N.D. Ohio Sept. 1, 2016) (where substantially all of the assets of a company, including the company's corporate records, computers, and email servers, were acquired through a “pure asset sale,” privilege did not transfer to purchaser but was instead waived by the company's voluntary disclosure to purchaser through the asset sale). But see Robinson Medical Contractors, Inc. v. PTC Group Holding Corp., No. 1:15-cv-77-SNLJ, 2017 WL 2021070, at *2-3 (E.D. Mo. May 12, 2017) (parent of a wholly-owned subsidiary could assert privilege on behalf of the subsidiary even after the dissolution of the subsidiary where the parent's in-house counsel jointly represented both the parent and subsidiary); SimpleAir, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., No. 2:11-cv-416-JRG, 2013 WL 4574594, at *3 (E.D. Tex. Aug. 27, 2013) (privilege transfers to a purchaser of substantially all of a debtor's assets, even if the nature of the purchaser's business is completely different than the debtor's business).

Thus, when a corporation enters bankruptcy, the trustee in bankruptcy is empowered to assert or waive the attorney-client privilege. See Weintraub, 471 U.S. at 358; Central States, Se. & Sw. Areas Pension Fund v. Nat'l Lumber Co., No. 10 c 2881, 2012 WL 2863478, at *3-5 (N.D. Ill. July 11, 2012) (where a trust mortgage grants trustee the power to wind up business, liquidate assets, and act for the benefit of creditors, even if no bankruptcy petition has been filed, the trustee has the power to waive the attorney-client privilege); cf. In re Bounds, 443

Tex. 2009) (litigation trustee became holder of privilege of both the debtors and the creditors’ committee and could assert those privileges in subsequent litigation brought by the trustee). Similarly, a receiver inherits the position of the client and can decide whether to waive or assert the privilege. See SEC v. Elfindapan, S.A., 169 F. Supp. 2d 420, 430-31 (M.D.N.C. 2001). Cf. In re China Med. In one recent case, a subsidiary company in bankruptcy sought and obtained from the bankruptcy court a stipulation and order to transfer documents protected by the attorney-client privilege to its corporate parent, which was then able to assert privilege as a joint client with respect to matters of common interest. Bankruptcy trustees also control the privilege in reorganizations of partnerships. See United States v. Campbell, 73 F.3d 44, 47-48 (5th Cir. 1996). But see Suntrust Bank v. Blue Water Fiber, L.P., 210 F.R.D. 196, 198-99 & n.3 (E.D. Mich. Aug. 31, 2002) (noting, but not deciding, the “interesting and novel question” of whether successor to limited partnership could waive privilege with respect to conversations with former partners, where successor was adverse to partners in litigation).

Following a merger, the surviving corporation succeeds to the privileges of the pre-merger corporation. See Hoffmann-La Roche, Inc. v. Roxane Labs., Inc., No. 09-6335, 2011 WL 1792791, at *6 (D.N.J. May 11, 2011) (after subsidiary merged with a third party corporation, post-merger corporation could waive privilege for subsidiary's pre-merger documents); Great Hill Equity Partners IV, LP v. SIG Growth Equity Funds, LLP, 80 A.3d 155, 162 (Del. Ch. 2013) (in absence of language in acquisition deal documents reserving some of the seller's privileges, for example attorney-client communications relating to the transaction itself, the company's privileges follow the transferred assets); see also Parus Holdings, Inc. v. Banner & Witcoff, Ltd., 585 F. Supp. 2d 995 (N.D. Similarly, where a corporation purchases another corporation's subsidiary, the purchasing parent controls the privilege of the subsidiary. See Bass Pub. Ltd. Co. v. Promus Cos., 868 F. Supp. 615, 619-20 (S.D.N.Y. 1994); Medcom Holding Co. v. Baxter Travenol Labs., Inc., 689 F. Supp. 841, 844 (N.D. Ill. 1988). The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has further held that, "[l]ogically . . . the flipside of that principle is that a successor company can also be subject to its predecessor's intentional waiver in certain circumstances." In re OptumInsight, Inc., No. 2017-116, 2017 WL 3096300, at *3 (Fed. Cir. July 20, 2017) (predecessor's intentional pre-merger waiver extended to successor company's post-merger communications related to the same subject matter).

Litigation between parent corporations and their subsidiaries creates unique problems with respect to the assertion of the attorney-client privilege. See In re Teleglobe Commc'ns Corp., 493 F.3d 345, 368-69 (3d Cir. 2007). Some courts have held that the privilege may not be waived over a former parent's objection, at least where the parent and subsidiary have a joint defense agreement related to the subject matter over which the privilege is asserted. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 902 F.2d 244, 248-49 (4th Cir. 1990).

The Third Circuit's decision in Teleglobe addresses a number of issues relating to the privilege among a parent and its subsidiaries. The court's analysis provides a detailed roadmap for corporate counsel in connection with a number of thorny joint-client, common-interest, and community-of-interest privilege issues. In late 2000, Bell Canada Enterprises, Inc. ("BCE") directed its wholly owned subsidiary, Teleglobe, Inc. ("Teleglobe"), to borrow $2.4 billion, but then ceased funding Teleglobe in early April 2001, leaving the company without the means to repay its substantial debt. Teleglobe and several of its subsidiaries filed for bankruptcy and brought an adversary proceeding against BCE. Pre-bankruptcy, Teleglobe had consulted with BCE's in-house attorneys on various matters. In the adversary proceeding, Teleglobe sought discovery of BCE's counsel's files, over which BCE asserted privilege. The Special Master ordered that all documents disclosed to in-house counsel, even documents produced by outside counsel hired only to represent BCE, must be produced, and the district court affirmed. The appellate court reversed in part and remanded the case, holding that the district court could only compel BCE to produce disputed documents pursuant to the adverse-litigation exception to the co-client privilege if it found that BCE and the debtors were jointly represented by the same attorneys on a matter of common interest that was the subject-matter of those documents. The court provided the following guidance:

(1) When in-house counsel represents both the parent and a subsidiary, the privilege is governed by the joint defense/co-client doctrine, not the common interest doctrine. When co-clients become adversaries, the majority rule is that all communications made in the course of the joint representation are discoverable. The court predicted that the Delaware courts would apply the adverse litigation exception to render joint-privileged documents discoverable in all situations, even where one co-client is wholly owned by the other.

(2) Despite imprecise application by other courts, the community-of-interest/common interest privilege applies only to communications between attorneys who separately represent different clients, but who share a common legal interest in the shared communication. It does not apply where clients are jointly represented by a shared attorney.

(3) Courts often find that information sharing within a corporate family does not waive the attorney-client privilege, but they diverge on how they reach this result. The court warned that if the rationale is that a corporate family constitutes one client, or that there is a community of interest, a former subsidiary could access all of its former parent's privileged communications in litigation in which they are adverse. The better rationale is that members of a corporate family are joint clients, and only communications involving specific representations are at risk.

(4) When the interests of a parent and subsidiary begin to become adverse, any joint representation on the adverse matter should end, both to prevent the subsidiary from being able to invade the parent's privilege in any litigation that ensues, and to protect the interests of the subsidiary. This does not mean, however, that the parent's in-house counsel must cease representing the subsidiary on all other matters, because spin-off transactions can be in the works for months or even years, and continuing to share representation on other matters is both proper and efficient.

The court summarized its guidance for in-house counsel: "By taking care not to begin joint representations except when necessary, to limit the scope of joint representations, and seasonably to separate counsel on matters in which subsidiaries are adverse to the parent, in-house counsel can maintain sufficient control over the parent's privileged communications." 493 F.3d at 374.

Corporations and in-house counsel must be mindful that joint representation of a parent and subsidiary could cause privilege waiver issues if the subsidiary is ever sold. See, e.g., 625 Milwaukee, L.L.C., v. Switch & Data Facilities Co., No. 06-C-0727, 2008 WL 582564, at *3-5 (E.D. Wis. Feb. 29, 2008) (former subsidiary could discover privileged documents from its former parent where outside counsel had represented both prior to sale and subsidiary had no officers of its own and was controlled solely by the parent corporation); Polycast Tech. Corp. v. Uniroyal Inc., 125 F.R.D. 47, 49-50 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (district court ordered production of notes taken by subsidiary's officer during meeting with parent's in-house counsel because the subsidiary had been purchased by a new corporation, who then waived the attorney-client privilege with respect to those notes); Medcom Holding, 689 F. Supp. at 842 (similar holding on similar facts). And, as with all matters of attorney-client privilege, good recordkeeping hygiene is paramount to maintaining client confidentiality: In Chemeon Surface Technology, LLC v. Metalast Int'l, Inc., No. 3:15-CV-0294-MMD (VPC), 2016 WL 4967716, at *3 (D. Nev. Sept. 15, 2016), the defendant served as the manager for a limited liability company of the same name and sold all of the LLC's assets to the plaintiff, including legal files intermingling records of both the LLC and the defendant. The defendant never challenged the plaintiff's possession of the legal files or attempt to claw them back. In later litigation, when the defendant tried to assert privilege over the files, the court held that it had voluntarily disclosed the privileged communications, resulting in a subject-matter waiver.

Determining who controls the attorney-client privilege when a company transfers less than all of its assets can be difficult. The transfer of limited assets may not carry with it a transfer of the privilege. See Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. WH-TV Broad. Corp., No. 01 C 4366, 2003 WL 21911066, at *1-2 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 7, 2003) (Zenith's sale of assets to General Instrument, including documents that were privileged while in Zenith's possession, did not transfer the attorney-client privilege to General Instrument). The transfer of a substantial portion of a company's assets, however, particularly where it carries with it practical control of a business line, will result in a transfer of authority over the privilege. See Gilday v. Kenra, Ltd., No. 1:09-cv-00229-TWP-TAB, 2010 WL 3928593, at *2 (S.D. Ind. Oct. 4, 2010) (transfer of "substantially all" of a corporation's assets transfers control of the corporation, including authority to assert the attorney-privilege); Am. Int'l Specialty Lines Ins. Co. v. NWI-I, Inc., 240 F.R.D. 401, 406-07 (N.D. Ill. 2007) (finding it significant that the acquiring entity not only acquired certain assets, but also continued to operate the enterprise it purchased); Soverain Software LLC v. Gap, Inc., 340 F. Supp. 2d 760, 763 (E.D. Tex. 2004) ("If the practical consequences of the transaction result in the transfer of control of the business and the continuation of the business under new management, the authority to assert or waive the attorney-client privilege will follow as well."); see also Parus Holdings, Inc. v. Banner & Witcoff, Ltd., 585 F. Supp. 2d 995, 1002-03 (N.D. Ill. 2008) (attorney-client privilege transferred to the acquiring corporation when the acquiring corporation purchased and continued to operate an entire corporate division, including taking on all division assets, managers and employees).

A question sometimes arises after an acquisition and merger: When Company A has acquired Company B, who owns the attorney-client privilege applicable to pre-merger communications between Company B and its counsel regarding the merger itself. Under Delaware law, in the absence of contract language to the contrary, following a merger, all privileges become the property of the surviving corporation, including the seller's communications with counsel regarding the merger transaction itself. June 1, 2020) (denying buyer's motion to compel deal communications where seller's rights under the purchase agreement were an excluded asset, the buyer did not purchase documentation or privileges related to those rights, and the buyer did not contract for the right to assert a privilege waiver over the seller's deal communications); NewSpring Mezzanine Capital II, L.P. v. Hayes, No. CIV.A. 14-1706, 2014

WL 6908058, at *4 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 9, 2014) (applying Great Hill approach under federal common law). But see Tekni-Plex, Inc. v. Meyner & Landis, 674 N.E.2d 663, 670 (N.Y. 1996) (applying New York law, and specific circumstances of the case, court held that privileged communications relating to business operations transferred to the surviving corporation, but privilege over communications between the seller and counsel regarding the transaction remained with the seller).

4. Inferences Drawn from Assertion of Privilege

At common law, no inference could be drawn against a client asserting the attorney-client privilege. See 26A CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 5753 (1st ed. West 2019) (noting “no comment” rule). Recognizing that allowing an opponent to comment on a claim of privilege would seriously undermine the value of the privilege, the Supreme Court in Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 614 (1965), precluded prosecutors from commenting on an accused’s assertion of the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Other courts have applied a similar rule to assertions of the attorney-client privilege in civil cases. See In re Tudor Assocs., Ltd., II, 20 F.3d 115, 120 (4th Cir. 1994); Parker v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 900 F.2d 772, 775 (4th Cir. 1990); United States ex rel. Barko v. Halliburton Co., 241 F. Supp. 3d 37, 55 (D.D.C. 2017) (valid assertion of privilege cannot create an adverse inference because allowing such a penalty for invocation of the privilege would have “seriously harmful consequences”); In re Gibson, No. 04-11822, 2007 WL 505746, at *3 (Bankr. S.D. Ala. Feb. 14, 2007) (court could not draw negative inference from invocation of privilege, but noting that client must waive privilege if raising her reliance on advice of counsel as a defense).

F. DURATION OF THE PRIVILEGE

In general, once the attorney-client privilege is created it can be invoked at any time unless it has been waived or is subject to an exception. See United States v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 89 F. Supp. 357, 358 (D. Mass. 1950). The Supreme Court reaffirmed the general rule that the privilege continues even after the termination of the attorney-client relationship and the death of the client. Swidler & Berlin v. United States, 524 U.S. 399, 405-06 (1998) (holding that the privilege continued after the death of a client even where the privileged communications were relevant to a criminal proceeding); N.Y. State Bar Ass’n Ethics Op. 1084 (2016) (information obtained from deceased client that appeared to exonerate client’s co-defendant remained privileged and confidential, notwithstanding deceased client’s conviction and absence of pending proceedings against deceased client, unless deceased client authorized disclosure expressly before death or disclosure was impliedly authorized as consistent with client’s best interests and reasonable under the circumstances); see also 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5498 (1st ed. West 2019); but see HLC Props., Ltd. v. Super. Court, 105 P.3d 560, 567, (Cal. 2005) (holding that, under California law, privilege terminates after natural person’s estate is “finally distributed and his personal representative is discharged”); People v. Vespucci, 745 N.Y.S.2d 391, 395-97 (N.Y. Cnty. Ct. 2002) (recognizing that Swidler & Berlin controls in federal court but that some diversity of opinion exists in state law).

After the client's death, the administrator or representative of the estate gains the power to assert or waive the deceased's privilege against third parties. See, e.g., State v. Doe, 803 N.E.2d 777, 780 (Ohio 2004) (decedent's former wife was statutorily empowered to waive the privilege and holding decedent's attorney in contempt for failure to do so following her waiver); see also 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5498 (1st ed. West 2019). Beneficiaries generally do not have standing to assert or waive the privilege. See Burkert v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y of Am., 287 F.3d 293, 295-96 (3d Cir. 2002) (analogizing psychotherapist-patient privilege to attorney-client privilege and holding that beneficiaries of deceased client could not assert the privilege on behalf of deceased against insurer). However, many courts refuse to enforce the privilege in will contests. See Remien v. Remien, No. 94 C 2407, 1996 WL 411387, at *3 (N.D. Ill. July 19, 1996); Morrow v. Pappas, 90 N.E.3d 501, 511, 418 Ill. Dec. 343 (Ill. App. 2017) ("Attorney-client privilege generally survives the client's death, however, the privilege is only a temporary one when presented in cases involving wills."); Stevens v. Thurston, 289 A.2d 398, 399 (N.H. 1972); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 94 (7th ed. 2016).

For organizations, the general rule is that when the organization ceases to have legal existence such that no one can act in its behalf, the privilege terminates. See Securities and Exchange Comm'n v. Carillo Huetell LLP, No. 13 Civ. 1735(GBD)(JCF), 2015 WL 1610282, at *2-*3 (S.D.N.Y. April 8, 2015) (privilege does not survive dissolution of corporation); TAS Distrib. Co. v. Cummins Inc., No. 07-1141, 2009 WL 3255297, at *2 (C.D. Ill. Oct. 7, 2009) ("Absent some compelling reason to the contrary, the attorney client privilege does not survive the death of the corporation."); Lewis v. United States, No. 02-2958 B/AN, 2004 WL 3203121, at *4 (W.D. Tenn. Dec. 7, 2004) (same); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 73 cmt. k (2000); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5499 (1st ed. West 2019). See also Lopes v. Vieira, 688 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 1068-69 (E.D. Cal. 2010) (former attorney of corporate entity that, although formally still active and in good standing with Secretary of State, had effectively ceased to function did not have authority to assert entity's attorney-client privilege). Cf. Official Comm. of Admin. Claimants v. Moran, 802 F. Supp. 2d 947, 949-50 (N.D. Ill. 2011) (stating that courts should look to "practical business realities" rather than technical legal status in determining whether a corporation has "died" for purposes of asserting attorney-client privilege and concluding that plaintiff corporation could assert privilege because it had continued to pursue claim against defendant after it had entered bankruptcy and thus was never entirely defunct). In some cases, courts have emphasized that when the privilege is asserted on behalf of a defunct corporation, it must be for the purpose of protecting the corporation's interests, not those of individual corporate officers. See, e.g., PCS Nitrogen, Inc. v. Ross Dev. Corp., No. 2:09-3171-MBS, 2011 WL 3665335, at *4 (D.S.C. Aug. 19, 2011) (rejecting assertion of privilege by decision-makers of defunct corporation because they sought to protect their own interests rather than those of the corporation).

The United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania addressed the issue of what happens to the corporation's privilege where the corporation ceases to function but is still a legal entity. In Gilliland v. Geramita, No. 2:05-CV-01059, 2006 WL 2642525, at *1 (W.D. Pa. Sept. 14, 2006), counsel for the defendant corporation in a securities suit attempted to assert the attorney-client privilege on behalf of the corporation, which – although technically still a valid legal entity – was no longer in operation and had no current directors or officers. Because there were no current officers or directors to assert the privilege on behalf of the corporation, and the former management team was not authorized to assert the privilege, there was no person with authority to “properly invoke the privilege.” Id. at *11. Thus, the documents at issue could not be considered privileged. Id. (“The better rule, in the Court’s view, is that there should be a presumption that the attorney-client privilege is no longer viable after the corporate entity ceases to function, unless a party seeking to establish the privilege demonstrates authority and good cause.”); see also Lewis v. United States, No. 02-2958 B/AN, 2004 WL 3203121, at *4 (W.D. Tenn. Dec. 7, 2004) (attorney-client privilege does not extend beyond the death of a corporation). But see Overton v. Todman & Co., 249 F.R.D. 147, 148 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (distinguishing Gilliland for a corporation no longer actively in business when it was still listed as “active” with the State Department and former officers asserted privilege in court affidavits).

G. WAIVING THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

Even if all the prerequisites for establishing a claim of attorney-client privilege are met, a party can be found to have waived the protection afforded by the privilege. Whenever a client discloses confidential communications to third parties, including government agencies, the disclosure may constitute a waiver both as to the communication that has been disclosed and other communications relating to the same subject. See The Extent Of Waiver, § I.G.6, infra. In addition, a corporation may be found to have waived the privilege if it has used privileged communications in a manner inconsistent with maintaining their confidentiality.

1. Burden of Proof

Although it is well established that the party asserting the privilege bears the burden of proving that the privilege in fact applies, see Procedure For Asserting The Privilege, § I.E.1, supra, there is some disagreement among courts regarding how to allocate the burden to establish whether waiver has occurred.

Most courts have held that the absence of waiver is an element of the attorney-client privilege and that the proponent bears the burden of showing the communication has been kept confidential. See, e.g., In re Keeper of Records (Grand Jury Subpoena Addressed to XYZ Corp.), 348 F.3d 16, 22 (1st Cir. 2003) (“[T]he party who invokes the privilege bears the burden of establishing that it applies to the communications at issue and that it has not been waived.”); In re VISX, Inc., 18 Fed. App’x 821, 823 (Fed. Cir. 2001) (“The privilege holder . . . has the burden of convincing the district court that it has not waived the privilege.”); United States v. Jones, 696 F.2d 1069, 1072 (4th Cir. 1982) (“The proponent must establish not only that an attorney-client relationship existed, but also that the particular communications at issue are privileged and that the privilege was not waived.”); Weil v. Inv./Indicators, Research & Mgmt., Inc., 647 F.2d 18, 25 (9th Cir. 1981) (“As with all evidentiary privileges, the burden of proving that the attorney-client privilege applies rests not with the party contesting the privilege, but with the party asserting it. One of the elements that the asserting party must prove is that it has not waived the privilege.”) (internal citation omitted); Forever Green Athletic Fields, Inc. v. Babcock Law Firm, LLC, Civil Action No. 11-633-JJB-RLB, 2014 WL 29451, at *6 (M.D. La. Jan. 3, 2014) (explaining that, under Louisiana law, “[t]he party asserting privilege has the burden of proving its applicability and that a waiver has not occurred”); HSH Nordbank AG N.Y. Branch v. Swerdlow, 259 F.R.D. 64, 70 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (under New York law, “the party asserting the privilege also bears the burden of demonstrating that it has not been waived”); Heriot v. Byrne, 257 F.R.D. 645, 658 (N.D. Ill. 2009) (the party asserting the privilege had the burden of proving that disclosure was inadvertent and that privilege therefore had not been waived).

In contrast, a few courts have held that the opponent of the privilege bears the burden of showing waiver. See, e.g., Sampson v. Sch. Dist. of Lancaster, 262 F.R.D. 469, 478 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (“As the party challenging the privileged communication, Plaintiff bears the burden of showing that Defendants waived the privilege.”); Texaco, Inc. v. La. Land & Exploration Co., 805 F. Supp. 385, 387 (M.D. La. 1992) (“Once a claim of privilege has been established, then the burden of proof shifts to the party seeking discovery to prove any applicable exception to the privilege.”).

Other courts have concluded that the issue of burden is more nuanced. In Shumaker, Loop & Kendrick, LLP v. Zaremba, 403 B.R. 480 (N.D. Ohio 2009), the court closely examined the case law regarding the burden of proving waiver and applied a burden-shifting framework:

When a claim of privilege through express waiver is raised, burdens shall be distributed as follows: (1) the proponent of the privilege has the burden of demonstrating, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the elements of privilege have been satisfied; (2) the opponent of the privilege must present sufficient evidence upon which a reasonable person may find that the privilege has been waived; (3) if the opponent meets its burden, the proponent of the privilege must disprove each demonstrated claim of waiver by a preponderance of the evidence.

Fla. 2013) (under Florida law, “[a] party seeking to pierce the privilege need only establish a prima facie case that the client’s privilege was waived. If a waiver has been sufficiently alleged, the party seeking the benefit of the privilege must establish – by a preponderance of the evidence – that the privilege was not waived, as the burden always rests in the final analysis with the party seeking the protection of the privilege.”); Genentech, Inc. v. Insmed Inc., 442 F. Supp. 2d 838, 840 n.2 (N.D. Cal. 2006); First Fed. Sav. Bank of Hegewisch v. United States, 55 Fed. Cl. 263, 267 (Fed. Cl. 2003) (the initial burden to establish privilege is on the party asserting the privilege, that the burden then shifts to the party opposing the privilege to establish a prima facie case of waiver, and that the burden shifts back to the party asserting the privilege to rebut the prima facie case).

2. Consent, Disclaimer and Defective Assertion

A client can relinquish the protection of the privilege in several ways. The easiest way to abandon the privilege is through consent. Consent acts as a waiver of the privilege and leaves the underlying communications unprotected. See generally In re von Bulow, 828 F.2d 94, 101 (2d Cir. 1987) (client’s consent to publish privileged information in book about case resulted in waiver); Long-Term Capital Holdings v. United States, No. 3:01 CV 1290 (JBA), 2002 WL 31934139, at *2 (D. Conn. Oct. 30, 2002); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 93 (7th ed. 2016); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5507 (1st ed. West 2019). However, a party must possess the authority to waive the privilege for such a waiver to be effective. See United States v. Chen, 99 F.3d 1495, 1502 (9th Cir. 1996) (former employees lack ability to waive corporation's attorney-client privilege); Oasis Int'l Waters, Inc. v. United States, 110 Fed. Cl. 87, 115 (Fed. Cl. 2013) (contract specialist who worked under contracting officer for Army lacked ability to waive privilege over memorandum drafted by his predecessor); Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., No. 01-cv-2252 CRB (JSC), 2013 WL 1282892, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 26, 2013) (disclosure of Wal-Mart's privileged information to opposing counsel and New York Times did not result in waiver of privilege because Wal-Mart did not authorize the disclosures); see also Assertion Of The Privilege By Organizations: Employees And Successor Corporations, § I.E.3, supra.

Occasionally, a client waives the privilege voluntarily and later attempts to reassert it. In such cases, the client will generally be estopped from relying on the privilege if an adversary has detrimentally relied on the disclaimer or the interests of justice and fairness otherwise require waiver. See generally United States v. Blackburn, 446 F.2d 1089, 1091 (5th Cir. 1971) (defendant not permitted to reassert a privilege that he had already waived); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2327 (J. McNaughton rev. 1961); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5507 (1st ed. West 2019). See also Reitz v. City of Mt. Juliet, 680 F. Supp. 2d 888, 894-95 (M.D. Tenn. 2010) (“[O]nce the privilege is waived, waiver is complete and final.”) (internal citations omitted); Marchand v. Town of Hamilton, No. 09-10433-LTS, 2010 WL 1257847, at *5 (D. Mass. Mar. 26, 2010) (“knowing and considered limited waiver” not unwaived).

Waiver can also occur when the client fails to assert the privilege effectively. For example, a client's failure to object during the presentation of evidence at a hearing or deposition may waive the privilege. See, e.g., Hologram USA, Inc. v. Pulse Evolution Corp., No. 2:14-cv-00772, 2016 WL 3654285, at *3 (D. Nev. July 5, 2016) (defendants waived privilege when they failed to object immediately to plaintiffs' use of privileged documents as exhibits during a deposition). See also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 78 cmt. e (2000); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 93 (7th ed. 2016); Asserting The Privilege, § I.E, supra. Failure of the client to guard the privilege jealously generally constitutes a waiver. See Disclosure To Third Parties: Intentional Disregard Of Confidentiality, § I.G.3.a, infra.

In the corporate context, a question may arise regarding who has the authority to waive the privilege when the corporation's management, through counsel, makes it clear that the corporation does not intend to waive its privileges. In In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 219 F.3d 175 (2d Cir. 2000), the Second Circuit considered two matters of first impression: (1) whether a corporate officer can impliedly waive the corporation's attorney-client and work product privileges in his grand jury testimony, even though the corporation has explicitly refused such a waiver; and, if the answer is yes, (2) what factors a district court should consider in deciding whether a waiver has occurred. The case arose out of an ongoing grand jury investigation into allegedly illegal sales of firearms and other contraband by Doe Corp. In response to the grand jury's subpoena in which it formally requested Doe Corp. to waive its attorney-client and work product privileges, Doe Corp. decided not to waive its privileges and so notified the government. Id. at 180. The grand jury subsequently subpoenaed four Doe Corp. employees, including its CEO and its chief in-house counsel. Id. Although the CEO invoked the attorney-client privilege on several occasions during his testimony, he made eight references to counsel's advice, including a number of specific statements about counsel's recommendations. The government contended that Doe Corp. lost its privileges primarily as a result of the grand jury testimony of the CEO and counsel. Id. The trial court agreed and granted the government's motion to compel. Id. at 181-82.

The Second Circuit vacated the trial court's order and remanded for further review based on the detailed discussion in its opinion. Citing In re von Bulow, 828 F.2d 94, 103 (2d Cir. 1987), and United States v. Bilzerian, 926 F.2d 1285, 1292 (2d Cir. 1991), the court acknowledged that implied waiver may be found where a privilege holder "asserts a claim that in fairness requires examination of protected communications." In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 219 F.3d at 182. Fairness considerations arise when a party attempts to use the privilege both as "a shield and a sword." Id. Ordinarily, the authority to assert and waive the corporation's privileges rests with the corporation's management and is exercised by its officers and directors. Id. at 183-84 (citation omitted). Unlike prior cases, however, in the case before the court the corporation clearly asserted its privilege and did not deliberately disclose any privileged material, but its CEO, in contravention of the corporation's instructions, arguably waived that privilege in his grand jury testimony. Id. at 184.

The court rejected the parties' competing requests for a per se rule that a corporate officer can or cannot waive a privilege asserted by the corporation. Id. at 185. Instead, it held that an implied waiver should be analyzed case-by-case based on "fairness principles." Id. Skeptical on the facts before it that the CEO's testimony had waived Doe Corp.'s privileges, the court instructed the trial court to consider on remand, among other things, the following issues: (1) the CEO was subpoenaed in his individual capacity and not as a corporate representative; (2) the CEO's interest in exculpating his own conduct may have overridden his fidelity to the corporation; (3) the CEO was not counseled and had no legal training; (4) Doe Corp. did not disclose privileged material to the government and did not take any affirmative steps to inject privileged materials into the litigation; and (5) the apparent lack of prejudice to the government. Id. at 189-90. "These circumstances viewed in isolation suggest to us it would be unfair to find, on the basis of Witness's testimony, that Doe Corp. had waived its entitlement to preserve the confidentiality of its communications with its attorneys." Id. at 190. See also United States v. Wells Fargo Bank N.A., No. 12-CV-7527, 2015 WL 3999074, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 2015) (in SEC civil enforcement action against bank and bank employee, employee was prohibited from asserting advice of counsel defense over bank's assertion of privilege; court explained that the attorney-client privilege is not subject to a balancing test).

In the event that the trial court found waiver on remand, the court indicated that only partial waiver may be appropriate: "as the animating principle behind waiver is fairness to the parties, if the court finds that the privilege was waived, then the waiver should be tailored to remedy the prejudice to the government." Id. at 188. Because the testimony was given before a grand jury, an "extrajudicial" context, limited waiver may be appropriate. Id. at 189. See also Pensacola Firefighters' Relief & Pension Fund Bd. of Dirs. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., No. 3:09cv53/MCR/MD, 2010 WL 4683935, at *5, *7 (N.D. Fla. Nov. 10, 2010) (statements made by employee to company clients regarding internal investigation did not waive privilege where there was no evidence employee had authority to waive the privilege, his statements were self-serving, and employee had not attempted to use disclosure to obtain litigation advantage, as no litigation was imminent at the time). Partial waiver may also be appropriate because the testimony was given early in the grand jury proceedings, at a time when the government may have had other witnesses and evidence, thus limiting the prejudice to the government. In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 219 F.3d at 189; see also United States v. Agnello, 135 F. Supp. 2d 380, 384-85 (E.D.N.Y. 2001) (distinguishing In re Grand Jury Proceedings on the basis that the corporation at issue was the alter ego of the party waiving the privilege and the waiver had not been compelled).

3. Disclosure to Third Parties

a. Intentional Disregard of Confidentiality

To be privileged, a communication must be made in confidence. See Communications Must Be Intended To Be Confidential, § I.C, supra. To stay privileged, the communication must remain confidential. As a general rule, disclosure of privileged communications to a person outside the attorney-client relationship manifests indifference to confidentiality and waives the protection of the privilege. See Maday v. Pub. Libraries of Saginaw, 480 F.3d 815, 821 (6th Cir. 2007) (disclosure to social worker waives privilege); Montanans for Cmty. Dev. v. Motl, No. CV 14-55-H-DLC, 2016 WL 922785, at *2-3 (D. Mont. Mar. 10, 2016) (in absence of non-waiver agreement, privilege over unredacted discovery materials including notebooks and investigative reports prepared during an investigation was waived where commissioner allowed an adverse party to inspect the notebooks and investigative reports); Curto v. Med. World Commc'ns, Inc., 783 F. Supp. 2d 373, 378 (E.D.N.Y. 2011) (plaintiff waived attorney-client privilege by serving otherwise privileged documents directly on defendant's counsel); Lenz v. Universal Music Corp., No. C 07-03783 JF (PVT), 2010 WL 4286329, at *3-5 (N.D. Cal. Disclosure to an attorney, where the attorney is not acting in a legal capacity, also causes a waiver. See United States v. Frederick, 182 F.3d 496, 500-01 (7th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1154, 120 S. Ct. 1197 (2000); see also Lopes v. Viera, 719 F. Supp. 2d 1199, 1203 (E.D. During a non-privileged investigation conducted by DHRM, the AGO provided a flash drive with 53,750 documents, primarily emails. DHRM reviewed only 100 documents. The court held that disclosure of the drive to DHRM waived the attorney-client privilege as to the entire drive, not just the 100 documents. Collaboration Props., Inc. v. Polycom, Inc., 224 F.R.D. 473, 479 (N.D. Cal. 2004). Exchange of privileged documents as part of a meet-and-confer discovery conference did not effect a waiver of the attorney-client privilege.

Akamai Techs., Inc. v. Digital Island, Inc., No. C-00-3508 CW(JCS), 2002 WL 1285126, at *9 (N.D. Cal. May 30, 2002). Provision of attorney's memo summarizing legal issues related to claim did not waive privilege when document was provided as part of settlement discussions and pursuant to agreement that its use would be limited to such discussions.

In these cases, the determinative factor is not the client's subjective intention to waive the privilege. 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2327 (J. McNaughton rev. 1961) ("A privileged person would seldom be found to waive, if his intention not to abandon could alone control the situation. There is always also the objective consideration that when his conduct touches a certain point of disclosure, fairness requires that his privilege shall cease whether he intended that result or not. He cannot be allowed, after disclosing as much as he pleases, to withhold the remainder."); see also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 79 cmt. f (2000); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 93 (7th ed. 2016); 3 JACK W. WEINSTEIN ET AL., WEINSTEIN'S FEDERAL EVIDENCE § 511.04 (Lexis 2014); accord Weil v. Inv./Indicators, Research & Mgmt., Inc., 647 F.2d 18, 24 (9th Cir. 1981) (subjective intent is but one factor to consider). Instead, the court will inquire whether the client's acts were: (1) voluntary and (2) substantially in disregard of confidentiality. Only voluntary acts can effectuate waiver. Thus, if the court finds that the client acted under duress or deception, then the privilege will not be waived. Shields v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., 864 F.2d 379, 382 (5th Cir. 1989) (disclosure compelled by court does not waive privilege with respect to third parties); Cobell v. Norton, 213 F.R.D. 69, 76 (D.D.C. 2003) (no waiver where Department of the Interior turned privileged documents over to court-appointed monitor pursuant to court order); SEC v. Forma, 117 F.R.D. 516, 523 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (deception by government makes disclosure involuntary and prevents waiver); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 79 cmt. e (2000). The primary determination is whether the party has safeguarded the confidential nature of the communications. To make this finding, the court determines whether the client's acts and the circumstances of the case objectively demonstrate the proper respect for confidentiality.

See:

Cohen v. Cohen, No. 09 Civ. 10230 (LAP), 2015 WL 745712, at *3-*4 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 30, 2015). Applying New York law, court held communications between plaintiff and her litigation funder were not privileged. The court found that the funder was neither a consulting agent of counsel, nor did she share a common legal interest with plaintiff, with whom she had a common financial interest.

Miller UK Ltd. v. Caterpillar, Inc., 17 F. Supp. 3d 711, 732-34 (N.D. Ill. 2014). Plaintiff's disclosure of privileged communications and documents, including damage estimates, summaries, and worksheets prepared by plaintiff and its attorneys, to potential third-party litigation funders acted as a waiver. The court rejected plaintiff's common interest argument, finding that the funders shared a common business interest in the potential investment, but they did not share a common legal interest with plaintiff.

U.S. ex. rel. Schweizer v. Oce, N.V., 577 F. Supp. 2d 169, 174-76 (D.D.C. 2008). Relators who filed confidential disclosure statement and exhibits with their sealed complaint, when statute only required relators to file complaint with the court, voluntarily waived privilege.

Cargill Inc. v. Budine, No. CVF07349LJOSMS, 2008 WL 2856642, at *4 (E.D. Cal. July 21, 2008). Defendants displayed an implied subjective intent to disclose when they voluntarily testified, without asserting privilege, about attorney's recommendations in an initial consultation attended by all parties.

Bowles v. Nat'l Ass'n of Home Builders, 224 F.R.D. 246, 254-55 (D.D.C. 2004). Disclosure of documents in settlement negotiations established subject matter waiver of privilege when the defendant waited fifteen months to claim the privilege and attempted to recover the documents. Such lax treatment of the allegedly privileged material did not reflect the "zealous" protection required under the law.

Parnes v. Parnes, 915 N.Y.S.2d 345, 348-50 (N.Y. App. Div. 2011). In divorce proceeding, court held that husband waived privilege with respect to a hard copy of an email with his attorney that he left on a desk in the marital home, but he did not waive privilege with respect to password protected emails that his wife discovered by using his personal password.

The extent to which privileged contents are revealed will also affect the waiver determination. To cause waiver, the non-privileged listener or receiver must learn a significant portion of the privileged communication. Chubb Integrated Sys., Ltd. v. Nat'l Bank, 103 F.R.D. 52, 63 (D.D.C. 1984) (disclosure of attorney-client communications waives the privilege when the listener learns the gist of the privileged communication); In re M&L Bus. Mach. Co., 161 B.R. 689, 693 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1993) (privilege is lost if the substance of the confidential communication is disclosed to a third party). Thus, referring in general terms to a prior conversation with an attorney does not usually abrogate the privilege. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 79 cmt. e (2000).

United States v. O'Malley, 786 F.2d 786, 793-94 (7th Cir. 1986). Privilege attaches to communication of information rather than the information itself. Sullivan v. Warminster Twp., 274 F.R.D. 147, 149-50 (E.D. Pa. 2011). Police chief's limited statement during a press conference that outside counsel's investigation revealed no misconduct and that police department had "gotten a clean bill of health on everything" waived privilege only with respect to specific communications between counsel and client, not with respect to entire investigation.

Allstate Ins. Co. v. Levesque, 263 F.R.D. 663, 666-67 (M.D. Fla. 2010). Under Florida law, a client's general and limited statements about the nature of his communications with his lawyer are not substantive disclosures that waive the privilege. At a deposition, when asked how he received particular information, the client said from his lawyer but gave no further details.

Arkwright Mut. Ins. Co. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., No. 90 Civ. 7811, 1994 WL 392280, at *2-3 (S.D.N.Y. July 28, 1994), reargued, 1994 WL 510048 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 16, 1994). A party does not waive the privilege merely by disclosing the substance of an attorney's advice. The party must make a more detailed revelation of the advice or attempt to use the partial disclosure to the prejudice of the opposing side.

Rauh v. Coyne, 744 F. Supp. 1181, 1185-86 (D.D.C. 1990). Disclosure of a brief description of an internal investigation report does not waive the privilege for the report itself.

b. Disclosure Within a Corporation

As a result of the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Upjohn, federal common law protects communications between counsel and lower-level employees when the communication may assist counsel to provide legal advice to the corporation. But once the corporation has obtained legal advice from its attorney, can it disclose that privileged communication to lower-level employees without waiving the privilege? Some courts allow disclosure to lower-level employees, but only on a "need to know" basis. See Confidentiality Within Organizations, § I.C.2, supra.

One issue that frequently arises in the context of corporate internal investigations is whether an audit committee or special litigation committee and their counsel may communicate their investigation findings and related investigatory materials to the company's board of directors without waiving otherwise applicable privileges. An audit committee or special litigation committee may establish an attorney-client privilege with counsel engaged by the committee. See, e.g., In re BCE W., L.P., No. M-8-85, 2000 WL 1239117, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, 2000) ("It is counterintuitive to think that while the Board permitted the Special Committee to retain its own counsel, the Special Committee would not have the benefit of the attorney-client privilege inherent in that relationship or that the Board of Directors or management, instead of the Special Committee, would have control of such privilege."); Ryan v. Gifford, Civil Action No. 2213-CC, 2007 WL 4259557, at *3 (Del. Ch. Nov. 30, 2007) ("There appears no dispute that, absent waiver or good cause, the attorney-client privilege protects communications between [outside counsel] and its client, the Special Committee."). The few courts that have addressed the issue disagree regarding whether disclosure of the audit committee's investigation findings to the company's board of directors waives the privilege.

SEC v. Roberts, 254 F.R.D. 371, 378 n.4 (N.D. Cal. 2008). Communications between counsel for the Special Committee and the company's Board of Directors were not privileged. "The court notes that not only is the Board not [the Special Committee counsel's] client such that the attorney-client privilege does not attach, the Board also does not have a common interest with the Special Committee since it was the Special Committee's mandate to ascertain whether members of the Board may have engaged in wrongdoing."

Jan. 2, 2008). In response to shareholder derivative action, company formed Special Committee, comprised of one independent director, which engaged outside counsel, who conducted an investigation with the assistance of forensic accountants, reviewed more than 300,000 documents, and conducted more than 30 interviews, but did not prepare a written report. Counsel made an oral presentation to a meeting of the Board of Directors attended by members of the Board who were defendants in the derivative action, and the Board member's individual attorneys. Thereafter, the company publicly disclosed certain aspects of the report, privately disclosed additional details to NASDAQ, relied on the investigation in defense to a motion for summary judgment, and then attempted to withdraw reliance on the investigation. On several grounds, including the Garner doctrine, the court held that privilege over the investigation report was waived. Among other things, the court found that the presence during counsel's presentation of defendant Board members, who were acting in a personal rather than fiduciary capacity, waived the privilege.

BSP Software, LLC v. Motio, Inc., No. 12 C 2100, 2013 WL 3456870, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. July 9, 2013). Company's disclosure of privileged materials to an advisory board waived attorney-client privilege. It was undisputed that the role of the advisory board was to "impart business and financial advice" and that the advisory board would have no binding authority over the company. The court declined to treat the advisory board members as the "functional equivalent" of company employees, noting that it was doubtful the Seventh Circuit would endorse the doctrine and, even if the doctrine were applicable, the company had failed to meet the functional equivalent test as applied by other jurisdictions.

c. Disclosure to Auditors

In general, an auditor is considered a non-privileged party under federal law. Couch v. United States, 409 U.S. 322, 334 (1973). Thus, under federal law, disclosure of privileged information to auditors will waive the attorney-client privilege.

See:

Chevron Corp. v. Pennzoil Co., 974 F.2d 1156, 1162 (9th Cir. 1992). Disclosure of tax counsel's privileged memoranda to auditors waived privilege with respect to documents actually disclosed.

United States v. El Paso Co., 682 F.2d 530, 540 (5th Cir. 1982). Disclosure of tax pool analysis and underlying documentation to outside accountants for tax audit purposes waived attorney-client privilege.

In re John Doe Corp., 675 F.2d 482, 488-89 (2d Cir. 1982). Conversations between attorney and the corporation's accountant for the purpose of a financial statement audit waived the privilege with respect to the contents of the conversation.

In re Honeywell Int'l, Inc. Sec. Litig., 230 F.R.D. 293, 298 (S.D.N.Y. 2003). Attorney-client privilege does not extend to communications between a company and its accountants or auditors.

U.S. ex rel. Robinson v. Northrop Grumman Corp., No. 89 C 6111, 2003 WL 21439871, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. June 20, 2003). Where company had engaged an independent auditor to conduct two reviews, one that was privileged and one that was not, the company failed to satisfy its burden of demonstrating that the attorney-client privilege protected certain interview memoranda that were generated during the privileged review, because the company had not offered proof that those memoranda were not subsequently used for the purposes of the non-privileged review.

Eglin Fed. Credit Union v. Cantor Fitzgerald Sec. Corp., 91 F.R.D. 414, 418-19 (N.D. Ga. 1981). Attorney-client privilege waived with respect to board minutes that had been made available to accountants for audit purposes.

First Fed. Savs. Bank v. United States, 55 Fed. Cl. 263, 269-70 (Fed. Cl. 2003). Disclosure of unredacted corporate board meeting minutes containing privileged documents to accounting firm during firm's performance of special accounting procedures did not waive the attorney-client privilege, because accounting firm was assisting law firm in providing savings and loan with legal advice regarding defalcation by corporate officer; however, subsequent disclosure of those same unredacted board minutes during an annual audit waived the privilege, because that disclosure did not have a legal purpose.

Where, however, counsel retains an auditor to assist in providing legal advice, the auditor acts as a privileged agent. See Wagoner v. Pfizer, Inc., No. 07-1229-JTM, 2008 WL 821952, at *4 (D. Kan. Mar. 26, 2008) (notes and summaries of interviews of defendant's employees prepared by a member of defendant's internal audit group at the direction of defendant's in-house counsel were privileged, even though there was no evidence that any attorney ever received or was an intended recipient of the notes, because a non-attorney gathering information at the direction of counsel falls within the privilege); U.S. ex rel. Robinson v. Northrop Grumman Corp., No. 89 C 6111, 2002 WL 31478259, at *4 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2002); see also Defining Privileged Agents, § I.B.3, supra.

States provide varying degrees of protection for communications between auditors/accountants and their clients. Where the applicable rule will be state law rather than federal law, these communications may remain privileged. See generally DAVID M. GREENWALD, MICHELE L. SLACHETKA & CAROLINE L. MENEAU, TESTIMONIAL PRIVILEGES (West 2023) § 3:6; see, e.g., Sherman v. Ryan, 911 N.E.2d 378, 400-02 (Ill. App. Ct. 2009) (holding that attorney-client and work product privileges not waived despite disclosure to outside auditors and financial advisors, considering Illinois statute establishing accountant-client privilege). The work product doctrine may apply to materials disclosed to auditors even if the attorney-client privilege is waived by the disclosure. See Waiver of Work Product Protection: Disclosure To Auditors, § III.E.3, infra.

4. Disclosure During Due Diligence and Negotiations

In the course of merger and acquisition and other transactions, a potential purchaser or other transaction party may request access to privileged materials, such as litigation files, as part of the due diligence process. The issue is whether disclosures will waive the attorney-client privilege. The question turns largely on whether the common interest doctrine extends the protected attorney-client circle to these third parties.

One line of cases holds that disclosures during due diligence do not waive privilege, at least where the parties take steps to maintain confidentiality beyond the limited disclosure in due diligence. The leading case finding no waiver is Hewlett-Packard Co. v. Bausch & Lomb, Inc., 115 F.R.D. 308 (N.D. Cal. 1987). The court held that disclosure of an opinion letter regarding the validity of a patent to a potential purchaser during due diligence did not waive privilege, because the parties shared a common interest in potential litigation if the transaction went forward, and the parties took steps to keep the letter confidential.

Courts following the Hewlett-Packard approach have found no waiver:

- (1) Where a deal is “locked up” at the time of disclosure. Tenneco Package Speciality and Consumer Prods., Inc. v. S.C. Johnson & Son, Inc., No. 98 C 2679, 1999 WL 754748, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 14, 1999) (privilege was not waived when asset purchase deal was largely locked up, and substantial steps were taken to keep the opinion confidential including the use of a confidentiality agreement and other specified procedures).
- (2) Where a disclosure occurs after completion of a deal and the parties share a common legal interest. Fresenius Medical Care Holdings, Inc. v. Roxane Labs., No. 2:05-cv-0889, 2007 WL 895059, at *3 (S.D. Ohio Mar. 21, 2007) (common interest doctrine protected a patent-holder’s privileged communications that were disclosed to the purchaser of the patents after completion of the sale because the patent-holder and the purchaser shared the legal interest of obtaining a strong and enforceable patent).
- (3) Where litigation reports were disclosed to a potential purchaser at a time when litigation was pending. Rayman v. American Charter Federal Sav. & Loan Ass’n, 148 F.R.D. 647, 656-657 (D. Neb. 1993).

Many courts have rejected the Hewlett-Packard approach and have found that disclosures to a third party during due diligence waives privilege. One of the leading cases is Bank Brussels Lambert v. Credit Lyonnais, 160 F.R.D. 437 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (disclosure of privileged documents to a bank group involved in a credit facility waived privilege; the common interest doctrine did not apply where the parties shared a common business strategy, but not a common legal strategy.)

See:

10X Genomics, Inc. v. Celsee Inc., 505 F.Supp.3d 334, 340 (D. Del. 2020). The court rejected Hewlett-Packard and found waiver where disclosures were made during merger negotiations prior to the deal being consummated.

Carnegie Institute of Washington v. Pure Grown Diamonds, 481 F.Supp.3d 276, 280 (S.D.N.Y. 2020). Where potential investor in a company shared its counsel’s advice with the company and with other potential investors, the disclosures waived the attorney-client privilege. The court held that the common interest doctrine did not apply to potential investors.

Corning, Inc. v. SRU Biosystems, LLC, 223 F.R.D. 189, 190-191 (D. Del. 2004). Disclosure of privileged documents to potential third-party acquirers waived privilege.

Dombrowski v. Bell Atlantic Corp., 129 F.Supp.2d 216, 219 (E.D. Pa. 2000). Discussions between counsel for acquirer and employees of target company were not privileged.

Feinberg v. Hibernia Corp., Civ. A. No. 90-4245, 1993 WL 92516, at 3-4 (E.D. La. Mar. 23, 1993). Giving bank access to loan files during course of due diligence waived privilege over the files.

In re: Sanchez Energy Corp., Case No. 19-34508, 2022 WL 17586713, at *4 (Bankr. S.D. Texas Dec. 12, 2022). Where a designated board member shared privileged communications with the designee investor, the attorney-client privilege was waived. “Under federal common law, the Court has no reason to believe that a designating shareholder is entitled to the privileged information of its designated board member.”

5. Authority to Waive Privilege

The attorney-client privilege belongs to the client and it is the client’s right to waive. In re Asia Global Crossing, Ltd., 322 B.R. 247, 255 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005). In addition to the client, an authorized agent has the power to waive the privilege for the client. See Interfaith Hous. Del., Inc. v. Town of Georgetown, 841 F. Supp. 1393, 1399 (D. Del. 1994) (an agent can only waive a corporation’s privilege if the agent is acting within the scope of her authority); see also United States v. Yielding, 657 F.3d 688, 707 (8th Cir. 2011) (personal representative of a deceased client generally may waive the client’s attorney-client privilege, but “only when the waiver is in the interest of the client’s estate and would not damage the client’s reputation”); Duration Of The Privilege, § I.F, supra. A lawyer is generally considered to possess the implied authority to disclose confidential client communications in the course of representing the client. RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 79 cmt. c (2000); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2325 (J. McNaughton rev. 1961); see also United States v. Martin, 773 F.2d 579, 583-84 (4th Cir. 1985); Velsicol Chem. Corp. v. Parsons, 561 F.2d 671, 674-75 (7th Cir. 1977). As a result, a lawyer’s disclosure of a communication in the course of conducting the case generally waives the privilege if the lawyer has the apparent or actual authority to disclose such information. See Kevlik v. Goldstein, 724 F.2d 844, 850 (1st Cir. 1984); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 93 (7th ed. 2016); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2325 (J. McNaughton rev. 1961). See also In re Sealed Case, 877 F.2d 976, 980 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (inadvertent production by attorney waived privilege). But see Hobley v. Burge, 226 F.R.D. 312, 314 (N.D. Ill. 2005), vacated on other grounds, 433 F.3d 946 (7th Cir. 2006).

A lawyer cannot maintain the privilege after it has been waived by the client. However, if an attorney discloses documents in discovery because she failed to recognize the privileged nature of the documents, the privilege may not be waived.

For organizational clients, the authority to waive the attorney-client privilege rests with the corporation’s management and is normally exercised by its officers and directors. Commodity Futures Trading Comm’n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 348 (1985); see also United States v. Chen, 99 F.3d 1495, 1502 (9th Cir. 1996) (communication between former employee and government did not waive privilege because former employee never had authority to waive); Gibson-Carter v. Rape Crisis Center, Civil Action No. 4:19-cv-122, 2020 WL 2815122, at *11 (S.D. Ga. May 29, 2020) (single board member waived privilege when he sent privileged information to litigation adversary); United States v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 132 F. Supp. 3d 558, 563-66 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) (in a civil matter, employee did not have authority to waive company’s privilege over the company’s objection and employee could not pursue an advice-of-counsel defense because it would put the company’s privilege “at issue” and result in waiver); Brinckerhoff v. Town of Paradise, No. CIV. S-10-0023 MCE GGH, 2010 WL 4806966, at *5 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 18, 2010) (dissident directors, former employees, and employees outside the control group cannot waive the privilege); Galli v. Pittsburg Unified Sch. Dist., No. C 09-3775 JSW (JL), 2010 WL 4315768, at *4-5 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 26, 2010) (only the school district's board may waive the privilege, not an individual board member or ex-employee) (citing Chen); Oasis Int'l Waters, Inc. v. United States, 110 Fed. Cl. 87, 112-13 (Fed. Cl. 2013) (although contracting officers may have authority to waive government's privilege, contract specialists, project managers, and other contract personnel may not have such authority). Managers must exercise the privilege in a manner that is consistent with their fiduciary duties to act in the best interests of the corporation and not for themselves as individuals. Weintraub, 471 U.S. at 348-49.

Whether a specific manager or employee has the authority to waive the privilege depends on whether the employee has been delegated express or implied authority to waive the privilege. Bus. Integration Servs. v. AT&T, 251 F.R.D. 121, 125-27 (S.D.N.Y. 2008), (a non-executive manager lacked authority to waive the attorney-client privilege); Denney v. Jenkens & Gilchrist, 362 F. Supp. 2d 407, 414-15 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (a partner authorized to represent the partnership with respect to tax shelters had sufficient authority to waive the attorney-client privilege over an internal opinion discussing such shelters); see also Pensacola Firefighters' Relief & Pension Fund Bd. of Dirs. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., No. 3:09cv53/MCR/MD, 2010 WL 4683935, at *5-6 (N.D. Fla. Nov. 10, 2010) (an employee's job title alone does not establish an employee's authority to waive the privilege).

In-house counsel has been found to possess the implied authority to waive the organization's privilege. See Velsicol Chem. Corp. v. Parsons, 561 F.2d 671, 674 (7th Cir. 1977). Although courts hold that employees, other than officers and attorneys, generally lack the authority to waive the attorney-client privilege, a corporation must act quickly to assert the privilege and mitigate any unauthorized disclosure by such employees or risk ratifying the otherwise ineffective waiver. Bus. Integration Servs. v. AT&T, 251 F.R.D. 121, 125-27 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (although a non-executive manager lacked the authority to waive the attorney-client privilege, the court found that the corporation's in-house counsel ratified the waiver when he did not assert the privilege or take action to protect the communication after he became aware of the disclosure).

At least one court has held that a corporation may unilaterally waive the attorney-client privilege and work product protection with respect to any communications made by a corporate officer in his corporate capacity, notwithstanding the existence of an individual attorney-client relationship between him and the corporation's counsel. In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 274 F.3d 563, 573 (1st Cir. 2001); see also United States v. Stein, 463 F. Supp. 2d 459, 463 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (holding that a partnership had the authority to waive the attorney-client privilege with respect to communications between partnership counsel and one of its partners).

When control of a corporation passes to new management, the authority to assert and waive the corporation's attorney-client privilege passes as well. Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 349 (1985) ("New managers . . . or simply normal succession may waive the attorney-client privilege with respect to communications made by former officers and directors."); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas 89-3 & 89-4, 902 F.2d 244, 248 (4th Cir. 1990); United States v. Schwimmer, 892 F.2d 237, 243 (2d Cir. 1989); In re Behr Dayton Thermal Prods., LLC, 298 F.R.D. 536, 543 (S.D. Ohio 2014) (liquidated corporation lacked standing to claim privilege over formerly controlled documents); Meoli v. Am. Med. Serv., 287 B.R. 808, 815-17 (S.D. Cal. 2003). Thus, a manager's power to waive the corporation's attorney-client privilege terminates when the manager loses his job. Weintraub, 471 U.S. at 349 (displaced personnel have no further control over the privilege); In re Hechinger Inv. Co., 285 B.R. 601, 610 (D. Del. 2002) (same); see also Criswell v. City of O'Fallon, No. 4:06CV01565 ERW, 2008 WL 250199 (E.D. Mo. Jan. 29, 2008) (defendant (city) could assert attorney-client privilege regarding privileged conversations between the plaintiff, a former employee of the city, and two city attorneys, while plaintiff was employed by the city). Former officers cannot assert protection over communications for which the corporation has waived the privilege. In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 274 F.3d 563, 573-74 (1st Cir. 2001); see also Assertion Of The Privilege By Organizations: Employees And Successor Corporations, § I.E.3, supra.

6. The Extent of Waiver

The traditional view was that disclosure or use of communications covered by the attorney-client privilege resulted in a waiver of all related communications regarding the same subject matter ("subject matter waiver"). See, e.g., In re Consol. Litig. Concerning Int'l Harvester's Disposition of Wis. Steel, 666 F. Supp. 1148, 1153 (N.D. Ill. 1987).

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 78 F.3d 251, 254-56 (6th Cir. 1996). Selective disclosure to government investigators of attorney's advice regarding several elements of a marketing plan waived privilege as to all information related to those elements, but not as to the entire marketing plan.

Pa. 2003). *Disclosure during discovery of six internal in-house counsel communications waived the privilege not just as to those specific communications, but also as to the subject-matter addressed in the communications. Union Pac. Res. Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of Am., No. 90 C 5378, 1993 WL 278526 (N.D. Ill. July 20, 1993). Full waiver results in loss of protection for communications revealed and past communications on the same matter. Prospective communications remain protected, however.

Helman v. Murry's Steaks, Inc., 728 F. Supp. 1099, 1103 (D. Del. 1990). Contested communications were not privileged since they related to the same subject previously disclosed by the client's other attorney.

a. Federal Rule of Evidence 502

Federal Rule of Evidence (“FRE”) 502, signed into law on September 19, 2008, is a substantial departure from the traditional approach to waiver with respect to disclosure of privileged material in federal proceedings or to a federal office or agency. See David M. Greenwald, Robert R. Stauffer & Erin R. Schrantz, New Federal Rule of Evidence 502: A Tool for Minimizing the Cost of Discovery, BLOOMBERG L. REP. (LITIGATION), Vol. 3, No. 4, Jan. 26, 2009. Adopted by Congress pursuant to the Commerce Clause, FRE 502 governs not just federal proceedings, but also state court proceedings, as discussed below. FRE 502 in its entirety provides:

The following provisions apply, in the circumstances set out, to disclosure of a communication or information covered by the attorney-client privilege or work-product protection.

(a) Disclosure Made in a Federal Proceeding or to a Federal Office or Agency; Scope of a Waiver. – When the disclosure is made in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency and waives the attorney-client privilege or work-product protection, the waiver extends to an undisclosed communication or information in a federal or state proceeding only if: (1) the waiver is intentional; (2) the disclosed and undisclosed communications or information concern the same subject matter; and (3) they ought in fairness to be considered together.

(b) Inadvertent Disclosure. – When made in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency, the disclosure does not operate as a waiver in a federal or state proceeding if: (1) the disclosure is inadvertent; (2) the holder of the privilege or protection took reasonable steps to prevent disclosure; and (3) the holder promptly took reasonable steps to rectify the error, including (if applicable) following Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(5)(B).

(c) Disclosure Made in a State Proceeding. When the disclosure is made in a state proceeding and is not the subject of a state-court order concerning waiver, the disclosure does not operate as a waiver in a federal proceeding if the disclosure: (1) would not be a waiver under this rule if it had been made in a federal proceeding; or (2) is not a waiver under the law of the state where the disclosure occurred.

(d) Controlling Effect of a Court Order. A federal court may order that the privilege or protection is not waived by disclosure connected with the litigation pending before the court--in which event the disclosure is also not a waiver in any other federal or state proceeding.

(e) Controlling Effect of a Party Agreement. An agreement on the effect of disclosure in a federal proceeding is binding only on the parties to the agreement, unless it is incorporated into a court order.

(f) Controlling Effect of This Rule. Notwithstanding Rules 101 and 1101, this rule applies to state proceedings and to federal court-annexed and federal court-mandated arbitration proceedings, in the circumstances set out in the rule. And notwithstanding Rule 501, this rule applies even if state law provides the rule of decision.

(g) Definitions. In this rule: (1) “attorney-client privilege” means the protection that applicable law provides for confidential attorney-client communications; and (2) “work-product protection” means the protection that applicable law provides for tangible material (or its intangible equivalent) prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial.

Fed. R. Evid. 502.

A number of commentators have explained the potential potency of proper use of FRE 502 and bemoaned the general failure by the bench and bar to take full advantage of this federal rule. See, e.g., Hon. Parties may take advantage of FRE 502, particularly FRE 502(d), following the 2015 amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which encourage parties to agree on privilege and work product issues at the outset of the case, and have their agreements entered by the court in a FRE 502(d) order. Rule 16(b)(3)(B) provides:

The scheduling order may: . . .

(iv) include any agreements the parties reach for asserting claims of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation material after information is produced, including agreements reached under Federal Rule of Evidence 502[.]

The amended version of Rule 26(f)(3)(D) provides:

(3) Discovery Plan. A discovery plan must state the parties' views and proposals on . . .

(D) any issues about claims of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation materials, including – if the parties agree on a procedure to assert these claims after production – whether to ask the court to include their agreement in order under Federal Rule of Evidence 502[.]

FRE 502 reflects an effort by Congress to enable litigants to minimize the extraordinary cost of civil discovery in federal proceedings without risking broad waiver of privilege in either federal or state proceedings. FRE 502 does this in two ways. First, FRE 502 limits subject matter waiver to voluntary disclosures and eliminates subject matter waiver for inadvertent disclosures. See FED. R. EVID. 502(a), (b). Second, FRE 502 enables federal courts to adopt protective orders and confidentiality agreements, including non-waiver provisions, that will be binding in other federal and state proceedings. See FED. R. EVID. 502(d), (e). Accord Brookfield Asset Mgmt., Inc. v. AIG Fin. Prods. Corp., No. 09 Civ. 8285 (PGG)(FM), 2013 WL 142503, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Although FRE 502 represents a substantial change in the way that waiver will be applied, FRE 502 is limited in several ways, as discussed in more detail below. First, FRE 502 addresses “disclosure” not “use” of privileged information. Second, FRE 502 relates to disclosures to a federal office or agency and in a federal proceeding; it does not address disclosures made prior to a federal proceeding other than to a federal office or agency. Third, FRE 502 does not address the scope of waiver in state courts with respect to disclosures made in state court proceedings.

FRE 502 applies to proceedings commenced after September 19, 2008, and may be applied by the courts to matters commenced before that date “insofar as is just and practicable, in all proceedings pending” when enacted. Pub. L. 110-332, § 1(c), 122 Stat. 3537 (2008). See Rhoads Indus., Inc. v. Bldg. Materials Corp. of Am., 254 F.R.D. 216, 218 (E.D. (1) FRE 502(a): Limited Subject Matter Waiver

FRE 502(a) provides that when disclosure in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency waives the attorney-client privilege or work product protection, that waiver will extend to undisclosed communications or information in a federal or state proceeding only if: (1) the waiver was intentional; (2) the disclosed and undisclosed information concern the same subject matter; and (3) “they ought in fairness to be considered together.” FED. R. EVID. 502(a). The Judicial Conference Committee Notes to FRE 502 (“Explanatory Notes”) provide:

Subdivision (a). The rule provides that a voluntary disclosure in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency, if a waiver, generally results in a waiver only of the communication or information disclosed; a subject matter waiver (of either privilege or work product) is reserved for those unusual situations in which fairness requires a further disclosure of related, protected information, in order to prevent a selective and misleading presentation of evidence to the disadvantage of the adversary. Thus, subject matter waiver is limited to situations in which a party intentionally puts protected information into the litigation in a selective, misleading and unfair manner. It follows that an inadvertent disclosure of protected information can never result in a subject matter waiver.

Subject matter waiver occurs only if disclosed and non-disclosed information “ought in fairness to be considered together.” Although FRE 502 does not define “fairness,” the Explanatory Notes state: “[A] party that makes a selective, misleading presentation that is unfair to the adversary opens itself to a more complete and accurate presentation.” Fed. R. Evid. 502, Judicial Conference Committee Note on Subdivision (a) (identifying FRE 106 as the source of the “ought in fairness” language).

Courts applying Rule 502(a) only rarely find that fairness requires the disclosure of related information. Fairness considerations generally weigh in favor of additional disclosure only where a producing party affirmatively uses disclosed privileged material in litigation.

See:

In re Keurig Green Mountain Single-Serve Coffee Antitrust Litigation, Civil Action No.: 14 MD 2542 (VSB) (SLC), 2020 WL 3034792, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. June 5, 2020). No subject matter waiver where producing party’s 30(b)(6) witness reviewed and testified about a document that redacted privileged portions, where it was not shown that producing party intended to rely on the document, and where it was not shown that use of the redacted document was misleading or resulted in any tactical advantage.

McCullough v. Hanley, No. 17 CV 50116, 2019 WL 3776962, at *12 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 12, 2019). Subject matter waiver under FRE 502(a) not appropriate where privilege holder will not use disclosed information affirmatively to influence a decision-maker.

Bona Fide Conglomerate, Inc. v. SourceAmerica, No. 3:140CV-00751-GPC-DHB, 2016 WL 4361808, at *9 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 16, 2016). Subject matter waiver did not apply where producing party asserted it would not rely on privileged information and opposing party first placed privileged information at issue.

Trireme Med., LLC v. Angioscore, Inc., No. 14-CV-02946-LB, 2016 WL 4191828, at *2-3 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 9, 2016). Disclosure of inventorship and contributions to inventorship in a patent case did not result in subject matter waiver of the entire prosecution file where party was not making selective disclosures to obtain a tactical advantage.

Gateway Deliveries, LLC v. Mattress Liquidators, Inc., No. 2:14-CV-02033 JWS, 2016 WL 232427, at *4 (D. Ariz. Jan. 20, 2016). Subject matter waiver not justified where producing party asserted it would not present disclosed documents as evidence because they “ha[d] nothing to do with [the] lawsuit.”

In re Gen. Motors LLC Ignition Switch Litig., 80 F. Supp. 3d 521, 533-34 (S.D.N.Y. 2015). Where party has neither offensively used a report in litigation nor made a selective or misleading presentation that is unfair to adversaries in litigation, it is not the “unusual and rare circumstances in which fairness requires a judicial finding of waiver with respect to related, protected information.”

Freedman v. Weatherford Int’l Ltd., No. 12 Civ. 2121(LAK)(JCF), 2014 WL 3767034, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. July 25, 2014). Defendant’s disclosure of internal investigation materials to the SEC did not result in subject matter waiver where there was no indication defendant sought to use the disclosure to its advantage in litigation.

Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 293 F.R.D. 244, 253 (D. Mass. 2013). Fairness did not require disclosure of a forensic review conducted by an outside consultant because plaintiff did not plan to use the review at trial.

Lott v. Tradesmen Int’l, Inc., No. 5:09-CV-183-KKC, 2013 WL 308853, at *2 (E.D. Ky. Jan. 25, 2013). Fairness did not require subject matter waiver because the evidence plaintiff disclosed was inadmissible and therefore would result in no harm to defendant.

But see:

In re King’s Daughters Health System, Inc., 31 F.4th 520, 528 (6th Cir. 2022). Intentional partial disclosure of experts’ findings waived as to all undisclosed information related to experts’ review of physician’s procedures, where disclosed and undisclosed information ought in fairness to be considered together.

United States v. Coburn, Civ. No. 2:19-cr-00120 (KM), 2022 WL 357217, at * 7 (D. N.J. Feb. 1, 2022). Disclosure of significant details of internal investigation to the government, including detailed summaries of 41 interviews of 19 employees, resulted in subject matter waiver as to “all memoranda, notes, summaries, or other records of the interviews themselves,” as well as to “documents and communications that were reviewed and formed any part of the basis for any presentation, oral or written, to the DOJ.”

Schnatter v. 247 Group, LLC, Civil Action No. 3:20-CV-00003-BJB-CHL, 2021 WL 5018741, at * 11 (W.D. Ky. Oct. 28, 2021). Where party disclosed privileged report on website as part of campaign to expose members of the public to the report including potential jurors, fairness required disclosure of documents and communications related to the report.

Pearlstein v. Blackberry Limited, No. 13-CV-07060 (CM)(KHP), 2019 WL 1259382, at *7-8, *17-18 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 19, 2019). Where party disclosed privileged material to the SEC for the purpose of convincing SEC to take action, fairness required disclosure of undisclosed communications to third-party litigant.

Banneker Ventures, LLC v. Graham, 253 F. Supp. 3d 64, 74 (D.D.C. 2017). Disclosure of privileged investigation report and affirmative use of the report in litigation resulted in subject-matter waiver: “Fairness dictates that if [defendant] is able to use the [report] and facts disclosed in that report to support its claims and defenses, then [plaintiff] is entitled to the remaining facts and information contained in the interview memoranda that were not included in the [report].”

Walder v. Bio-Red Labs., Inc., 212 F. Supp. 3d 829, 851-53 (N.D. Cal. 2016) (court found subject matter waiver under FRE 502(a) where defendant not only disclosed privileged information to governmental agencies, but also intended to use the material offensively at trial to defeat plaintiffs’ claims, while precluding plaintiff from presenting related communications to rebut the evidence);

Hunt v. Schauerhamer, No. 2:15-CV-1-TC-PMW, 2016 WL 75064, at *4 (D. Utah Jan. 6, 2016). In dispute concerning settlement of § 1983 action, subject matter waiver occurred under FRE 502(a) and Utah privilege law where plaintiff placed communications with her former counsel at issue in court filings.

Graff v. Haverhill North Coke Co., No. 1:09-cv-670, 2012 WL 5495514, at *16-17 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 13, 2012). Subject matter waiver occurred where a party disclosed the final draft of an audit report because it would be “unfair to permit defendants to produce the final version of the [audit] . . . yet withhold the draft versions of the audit and other communications that may undermine or help explain the factual basis for [the audit’s] conclusion.”

(2) FRE 502(b): Inadvertent Waiver

Rule 502(b) establishes the “middle” test for determining inadvertent waiver. See Inadvertent Disclosure, § I.G.8, infra.

(3) FRE 502(c): Disclosures Made in a State Proceeding

When disclosure occurs in a state proceeding “and is not the subject of a state-court order concerning waiver,” FRE 502(c) provides that there is no waiver in a subsequent federal proceeding if the disclosure: (1) would not be a waiver under federal law; or (2) would not be a waiver under the law of the state “where the disclosure occurred.” FED. R. EVID. 502(c). The Explanatory Note explains: “The Committee determined that the proper solution for the federal court is to apply the law that is most protective of privilege and work product.” FED. R. EVID. 502(c) advisory committee’s note. However, “[t]he rule does not address the enforceability of a state court confidentiality order in a federal proceeding, as that question is covered both by statutory law and principles of federalism and comity.” Id. (citing 28 U.S.C. § 1738). “Thus, a state court order finding no waiver in connection with a disclosure made in a state court proceeding is enforceable under existing law in subsequent federal proceedings.” Id.

(4) FRE 502(d) & (e): Court Orders and Party Agreements

The 2006 and 2015 amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provided a number of tools that parties could use to minimize the cost of privilege review. For example, Rule 16(b) provides a framework for the parties to address privilege issues in a scheduling order, which may provide reasonable time limits that enable parties to conduct phased discovery, non-waiver/“claw back” or “quick peek” provisions. A “claw back” provision generally allows a party who inadvertently produces privileged material to recover the material from its opponent without waiver of the attorney-client privilege or work product protection. A “quick peek” arrangement allows a party to disclose materials to an opponent prior to any privilege review and to conduct a subsequent privilege review of any materials designated by the opponent for copying. Prior to the adoption of FRE 502, these arrangements were enforceable as to the parties to a specific federal proceeding, but there was no certainty that a confidentiality agreement, protective order, or even a ruling by the court finding no waiver would be followed by other courts involving different parties. See Hopson v. Mayor & City of Balt., 232 F.R.D. 228, 235 (D. Md. 2005).

FRE 502(d) solves this problem by providing that a federal court “may order that the privilege or protection is not waived by disclosure connected with the litigation pending before the court – in which event the disclosure is also not a waiver in any other federal or state proceeding.” FED. R. EVID. 502(d). See SEC v. Bank of Am. Corp., No. 09 Civ. 06829, 2009 WL 3297493 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 14, 2009) (entering order pursuant to FRE 502(d) to limit waiver to documents actually disclosed to government and adopting parties’ definition of subject matter of the disclosed documents); Whitaker Chalk Swindle & Sawyer, LLP v. Dart Oil & Gas Corp., No. 4:08-CV-684-Y, 2009 WL 464989, at *5 (N.D. Tex. Feb. 23, 2009) (issuing order pursuant to FRE 502(d) to protect disclosures in suit over attorney fees from waiving privilege in ongoing state court proceedings). FRE 502(e) provides that party agreements regarding the “effect of disclosure in a federal proceeding” will be binding on other parties and in other proceedings if “incorporated into a court order.” FED. R. EVID. 502(e). See FED. R. EVID. 502(e) advisory committee’s note (“The rule makes clear that if parties want protection against non-parties from a finding of waiver by disclosure, the agreement must be made part of a court order.”).

Courts, both before and after the enactment of FRE 502, have been willing to enforce the terms of parties’ agreements regarding waiver.

See:

Lifebio, Inc. v. Eva Garland Consulting, LLC, -- F.Supp.3d --, 2023 WL 3258586, at *6 (S.D. Ohio May 4, 2023). Failure of a party to comply with claw back procedure agreed by the parties resulted in waiver.

In re Grand Jury 16-3817 (16-4), 740 F. App’x 243, 245 (4th Cir. 2018). Court enforced against government non-waiver agreement entered into by government and corporation.
Rainer v. Union Carbide Corp., 402 F.3d 608, 625 (6th Cir. 2005), opinion amended on reh’g, (Mar. 25, 2005). Court enforced agreed protective order and found no waiver.

Global Fleet Sales, LLC v. Delunas, No. 12-1571, 2016 WL 3365763, at *4 (E.D. Mich. June 17, 2016). Plaintiff waived ability to contest defendants’ assertion of privilege by failing to object within the deadlines set in the protective order entered at the outset of the proceeding.

Williams v. Allstate Fire and Casualty Insurance Co., No. CIV-13-828-D, 2015 WL 1602054, at *5 (W.D. Okla. Apr. 9, 2015). Where FRE 502(d) order used word “inadvertent” and required claw back within 15 days of discovery, request for claw back after 19 days waived privilege; in dicta court noted party failed to demonstrate inadvertence because party did not prove it had taken reasonable steps to prevent disclosure.

United States v. Daugerdas, No. S3 09 CR 581(WHP), 2012 WL 92293, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 11, 2012). Denying defendant’s motion to unseal email produced by employer in defendant’s criminal proceeding for use in arbitration against employer where FRE 502(d) order provided that the employer’s production of documents in defendant's criminal proceeding did not waive privilege "in any Federal or State proceeding, including any and all arbitration and private dispute resolution proceedings."

Beyond Sys., Inc. v. Kraft Foods, Inc., No. PJM-08-409, 2010 WL 1568480, at *2 (D. Md. Apr. 19, 2010). Privilege waived where defendant inadvertently produced a privileged spreadsheet but did not demand the spreadsheet's return until one month after discovering it was produced, more than the 21 days stipulated in the parties' claw back provision.

Coffeyville Res. Ref. & Mktg. v. Liberty Surplus Ins. Corp., 261 F.R.D. 586, 591-92 (D. Kan. Sept. 16, 2009). Refusing plaintiff's request to review in camera documents inadvertently produced by defendant where protective order provided for a "prompt[]" return" of inadvertently produced documents upon request of the producing party.

Emp'rs Ins. Co. of Wausau v. Skinner, No. CV 07-735(JS)(AKT), 2008 WL 4283346, at *7 (E.D.N.Y. 2008). Parties' confidentiality agreement prevented waiver of privilege.

But see:

Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, London v. Nat'l R. R. Passenger Corp., 218 F. Supp. 3d 197, 201-03 (E.D.N.Y. 2016). An order entered pursuant to FRE 502(d) did not prevent waiver where a producing party allowed its opponent to use documents as deposition exhibits and demanded to "claw back" the documents after the deposition.

SurfCast, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., No. 2:12-cv-333-JAW, 2013 WL 4039413, at *3-5 (D. Me. Aug. 7, 2013). Finding that even where the court had entered an order stating that inadvertent disclosure did not constitute waiver, plaintiff waived the privilege when it failed to object to the use of a privileged document during a deposition.

In re Google RTB Consumer Privacy Litigation, Case No. 21-cv-021555-YGR (VKD), 2022 WL 1316586, at *4 (N.D. Cal. May 3, 2022). Court denied plaintiff's request that the FRE 502(d) order allow the parties to use the contents of clawed back documents to challenge privilege.

United States v. Caroleo, 17-cr-177 (ENV), 2019 WL 5869690, at 2 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 11, 2019). Court ruled pursuant to FRE 502(d) that a letter sent by an incarcerated defendant to the court, which attached a privileged email to his attorney, was inadvertent and did not waive privilege. FRE 502(d) is not limited to situations involving production of ESI.

Soc'y of Prof Eng'g Employees in Aerospace, IFPTE Local 2001 v. Boeing Co., Nos. 05-1251-MLB, 07-1043-MLB, 2010 WL 1141269, at *5 (D. Kan. Mar. 22, 2010). Claw back agreement was not controlling with respect to disclosures pre-dating the litigation.

Entry of a FRE 502(d) order obviates the need to provide the elements set forth in FRE 502(b). BNP Paribas Mortg. Corp. v. Bank of Am., N.A., 09 Civ. 9783, 2013 WL 2322678, at *8-10 (S.D.N.Y. May 21, 2013). (Where a protective order issued under FRE 502(d) allowed claw back of documents without waiver, the court would enforce the plain language meaning of the agreement; the parties did not need to comply with the requirements of FRE 502(b); East Coast Sheet Metal Fabricating Corp. v. Autodesk, Civ. No. 12-cv-517-LM, 2014 WL 4627262, at *2 (D. N.H. Sept. 16, 2014) ("[FRE] 502(d) was adopted for the express purpose of allowing parties to limit the costs associated with screening documents produced during discovery for privileged materials.”); Rajala v. McGuire Woods, LLP, No. 08-2638-CM-DJW, 2013 WL 50200, at *5 (D. Kan. Jan. 3, 2013) (Rule 502(d) order is designed to allow the parties and the court to defeat the default operation of Rule 502(b) in order to reduce costs and expedite discovery); Brookfield Asset Mgmt., Inc. v. AIG Fin. Prods. Corp., No. 09 Civ. 8285 (PGG)(FM), 2013 WL 142503, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 7, 2013) (party allowed to claw back draft minutes of board of directors meeting produced due to vendor error pursuant to the terms of the parties’ Rule 502(d) order, which contained no limitations and which provided for the right to claw back privileged documents “no matter what the circumstances giving rise to their production were”).

Parties should be careful when drafting proposed FRE 502(d) orders to avoid incorporating the terms of FRE 502(b) that the FRE 502(d) order is intended to obviate. For example, a reference to “reasonable” steps or “prompt” action in a FRE 502(d) order may require the parties to incur significant cost to demonstrate that they acted reasonably and promptly – defeating the goal of FRE 502(d) to minimize the cost of discovery. See, e.g., Alcon Mfg., Ltd. v. Apotex Inc., No. 1:06-cv-1642-RLY-TAB, 2008 WL 5070465, at *4-6 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 26, 2008) (court was required to determine whether the producing party acted promptly and in good faith where the parties’ Rule 502(d) order conditioned the right to claw back privileged documents on whether the producing party “promptly” made a “good-faith” representation that the production was inadvertent or mistaken and took “prompt remedial action” to rectify the disclosure). See also Burd v. Ford Motor Co., No. 3:13-cv-20976, 2015 WL 1650447, at *3-4 (S.D.W. Va. Apr. 14, 2015) (defendant was able to claw back privileged document only after jumping through the onerous hoops of FRE 502(b), which had been incorporated into the “clawback order” entered at the outset of the matter).

Even absent an agreement by the parties, courts may impose claw back agreements or other provisions on the parties where they deem appropriate. See, e.g., FED. R. EVID. 502(d) advisory committee’s note (“[A] confidentiality order is enforceable whether or not it memorializes an agreement among the parties to the litigation. Party agreement should not be a condition of enforceability of a federal court’s order.”); Good v. American Water Works Co., Inc., Civ. No. 2:14-01374, 2014 WL 5486827, at *2-*3 (S.D. W. Va. Oct. 29, 2014) (over plaintiffs’ objection entering defendants’ proposed FRE 502(d) order allowing non-computerized review of potentially privileged documents with greater clawback protection than FRE 502(b)); Radian Asset Assur., Inc. v. College of Christian Brothers of New Mexico, No. Civ. 09-0885 JB/DJS, 2010 WL 4928866, at *2, *8-*9 (D. N.M. Oct. 22, 2010) (entering FRE 502(d) order over plaintiff’s objection where defendant agreed to produce all ESI in response to plaintiff’s requests, provided the court entered a FRE 502(d) order); Rajala v. McGuire Woods, LLP, No. 08-2638, 2010 WL 2949582, at *4, *6-*7 (D. Kan. July 22, 2010) (imposing a “claw back” agreement pursuant to FRE 502(d) and (e) where the parties could not agree on the form of a protective order but defendant had demonstrated that a claw back provision was appropriate given that plaintiff sought broad discovery, including voluminous ESI, from defendant). See also In re Cellular Tel. P’ship Litig., C.A. No. 6885-VCL, 2017 WL 3769202, at *1-2 (Del. Ch. Aug. 29, 2017) (over plaintiffs’ objection, authorizing special discovery master to review documents over which privilege was disputed, and, holding that if documents were deemed relevant and privileged, they would be produced but privilege would be preserved as against third parties pursuant to Delaware Uniform Rule of Evidence 510(f)).

However, courts may not impose a quick peek on a producing party. Winfield v. City of New York, 106 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. 432, 2018 WL 2148435, at *4-5 (S.D.N.Y. May 10, 2018) (holding that could not order a “quick peek” of privileged materials over the objections of a privilege holder).

Some courts have published sample FRE 502(d) orders. See, e.g., Seventh Circuit Electronic Discovery Committee, [Proposed] Case Management Order No. 2, available at <https://www.ediscoverycouncil.com/content/model-discovery-plan-and-privilege-order> (accessed July 4, 2023). See also Model Draft Of Rule 502(d) Order, 81 Fordham L. Rev. 1587 (2013). The parties’ initiative in drafting proposed orders is important, however, because only a small number of districts address FRE 502 in their local rules and guidelines.

b. “Disclosure” vs. “Use”

FRE 502 addresses “disclosure” of privileged information, but it does not address “use” of privileged information. Although disclosure of a privileged document may not result in subject matter waiver, a producing party’s use of that document may. Some courts have entered Rule 502(d) orders that provide that the provisions of Rule 502(a) apply when a disclosing party uses or indicates it may use information produced pursuant to the order. See, e.g., Model Draft of a Rule 502(d) Order, 81 Fordham L. Rev. 1587 (2013). This approach is likely to prevent broad subject matter waiver, but allows a court to ensure that the receiving party is not unfairly prejudiced by the producing party’s use of otherwise privileged information.

FRE 502 also does not address “implied waiver,” such as reliance on the advice of counsel, which may result in “at issue” waiver. See FED. R. EVID. 502 advisory committee’s note (“The rule governs only certain waivers by disclosure. Other common-law waiver doctrines may result in a finding of waiver even where there is no disclosure of privileged information. This rule is not intended to displace or modify federal common law concerning waiver of privilege or work product where no disclosure has been made.”). See “At Issue” Claims And Defenses, § I.G.10, infra.

c. Pre-Litigation Disclosures

FRE 502(a) and FRE 502(b) address disclosures made “in a federal proceeding.” FRE 502(d) addresses court orders regarding the effect of disclosures “connected with the litigation pending before the court.” At least two courts have held that FRE 502, therefore, does not apply to disclosures which pre-date the litigation at issue. Alpert v. Riley, 267 F.R.D. 202, 210 (S.D. Tex. 2010) (disclosure that occurred prior to litigation before the court not governed by FRE 502, but instead by common law); Ctr. Partners, Ltd. v. Growth Head GP, LLC, 981 N.E.2d 345, 355-56 (Ill. 2012) (disclosure during business negotiations constituted extrajudicial disclosure not governed by FRE 502’s subject matter waiver rules). The Federal Circuit, however, has applied FRE 502’s fairness considerations to pre-litigation disclosures. Wi-LAN, Inc. v. LG Elecs., Inc., 684 F.3d 1364, 1373-74 (Fed. Cir. 2012) (privileged documents disclosed before commencement of suit are subject to FRE 502’s fairness balancing test). Moreover, extra-judicial disclosures made “in connection with” litigation before the court may be governed by FRE 502. Multiquip, Inc. v. Water Mgmt. Sys. LLC, No. CV 08-

403-S-EJL-REB, 2009 WL 4261214, at *3 n.3 (D. Idaho Nov. 23, 2009) (applying FRE 502(b) to email inadvertently sent to third party during course of litigation). See also Ecological Rights Found. v. Fed. Emergency Mgmt. Agency, No. 15-CV-04068-DMR, 2017 WL 24859, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 3, 2017) (court held that it had inherent authority to consider government's request to claw back documents inadvertently provided pursuant to a FOIA request protected by an applicable FOIA exemption).

Finally, that FRE 502(a) addresses disclosures made "in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency." FED. R. EVID. 502(a) (emphasis added). Therefore, pre-litigation disclosures to a federal office or agency are governed by FRE 502(a).

d. Partial Disclosure

In many cases, a party has not blatantly repeated a confidential conversation, but has merely revealed a portion of the communicated information. The courts have struggled to determine when a disclosure has revealed so much detail that the privilege is effectively waived. See, e.g., In re Int'l Harvester's Disposition of Wis. Steel, Nos. 81 C 7076, 82 C 6895 & 85 C 3521, 1987 WL 20408, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 20, 1987) (explaining that after a certain point of disclosure the opponent is entitled to see essentially the full file on the subject so that a full and fair evaluation of the disclosed information can be made). When the evidence shows that the client abandoned the protection of confidentiality, even a partial disclosure of a privileged communication will constitute full waiver. However, where a client has revealed only a factually isolated portion of a communication, particularly in an extrajudicial statement, then a limited waiver may result and related communications remain privileged.

See:

In re Keeper of the Records, 348 F.3d 16, 23-24 (1st Cir. 2003). Waivers by implication can extend beyond the matter actually revealed. If one party puts information at issue for its own benefit, it would be unfair not to disclose related information. However, the extrajudicial disclosure of attorney-client communications, not later used for an adversarial advantage, does not waive the privilege on all related communications.

In re von Bulow, 828 F.2d 94, 104 (2d Cir. 1987). Where a client acquiesced in his attorney's publication of a book containing privileged information, the court held that only a partial waiver occurred. A client can impliedly waive the privilege and must take affirmative action to prevent disclosure once the disclosure is known to be imminent. However, extrajudicial disclosures that are not used to an adversary's disadvantage result in only partial disclosure and do not waive the privilege as to undisclosed portions.

Sullivan v. Warminster Twp., 274 F.R.D. 147, 154 (E.D. Pa. 2011). Police chief's limited statement during a press conference that outside counsel's investigation revealed no misconduct and that police department had "gotten a clean bill of health on everything" waived privilege only with respect to specific communications with counsel, not with respect to the entire investigation. The court held that partial waivers made outside of a judicial proceeding do not implicitly waive the privilege as to all communications on the same subject matter.

Pensacola Firefighters' Relief & Pension Fund Bd. of Dirs. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., No. 3:09cv53/MCR/MD, 2010 WL 4683935, at *3-7 (N.D. Fla. Nov. 10, 2010). Employee did not waive the company's privilege when he revealed his impressions of an internal investigation. The employee did not explicitly reference attorney-generated reports or have personal knowledge of what was in the reports.

SEC v. Beacon Hill Asset Mgmt. LLC, 231 F.R.D. 134, 141-43 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). Disclosure in a book waived the privilege as to the matters therein, but not as to matters which were unpublished. The unpublished matters were not at issue in the litigation and thus fairness did not require disclosure.

*Aspex Eyewear, Inc. v. E'Lite Optik, Inc., No. CIV.A.3:98-CV-2996-D, 2002 WL 1592606, at 2 (N.D. Tex. Jul 17, 2002). Distribution of letter from litigation counsel to customers concluding that patent held by defendant-client did not infringe plaintiff's patent did not affect waiver of attorney-client privilege.

Vicinanzo v. Brunswick & Fils, Inc., 739 F. Supp. 891, 893 (S.D.N.Y. 1990). An insurance company did not fully waive the privilege for its insurance premium structure when it revealed documents that summarized counsel's opinion of the structure in conclusory and unrevealing terms. Use of such terms indicated an intention by the company to maintain confidentiality.

Yankee Atomic Elec. Co. v. United States, 54 Fed. Cl. 306, 316 (Fed. Cl. 2002), rev'd on other grounds, Sacramento Mun. Util. Dist. v. United States, 293 F. App'x 766 (Fed. Cir. Aug. 7, 2008), and Yankee Atomic Elec. Co. v. United States, 536 F.3d 1268 (Fed. Cir. 2008). "Extrajudicial" disclosure of privileged communications did not effect subject matter waiver where no litigation prejudice would occur.

The extent of waiver is determined by analyzing whether the unrevealed portion of the communication is so related to the part that has been revealed that further disclosure would not significantly impinge on the client's interest in confidentiality (i.e., the client has revealed so much that he has no further reasonable expectation of confidentiality). In making this determination, the court will consider, among other factors, the temporal proximity of the portions, the presence or absence of other persons at disclosure, and the subjects covered in each portion.

See:

In re Target Tech. Co., 208 F. App'x 825, 826-27 (Fed. Cir. 2006). Extrajudicial disclosure of sales letter that revealed attorney's conclusions concerning patentability and infringement, but not details of the privileged communication, constituted waiver of attorney-client privilege, but was limited to subject matter of the sales letter only.

In re von Bulow, 828 F.2d 94, 102 (2d Cir. 1987). Disclosure of privileged material did not waive privilege beyond matters actually revealed.

Weil v. Inv./Indicators, Research & Mgmt., Inc., 647 F.2d 18, 24 (9th Cir. 1981). Disclosure of documents provided to an outside auditor results in waiver only to communications about that matter, not to related matters within the same general topic.

*Long-Term Capital Holdings v. United States, No. 3:01 CV 1290 (JBA), 2002 WL 31934139, at 2 (D. Conn. Oct. 30, 2002). Extrajudicial disclosure of attorney-client communication held not to constitute a subject matter waiver where advice was not put at issue by privilege holder in litigation.

Dale v. Frankel, 206 F. Supp. 2d 315, 317-19 (D. Conn. 2001). Finding waiver where production of privileged documents was both "deliberate and selective."

Harding v. Dana Transp., Inc., 914 F. Supp. 1084, 1092 (D.N.J. 1996). Partial waiver applied where party gave third party “only a superficial glance at certain information, attempting to maintain the secrecy of the remainder.”

Rauh v. Coyne, 744 F. Supp. 1181, 1185 (D.D.C. 1990). Disclosure of a brief description of an internal investigation report does not waive the privilege for the report itself.

Nevertheless, in some cases, fairness requires that even a partial disclosure result in disclosure beyond the materials actually revealed. See, e.g., Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Republic of Philippines, 951 F.2d 1414, 1426 n.12 (3d Cir. 1991). In the interest of fairness, full subject matter waiver will result from a partial disclosure in two instances: (1) testimonial revelation and (2) self-serving disclosure.

When a person testifies before a fact-finder (e.g., a jury), partial disclosure of privileged communications almost always results in full disclosure. This is necessary to prevent the fact-finder from being confused, misled, or being presented with an incomplete evidentiary picture. See, e.g., Hollins v. Powell, 773 F.2d 191, 196 (8th Cir. 1985) (waiver is implied when a client testifies about a portion of a privileged communication); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 79 cmt. f (2000).

Similarly, disclosures that are self-serving will result in full disclosure. In these cases, fairness requires the disclosure of the remainder of the communication to present a balanced account. Federal Rule of Evidence 502 is in accord with these earlier cases.

See:

In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 808-09 (D.C. Cir. 1982). When party reveals part of a privileged communication to gain an advantage in litigation, the party waives the privilege for all other communications on the same subject matter.

Kirschner v. Klemons, No. 99CIV4828RCCDFE, 2001 WL 1346008, at *2-4 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 31, 2001), order superseded on other grounds, 2001 WL 36140906 (S.D.N.Y. Nov 13, 2001). Intentional and self-serving disclosure effected a subject-matter waiver.

Golden Valley Microwave Foods, Inc. v. Weaver Popcorn Co., 132 F.R.D. 204, 208 (N.D. Ind. 1990). Inadvertent production of privileged communications results in waiver only for the disclosed document unless the disclosure was self-serving.

Carte Blanche (Sing.) PTE, Ltd. v. Diners Club Int'l, Inc., 130 F.R.D. 28, 33 (S.D.N.Y. 1990). Where party reveals portion of document, the privilege is waived for the rest of the document so as to make the disclosure complete.

Blue Lake Forest Prods. v. United States, 75 Fed. Cl. 779, 786-87 (Fed. Cl. 2007). Where the government included a privileged document in the administrative record, it effectively waived the right to all privileged documents concerning the same subject matter as the disclosed document.

7. Disclosure to the Government

When litigants voluntarily disclose documents or communications to government agencies, the documents and communications may lose the protection of the privilege and be subject to discovery by other parties, including private litigants. Corporations have argued that voluntary disclosures to government agencies should be considered a selective waiver of privileges solely for the benefit of the public agency's review, and should not be considered as a waiver for purposes of private civil litigation (many courts use the term "limited waiver" rather than "selective waiver"). The seminal case supporting the selective waiver doctrine is Diversified Indus., Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596 (8th Cir. 1977) (en banc). A clear majority of courts reject the selective waiver doctrine, and hold that selective disclosure of privileged material to a government agency waives the privilege as to all third-party litigants. See, e.g., In re Qwest Commc'ns Int'l, Inc., 450 F.3d 1179, 1186 (10th Cir. 2006). For a detailed discussion of the selective waiver doctrine and the risks associated with disclosure of privileged material to government agencies, see Disclosure To The Government, § I.H, infra.

8. Inadvertent Disclosure

Sometimes a party inadvertently discloses privileged communications, particularly in cases where large numbers of documents are produced. Historically, the courts differed as to whether these disclosures waived the attorney-client privilege. Prior to the adoption of Federal Rule of Evidence 502 in September 2008, courts generally followed one of three distinct approaches to attorney-client privilege waiver based on inadvertent disclosures: (1) the strict approach, (2) the "middle" approach, and (3) the lenient approach. Gray v. Bicknell, 86 F.3d 1472, 1483 (8th Cir. 1996). There is no unified approach among state courts, which may follow any of the three approaches, or a variable thereof.

Under the strict approach, adopted by the court in In re Sealed Case, 877 F.2d 976, 980 (D.C. Cir. 1989), any document produced, either intentionally or otherwise, loses its privileged status. Gray, 86 F.3d at 1483; see also In re Grand Jury, 475 F.3d 1299, 1305 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (reaffirming In re Sealed Case). The strict test was criticized because it had the potential to chill communications between clients and attorneys. Gray, 86 F.3d at 1483.

Under the lenient approach, a party had to knowingly waive attorney-client privilege; a determination of inadvertence ended the inquiry. Id. This approach fostered open communications between client and attorney but created no incentive for parties to maintain tight control over privileged material. Id.

The majority of courts applied the middle approach, using a case-by-case analysis to determine the reasonableness of the precautions taken to protect against disclosure and the actions taken to recover the communication. The middle approach struck a balance between protecting attorney-client privilege and allowing, in certain situations, the unintended release of privileged documents to waive that privilege. Id. at 1484. The Restatement lists several of the factors frequently used by courts to analyze inadvertent waiver pursuant to the middle approach:

- (1) the relative importance of the communication (the more sensitive the communication, the greater the necessary protective measures);
- (2) the efficacy of precautions taken and of additional precautions that might have been taken;
- (3) externally imposed pressures regarding the timing or the volume of required disclosure, if any;
- (4) whether disclosure was by act of the client or lawyer or by a third person; and
- (5) the degree of disclosure to non-privileged persons.

RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 79 cmt. h (2000); see also Allread v. City of Grenada, 988 F.2d 1425, 1434-35 (5th Cir. 1993) (five-factor reasonableness test for inadvertent production); Herndon v. U.S. Bancorp Asset Mgmt. Inc., No. 4:05CV01446 ERW, 2007 WL 781788, at *3 (E.D. Mo. Mar. 13, 2007); Snap-On Inc. v. Hunter Eng'g Co., 29 F. Supp. 2d 965, 971-72 (E.D. Wis. 1998); Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Sandoz Ltd., 916 F. Supp. 404, 411 (D.N.J. 1995). Courts may describe these factors differently, but typically there is no “meaningful difference.” HSH Nordbank AG N.Y. Branch v. Swerdlow, 259 F.R.D. 64, 74 (S.D.N.Y. 2009).

Under the “middle” approach, a producing party had to take prompt and reasonable steps to recover a privileged document after an inadvertent disclosure was discovered. See Permian Corp. v. United States, 665 F.2d 1214, 1220-21 (D.C. Cir. 1981); KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 93 (7th ed. 2016).

Federal Rule of Evidence 502, effective September 19, 2008, provides three ways that parties may avoid waiver through inadvertent production. First, FRE 502(d) enables a court to enter an order that disclosure will not result in waiver and may provide specific steps for clawing back privileged documents that have been produced. Fed. R. Evid. 502(d). A FRE 502(d) order obviates the need to apply the provisions of FRE 502(b). See § I.G.6.a(4), FRE 502(d) & (e): Court Order And Party Agreements, supra. Second, FRE 502(e) provides that a party agreement on the effect of disclosure in a federal proceeding is binding on the parties to the agreement, but not on other parties unless incorporated into a court order. Fed. R. Evid. 502(e). Given the substantial additional wealth of protection afforded by Fed. R. Evid. 502(d), parties obtain the best protection by having the court enter the FRE 502(e) agreements in a FRE 502(d) order. Third, if there is no FRE 502(d) order or FRE 502(e) agreement governing the effect of inadvertent disclosures, FRE 502(b) establishes the “middle,” fact-intensive, case-by-case approach as the federal standard for determining when inadvertent production is a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency will result in waiver. Fed. R. Evid. 502(b). See Rajala v. McGuire Woods, LLP, Civil Action No. 08-2638-CM-DJW, 2010 WL 2949582, at *3-4 (D. Kan. July 22, 2010) (FRE 502 was enacted to address the conflict among courts regarding the effect of inadvertent disclosures); Amobi v. District of Columbia Dep't of Corr., 262 F.R.D. 45, 52 (D.D.C. 2009) (noting that FRE 502 “overrides the long-standing strict construction of waiver” in the D.C. Circuit). As the following discussion makes clear, assembling the factual and evidentiary material to demonstrate compliance with the FRE 502(b) elements can be time-consuming and costly, and often could have been avoided through entry of a FRE 502(d) order or FRE 502(e) agreement.

FRE 502(b) provides:

(b) Inadvertent Disclosure. When made in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency, the disclosure does not operate as a waiver in a federal or state proceeding if:

- (1) the disclosure is inadvertent;
- (2) the holder of the privilege or protection took reasonable steps to prevent disclosure, and
- (3) the holder promptly took reasonable steps to rectify the error, including (if applicable) following Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(5)(B).

FRE 502(b)(1) requires that a disclosure be “inadvertent.” Although courts often combine the analysis of inadvertence with whether reasonable steps were taken to avoid disclosure because the effort taken to prevent disclosure is evidence that a party did not intend to disclose privileged material, a finding of inadvertence may be considered as an independent threshold question. Where a party intentionally discloses a privileged document but later re-thinks the wisdom of the disclosure, the initial disclosure is not inadvertent. See, e.g., Francisco v. Verizon S., Inc., 756 F. Supp. 2d 705, 719 (W.D. Va. 2010) (production of notes after careful analysis, partial redaction, and designation as confidential not “inadvertent” despite producing party’s subsequent discovery that notes reflected communications with party’s general counsel); Silverstein v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, No. 07-cv-02471, 2009 WL 4949959, at *11-13 (D. Colo. Dec. 14, 2009) (rejecting government’s assertion that production of privileged memorandum was inadvertent and finding that government had intentionally produced privileged memorandum to obtain litigation advantage and, only on the eve of a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition, sought to retrieve the memorandum and deny plaintiff discovery regarding the document). See also Amobi v. D.C. Dep’t of Corr., 262 F.R.D. 45, 53 (D.D.C. 2009) (adopting simple test for inadvertence: was the disclosure unintended?).

FRE 502 does not provide guidance on what constitutes “reasonable steps to prevent disclosure,” the second part of the test. The Explanatory Notes indicate that the rule is “flexible enough to accommodate” the multiple factors considered by courts under the “middle” approach. See FED. R. EVID. 502(b) advisory committee’s note (citing, as examples, Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Garvey, 109 F.R.D. 323, 332 (N.D. Cal. 1985); Lois Sportswear, U.S.A., Inc. v. Levi Strauss & Co., 104 F.R.D. 103, 105 (S.D.N.Y. 1985)). “The rule does not specifically codify that test, because it is really a set of non-determinative guidelines that vary from case to case.” Id.

Courts interpreting FRE 502(b)(2) have considered the same factors applied by pre-FRE 502 decisions under the “middle of the road” approach. See United States v. Sensient Colors, Inc., No. 07-1275 JHR/JS, 2009 WL 2905474, at *3 (D.N.J. Sept. 9, 2009) (FRE 502’s approach is “essentially the same approach” as the middle approach adopted in Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Sandoz Ltd., 916 F. Supp. 404, 411 (D.N.J. 1995)).

See:

SurfCast, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., No. 2:12-cv-333-JAW, 2013 WL 4039413, at *4-5 (D. Me. Aug. 7, 2013). Privilege waived where plaintiff failed to object to the use of an inadvertently produced document during a deposition.

Carlson v. Carmichael, No. 10-3579, 2013 WL 3778356, at *1-3 (E.D. Pa. July 19, 2013). The government waived privilege by producing handwritten notes that it thought were written by defendant but were actually written by a former Assistant U.S. Attorney who had previously worked on the case. The court found that the government did not take reasonable steps to protect the privilege and that it could not give parties a “Mulligan” simply because of a change in counsel.

Smith v. Allstate Ins. Co., 912 F. Supp. 2d 242, 247-48 (W.D. Pa. 2012). The inadvertent disclosure of 7 out of 1,200 documents was not significant. Defendant immediately notified plaintiff of the issue and took reasonable measures to protect the privilege, including objecting to plaintiff’s use of the documents in a filing. Under these circumstances, the district court found that no waiver occurred.

Pilot v. Focused Retail Prop. I, LLC, 274 F.R.D. 212, 216 (N.D. Ill. 2011). Privilege waived where counsel failed to demonstrate any screening process prior to production, and failed to object when inadvertently produced documents were used during a deposition.

Mt. Hawley Ins. Co. v. Felman Prod., Inc., 271 F.R.D. 125, 133-34 (S.D. W. Va. 2010). Considering the Victor Stanley five-factor test in applying FRE 502(b).

Edelen v. Campbell Soup Co., 265 F.R.D. 676, 698 (N.D. Ga. 2010). Privilege not inadvertently waived where (1) only four out of 2,000 pages disclosed were privileged; (2) documents were checked by three attorneys before production; and (3) counsel immediately sought their return.

Conceptus, Inc. v. Hologic, Inc., No. C-09-02280, 2010 WL 3911943, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 5, 2010). Privilege waived where privileged document was produced in prior litigation and a second time in the case before the court. The producing party did not present evidence regarding what steps were taken to avoid disclosure in the first case, and producing party admitted that it did not review the prior production before producing it again in the instant litigation.

HSH Nordbank AG N.Y. Branch v. Swerdlow, 259 F.R.D. 64, 74-75 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). Nine documents inadvertently produced after millions of pages of documents were reviewed was “minuscule” and, thus, there was no waiver of privilege.

Multiquip, Inc. v. Water Mgmt. Sys. LLC, No. CV 08-403-S-EJL-REB, 2009 WL 4261214, at *4-5 (D. Idaho Nov. 23, 2009). No waiver when the defendant accidentally forwarded his attorney’s email to the opposing side. The mistake was inadvertent because the email program’s autofill feature filled in the wrong name, which had not occurred in hundreds of previous emails.

Heriot v. Byrne, 257 F.R.D. 645, 655 (N.D. Ill. 2009). Applying multi-factor test from cases predating FRE 502, including the total number of documents reviewed and the procedures used to review the documents prior to production.

Coburn Grp., LLC v. Whitecap Advisors LLC, 640 F. Supp. 2d 1032, 1038-39 (N.D. Ill. 2009). Review for privilege and work product conducted by experienced paralegals, who were given specific direction and supervised by lead counsel, was not unreasonable.

The advisory committee's note to FRE 502 specifically addresses the use of technology to identify potentially privileged material: "Depending on the circumstances, a party that uses advanced analytical software applications and linguistic tools in screening for privilege and work product may be found to have taken 'reasonable steps' to prevent inadvertent disclosure." FED. R. EVID. 502(b) advisory committee's note; see also Datel Holdings Ltd. v. Microsoft Corp., No. C-09-05535 EDL, 2011 WL 866993, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 11, 2011) (finding that reasonable steps had been taken to prevent disclosure where defendant used a "computerized document processing system to organize its documents which, unbeknownst to [d]efendant, suffered a software failure"). However, merely using software applications or keyword searches may not be sufficient to demonstrate "reasonable steps" if they are not applied appropriately or tested for quality prior to production. See Mt. Hawley Ins. Co. v. Felman Prod, Inc., 271 F.R.D. 125, 135-36 (S.D. W. Va. 2010) (among other factors, plaintiff's failure to test reliability of key word searches by appropriate sampling demonstrated lack of reasonable steps to avoid waiver); Victor Stanley, Inc. v. Creative Pipe, Inc., 250 F.R.D. 251, 256-57 (D. Md. 2008) (in a pre-FRE 502 case, where keyword search failed to identify 165 privileged documents, due in part to the producing party's failure to convert non-text searchable ESI into text searchable documents prior to keyword search and failure to conduct pre-production quality assurance testing, producing party did not take "reasonable steps" prior to production, because "while it is universally acknowledged that keyword searches are useful tools for search and retrieval of ESI, all keyword searches are not created equal; and there is a growing body of literature that highlights the risks associated with conducting an unreliable or inadequate keyword search or relying exclusively on such searches for privilege review"); Rhoads Indus., Inc. v. Bldg. Materials Corp. of Am., 254 F.R.D. 216, 226-27 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (applying FRE 502, court found producing party had not taken "reasonable steps" pre-production where keyword search failed to identify 800 privileged documents as a result of several omissions, including failing to search for names of outside counsel, searching only address lines and not the body of emails, and failing to conduct careful quality assurance testing prior to production; nevertheless, court found no waiver based on overriding interests of justice).

FRE 502(b) departs somewhat from earlier approaches to what constitutes "prompt reasonable steps to rectify the error." The Explanatory Notes provide that FRE 502(b) "does not require the producing party to engage in a post-production review to determine whether any protected communication or information has been produced by mistake." FED. R. EVID. 502(b) advisory committee's note. See Gilday v. Kenra, Ltd., No. 1:09-cv-00229-TWP-TAB, 2010 WL 3928593, at *5 (S.D. Ind. Oct. 4, 2010) (no obligation to double or triple check privilege log). Instead the rule requires the producing party "to follow up on any obvious indications that a protected communication or information has been produced inadvertently." FED. R. EVID. 502(b) advisory committee's note. See Heriot v. Byrne, 257 F.R.D. 645, 660-62 (N.D. Ill. 2009) (finding no waiver, even though party claiming privilege had conducted no post-production review, where party had acted promptly to assert privilege upon realizing mistake); see also Coburn Grp., LLC v. Whitecap Advisors LLC, 640 F. Supp. 2d 1032, 1040-41 (N.D. Ill. 2009) (recognizing that FRE 502(b) does not require post-production review but only prompt action to rectify an inadvertent disclosure after party has learned of error; here, court found that defendant's inadvertent disclosure of email did not waive work product protection where counsel immediately objected to opponent's use of email during deposition upon learning of disclosure and sought the documents return the next day). See also Jacob v.

Duane Reade, Inc., No. 11 Civ. 160, 2012 WL 651536, at *3-7 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 28, 2012) (defendant waived privilege where it failed immediately to assert privilege when inadvertently produced document was used by its adversary in a deposition).

To the extent that FRE 502 applies, inadvertent waiver will not result in subject matter waiver. FED. R. EVID. 502(a) advisory committee's note ("Thus, subject matter waiver is limited to situations in which a party intentionally puts protected information into the litigation in a selective, misleading manner. It follows that an inadvertent disclosure of protected information can never result in a subject matter waiver.").

Lawyers who receive privileged material that was inadvertently disclosed by their opponent should consult applicable ethics guidelines to determine what steps are appropriate. Some jurisdictions require that a lawyer receiving inadvertently produced material not review it and immediately notify the sender. See, e.g., Rico v. Mitsubishi Corp., 171 P.3d 1092, 1099 (Cal. 2007) ("When a lawyer who receives materials that obviously appear to be subject to an attorney-client privilege or otherwise clearly appear to be confidential and privileged and where it is reasonably apparent that the materials were provided or made available through inadvertence, the lawyer receiving such materials should refrain from examining the materials any more than is essential to ascertain if the materials are privileged, and shall immediately notify the sender The parties may then proceed to resolve the situation by agreement or may resort to the court for guidance") (quoting State Comp. Ins. Fund v. WPS, Inc., 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 799, 807 (Cal. Ct. App. 1999)); Fiber Materials, Inc. v. Subilia, 974 A.2d 918, 928 (Me. 2009) (criticizing conduct of in-house attorney who discovered email between company's former president and his personal attorney on former president's company laptop computer and allowed the document to be filed with the company's complaint knowing that there was a potential privilege issue); Maldonado v. New Jersey ex rel. Administrative Office of Courts – Probation Division, 225 F.R.D. 120, 138 (D.N.J. 2004) ("the New Jersey Rules of Professional Conduct also subscribe to the 'cease, notify, and return' steps as appropriate ethical conduct"); D.C. RULES OF PROF'L CONDUCT R. 4.4(b) ("A lawyer who receives a writing relating to the representation of a client and knows, before examining the writing, that it has been inadvertently sent, shall not examine the writing, but shall notify the sending party and abide by the instructions of the sending party regarding the return or destruction of the writing."). N.Y. City Bar Ass'n Comm. on Prof'l Ethics, Op. 2012-01 (2012) ("[A] lawyer who receives such a document must promptly notify the sender (in addition to identifying and following applicable substantive law), but has no other obligations under the New York Rules of Professional Conduct with respect to the retention, return, destruction, review or use of the document or its contents.").

The ABA and some jurisdictions put fewer restrictions and obligations on the receiving lawyer. The ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility withdrew Formal Opinion 92-368 (1992) in the Committee's Formal Opinion 05-437 (2005). Formal Op. 05-437 provides: "A lawyer who receives a document from opposing parties or their lawyers and knows or reasonably should know that the document was inadvertently sent should promptly notify the sender in order to permit the sender to take protective measures." The Committee noted Rule 4.4(b) of the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct "does not require the receiving lawyer either to refrain from examining the materials or to abide by the instructions of the sending lawyer. Comment [2] to Rule 4.4 explains: '[W]hether the lawyer is required to take additional steps, such as returning the original document, is a matter of law beyond the scope of these Rules, as is the question of whether the privileged status of a document has been waived.” See also COLO. RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 4.4(c) (2008) (lawyer shall not examine document if previously receives notice from sender, and shall abide by sender’s instructions); Radiance Aluminum Fences, Inc. v. Marquis Metal Material, Inc., 335 F.R.D. 371, 377 (E.D. Mich. 2020) (where producing party had clawed back inadvertently produced document, it was improper for receiving party to continue to use the disputed materials pending a ruling on privilege by the court); United States Equal Opportunity Comm’n v. The George Washington University, 502 F.Supp.3d 62, 73 (D.D.C. 2020) (where defendant notified EEOC of inadvertent production and requested return, destruction or sequester, further review was prohibited; applicable D.C. Bar ethics rules provide that where attorney has been put on notice that they have received material to which they are not entitled, review of that material “would be unethical”); Mt. Hawley Ins. Co. v. Felman Prod., Inc., 271 F.R.D. 125, 130-31 (S.D. W. Va. 2010) (if otherwise privileged material is sent and it is not the result of the sender’s inadvertence, then Model Rule of Professional Conduct 4.4(b) does not apply, and the receiving lawyer does not have to notify the sender).

Lawyers who receive potentially privileged material should also review any applicable confidentiality order to determine if there are court-ordered prohibitions on reviewing and using inadvertently produced material. See, e.g., In re Disposable Contact Lens Antitrust Litig., No. 3:15-md-2626-J-20JRK, 2016 WL 7115998, at *3-4 (M.D. Fla. Oct. 24, 2016) (upholding confidentiality order precluding a receiving party from reviewing or using potentially privileged, inadvertently disclosed documents for any purpose other than moving the court for an order to compel).

9. Involuntary Disclosure

Traditional attorney-client privilege analysis required absolute confidentiality in attorney-client communications. See 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE §§ 2325-26 (Supp. 2019). Thus, the client assumed the risk that some third party would obtain the otherwise privileged information, whether by surreptitiously overhearing the conversation or by later theft. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings Involving Berkley & Co., 466 F. Supp. 863, 869 (D. Minn. 1979).

The modern trend has been to maintain the privilege where reasonable precautions have been taken against eavesdropping or theft. Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., No. 01-cv-2252 CRB (JSC), 2013 WL 1282892, at *4-6 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 26, 2013) (no waiver of attorney-client privilege where party established extensive efforts to maintain confidentiality of a document that was disclosed to newspaper without party’s authorization); Resolution Trust Corp. v. Dean, 813 F. Supp. 1426, 1429 (D. Ariz. 1993) (unauthorized disclosure of internal memo subject to strict confidentiality restrictions did not waive privilege); see In re Dayco Corp. Derivative Sec. Litig., 102 F.R.D. 468, 470 (S.D. Ohio 1984) (diary subject to attorney-client and work product privilege remained privileged after publication of excerpts in a newspaper where no indication existed that the diary was voluntarily supplied to the paper); Walton v. Mid-Atl. Spine Specialists, P.C., 694 S.E.2d 545, 551 (Va. 2010) (“involuntary means that another person accomplished the disclosure through criminal activity or bad faith,” not the holder’s subjective intention). Cf. City of Pontiac General Employees’ Retirement System v. Wal-Mart, Inc., No. 5:12-cv-5162, 2018 WL 1558572, at *2-3 (W.D. Ark. Mar. 29, 2018) (media publication of stolen privileged documents waived privilege as to those documents, but not as to undisclosed information).

Where the party asserting a waiver of the privilege has itself engaged in improper conduct resulting in inadvertent production, courts have been particularly protective of the subject of such conduct. For example, in Stephen Slesinger, Inc. v. Walt Disney Co., No. BC 022365, 2004 WL 612818, at *1-12 (Cal. Super. Ct. Mar. 29, 2004), the plaintiff hired a private investigator to obtain documents from the defendant over a multi-year period. The private investigator apparently obtained documents from Disney trash bins on Disney property and, in some cases, off desktops at Disney. The plaintiff or its private investigator further altered certain of these documents to remove headers or other indicia of attorney-client privilege. The plaintiff maintained that it had obtained all of its documents from a single Disney dumpster, but the court rejected this claim in light of the time-span and variety of documents involved and the credibility of the plaintiff's witnesses. In light of the plaintiff's illegal and abusive discovery behavior, the court not only declined to find a waiver on the defendant's part, but directed a verdict against the plaintiff as a discovery sanction. Id. at *13.

Where, however, insufficient precautions have been taken to maintain confidentiality, discovery by a third person may still result in waiver. For example, where privileged documents are placed in a trash can and thereafter recovered by a third party, some courts will find a waiver to have occurred. See Suburban Sew 'N Sweep, Inc. v. Swiss-Bernina, Inc., 91 F.R.D. 254, 260 (N.D. Ill. 1981) (noting the "modern trend" toward finding a lack of waiver in "eavesdropper" cases, but concluding that "if the client or attorney fear such disclosure, it may be prevented by destroying the documents or rendering them unintelligible before placing them in a trash dumpster").

Under the "involuntary disclosure" doctrine, articulated in proposed, but not enacted, Rule of Evidence 512, "evidence of a statement or other disclosure of privileged matter is not admissible against the holder of the privilege if the disclosure was (a) compelled erroneously or (b) made without opportunity to claim the privilege." Hopson v. Mayor & City Council of Balt., 232 F.R.D. 228, 241 (D. Md. 2005) (quoting Proposed Rule of Evidence 512, 56 F.R.D. 183, 259). Although not enacted, courts have applied the Rule 512 standard where a party was compelled to disclose privileged material.

See:

Hollins v. Powell, 773 F.2d 191, 196 (8th Cir. 1985). No waiver where, following the court's denial of the city's motion to quash, city objected to deposition questions of a city attorney on privilege grounds, pursuant to court order allowed the attorney to answer, but subsequently asserted the privilege at trial.

In re Vargas, 723 F.2d 1461, 1466 (10th Cir. 1983). In dicta, court stated, "because an attorney cannot waive the attorney-client privilege without the client's consent, production of privileged documents by an attorney under court order does not necessarily constitute a waiver of the privilege."

Leonen v. Johns-Manville, 135 F.R.D. 94, 99 (D.N.J. 1990). No waiver where defendant objected but produced documents pursuant to a court order.

10. “At Issue” Claims and Defenses

The attorney-client privilege may be deemed waived when the privileged communication is put “at issue” in litigation. This occurs when the client affirmatively puts privileged communications at issue, for example, by alleging that she relied on the advice of counsel, misunderstood an agreement, or diligently investigated a claim. See, e.g., United States v. Mendelsohn, 896 F.2d 1183, 1188-89 (9th Cir. 1990) (party waived privilege by asserting reliance on counsel’s advice that conduct was legal); Koumoulis v. Indep. Fin. Mktg. Grp., 295 F.R.D. 28, 47-48 (E.D.N.Y. 2013), (defendant waived privilege over internal investigation by relying on reasonableness of its investigatory policies as a defense); United States v. Dish Network, L.L.C., 283 F.R.D. 420, 423-25 (C.D. Ill. 2012) (in a telemarketing fraud action, defendant waived privilege by asserting affirmative defense that it implemented proper monitoring procedures); Angelone v. Xerox Corp., No. 09-CV-6019, 2011 WL 4473534, at *2 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2011) (“[T]he clear majority view is that when a Title VII defendant affirmatively invokes a Faragher-Ellerth defense that is premised, in whole in or part, on the results of an internal investigation, the defendant waives the attorney-client privilege and work product protections for not only the report itself, but for all documents, witness interviews, notes and memoranda created as part of and in furtherance of the investigation.”); Musa-Muaremi v. Florists’ Transworld Delivery, Inc., 270 F.R.D. 312, 317-19 (N.D. Ill. 2010) (in an employment discrimination case, employer waived privilege by asserting that it had conducted an adequate investigation (a/k/a the Faragher-Ellerth defense)); Reitz v. City of Mt. Juliet, 680 F. Supp. 2d 888, 892-93 (M.D. Tenn. 2010) (asserting the Faragher-Ellerth defense waives the attorney-client privilege for documents underlying the final investigative report); Walker v. Cnty. of Contra Costa, 227 F.R.D. 529, 533-34 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (employer waived privilege by asserting reasonable investigation as affirmative defense); Peterson v. Wallace Computer Servs., Inc., 984 F. Supp. 821, 825 (D. Vt. 1997); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 80(1) (2000). But see Union Pac. R.R. Co. v. Colony Nat’l Ins. Co., No. 8:13CV84, 2016 WL 4734377, at *3 (D. Neb. Sept. 9, 2016) (party did not waive privilege by saying it “may” call its lawyers to testify, but it would not be allowed to assert privilege during discovery and then waive privilege at trial by calling the lawyers to testify as to privileged matters); Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 293 F.R.D. 244, 253-54 (D. Mass. 2013) (forensic review conducted by an outside consultant was not put at issue, despite repeated references to the review in plaintiff’s complaint, because plaintiff did not plan to use it at trial). See also Employment Discrimination Cases: “At Issue” Waiver, § VI.C.2, infra, and Patents: Waiver Of Privilege And The Good Faith Reliance On Advice Of Counsel Defense To Willful Infringement, § VIII.B, infra.

Raising defenses to a criminal or civil action that the client’s legal assistance was ineffective, negligent or wrongful would also waive the privilege. See United States v. Pinson, 584 F.3d 972, 977-78 (10th Cir. 2009) (listing cases from several Circuits and finding unanimous federal authority that a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel waives the privilege); Bittaker v. Woodford, 331 F.3d 715, 719-21 (9th Cir. 2003) (asserting ineffective assistance of counsel regarding prior habeas petition waived privilege only with respect to issues related to habeas petition); In re Cont’l Ill. Sec. Litig., 732 F.2d 1302, 1315 n.20 (7th Cir. 1984); Tasby v. United States, 504 F.2d 332, 336 (8th Cir. 1974); United States v. Woodall, 438 F.2d 1317, 1324-25 (5th Cir. 1970) (en banc).

Similarly, where a client asserts a claim for malpractice against an attorney, the party waives the privilege with respect to the advice at issue. See Christenbury v. Locke Lord Bissell & Liddell, LLP, 285 F.R.D. 675, 681-84 (N.D. Ga. 2012) (plaintiff waived privilege when it alleged professional negligence related to advice on a transaction; waiver extended to advice on the same transaction provided by other attorneys not party to the suit); Aurora Loan Servs., Inc. v. Posner, Posner & Assocs., P.C., 499 F. Supp. 2d 475, 478 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (plaintiff waived attorney-client privilege when it alleged damages on the basis of lost interest related to failure of defendant to prosecute plaintiff's claims); Nat'l Excess Ins. Co. v. Civerolo, Hansen & Wolf, P.A., 139 F.R.D. 398, 400 (D.N.M. 1991) (affirming magistrate judge's order to plaintiff-client in legal malpractice action to produce privileged documents); Byers v. Burluson, 100 F.R.D. 436, 440 (D.D.C. 1983) (finding plaintiff in malpractice action waived the privilege because the information defendant attorney sought was necessary to resolve an issue the plaintiff interjected into the case); In re Marriage of Bielawski, 764 N.E.2d 1254, 1263-64 (Ill. App. Ct. 2002) (privilege was waived in later action to rescind marital settlement agreement where wife sued former attorney for malpractice related to the same); but see Jackson v. Greger, 854 N.E.2d 487, 491 (Ohio 2006) (in malpractice action against plaintiff's criminal attorney, privilege over attorney-client communications and related work product documentation of plaintiff's appellate counsel was not waived by plaintiff's discussion with appellate counsel regarding the possible negligent representation by her criminal attorney).

While courts generally agree that a party must make an affirmative act to inject privileged information into a proceeding to put the privileged information "at issue," they disagree regarding the specific test for waiver. A frequently cited test was adopted by the court in Hearn v. Rhey, 68 F.R.D. 574, 581 (E.D. Wash. 1975), which established a relatively low "relevance" test. In order to result in "at issue" waiver under the Hearn approach: (1) a party asserting privilege must take an affirmative act that (2) makes the protected information relevant to the case, and (3) application of the privilege would deny the opposing party access to information vital to defending against the affirmative assertion.

Other courts have applied a narrower "relying on" standard. For example, in In re Erie County, 546 F.3d 222, 229 (2d Cir. 2008), the Second Circuit Court of Appeals rejected the Hearn approach as too broad and not sufficiently protective of the privilege, and held that "at issue" waiver will occur only where there is some showing that the party asserting the privilege is relying on privileged communications for a claim or defense or as an element of a claim or defense. Making counsel's advice "relevant" is not sufficient under this narrower standard.

For cases applying the Hearn "relevance" test, see:

Anchondo v. Anderson, Crenshaw & Assocs., L.L.C., 256 F.R.D. 661, 669-72 (D.N.M. 2009). Defendant in action under Fair Debt Collection Practices Act put attorney-client communications at issue by raising defense of bona fide error based on a legal error.

Union Cnty., Iowa v. Piper Jaffray & Co., Inc., 248 F.R.D. 217, 220-23 (S.D. Iowa 2008). By filing suit claiming breach of fiduciary duty against financial consultant, plaintiff put at issue communications with plaintiff's lawyers relevant to whether plaintiff reasonably relied on advice of defendant.

Williams v. Sprint/United Mgmt. Co., 464 F. Supp. 2d 1100, 1107 (D. Kan. 2006). Defendant's assertion of good-faith compliance with the Age Discrimination in Employment Act on the basis of its internal anti-discrimination policies and the training that its employees received concerning those policies did not waive the attorney-client privilege; the mere fact that the internal guidelines required coordination of disparate impact analysis with the legal department was insufficient to trigger a waiver.

Roehrs, M.D. v. Minn. Life Ins. Co., 228 F.R.D. 642, 646-47 (D. Ariz. 2005). Defendant waived privilege with regard to communications between insurance adjusters and in-house counsel when the defendant affirmatively relied on those communications to show good faith on behalf of the adjusters in denying the plaintiff's claims.

For cases applying the narrower “relying on” test, see:

Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc. v. Home Indem. Co., 32 F.3d 851, 863-64 (3d Cir. 1994). Plaintiff did not waive attorney-client privilege merely by filing suit where plaintiff's state of mind was an issue in the litigation. Although attorney-client communications might have been relevant to the question, plaintiff did not rely on the contents of any communications.

Trs. the Elec. Workers Local No. 26 Pension Trust Fund v. Trust Fund Advisors, Inc., 266 F.R.D. 1, 11-13 (D.D.C. 2010). The court adopted In re Erie County and criticized Hearn, predicting that the D.C. Circuit would do the same.

Nesselrotte v. Allegany Energy Inc., No 06-01390, 2008 WL 2858401, at *6-7 (W.D. Pa. July 22, 2008). Company did not waive privilege by asserting a defense of poor job performance to a former in-house counsel's employment discrimination claim. The court noted that the company did not disclose or describe any attorney-client information in its answer or motion for summary judgment.

Atl. Inv. Mgmt., LLC v. Millennium Fund I, Ltd., 212 F.R.D. 395, 398-99 (N.D. Ill. 2002). Attorney-client privilege was waived where plaintiffs “selectively disclosed communications with their attorneys . . . in order to prove their claims—or to preempt an anticipated defense.”

Harter v. Univ. of Indianapolis, 5 F. Supp. 2d 657, 664-65 (S.D. Ind. 1998). Plaintiff, asserting a claim against his former employer under the Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA”), did not waive the attorney-client privilege by alleging that his former employer failed to make reasonable accommodations for his disability through good-faith negotiations with the plaintiff's attorney. While the plaintiff's claim placed his purported effort of making good-faith negotiations at issue, the plaintiff did not depend on privileged communications to make out his ADA claim.

Bertelsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 796 N.W.2d 685, 703 (S.D. 2011) (citations omitted). “We supplement the Hearn test to emphasize further the importance of protecting the attorney-client privilege. First, the analysis of this issue should begin with a presumption in favor of preserving the privilege. Second, a client only waives the privilege by expressly or impliedly injecting his attorney's advice into the case. A denial of bad faith or an assertion of good faith alone is not an implied waiver of the privilege. . . . The key factor is reliance of the client upon the advice of his attorney. Finally, a client only waives the privilege to the extent necessary to reveal the advice of counsel he placed at issue.”

a. Reliance on Advice of Counsel

A client who claims that he acted pursuant to the advice of a lawyer cannot use the privilege to immunize that advice from scrutiny. See Chevron Corp. v. Pennzoil Co., 974 F.2d 1156, 1162-63 (9th Cir. 1992); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 80 (2000). Such a defense places the lawyer's advice at issue and waives the privilege for all materials concerning the same subject matter. See KENNETH S. BROUN ET AL., MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 93 (7th ed. 2016).

In re Grand Jury Proceedings Oct. 12, 1995, 78 F.3d 251, 254-55 (6th Cir. 1996). The owner and president of a laboratory disclosed to government investigators that they had consulted Medicare attorney regarding certain charging practices reflected in the laboratory's marketing plan and that they had relied on the attorney's advice. Court held that the laboratory had waived the attorney-client privilege with respect to the specific aspect of the marketing plan discussed with investigators, but not with respect to other aspects of the marketing plan discussed with the attorney.

Glenmede Trust Co. v. Thompson, 56 F.3d 476, 486-87 (3d Cir. 1995). Plaintiff shareholders were entitled to law firm's file concerning services provided to defendant corporation. Court concluded that defendant had waived the privilege for these materials by alleging that it had relied on the law firm's advice about tax regulations.

Chevron Corp. v. Pennzoil Co., 974 F.2d 1156, 1162-63 (9th Cir. 1992). Pennzoil claimed it had reasonably relied on counsel for its position that purchase of stock in Chevron would receive favorable tax treatment. Court stated that no attorney-client privilege existed for documents relating to counsel's position since the party cannot shield documents that could possibly refute the defense.

United States v. Bilzerian, 926 F.2d 1285, 1292-94 (2d Cir. 1991). Court refused to permit party to testify that he believed in good faith, based on advice of counsel, that his actions were legal without being subject to cross-examination about the basis for this belief and the actual communications he had with his attorney.

Conkling v. Turner, 883 F.2d 431, 435 (5th Cir. 1989). Plaintiff claimed that he did not know of the falsity of some information until his attorney notified him. Court found that attorney was subject to deposition because these privileged communications had been placed in issue by plaintiff.

Cosgrove v. Nat'l Fire & Marine Ins. Co., No. 2:14-cv-2229-HRH, 2016 WL 4578139, at *4-5 (D. Ariz. Sept. 2, 2016). Court held it was more probable than not that defendant consulted coverage counsel and necessarily relied on the information received in evaluating the strength of insured's claims. As a result, the court held that defendant's subjective reasonableness claim put its attorney-client communications at issue and could not shield those communications, which could be vital to plaintiff's case.

Hege v. Aegon USA, LLC, Nos. 8:10-cv-1578-GRA, 7:10-cv-1630-GRA, 7:10-cv-1631-GRA & 1:10-cv-1635-GRA, 2011 WL 1791883, at *5 (D.S.C. May 10, 2011). By asserting as an affirmative defense that it acted reasonably and in good faith, defendant-insurer put at issue the evidence it used in deciding to change its payment methodology. Attorney-client privilege was therefore waived as to a report prepared by law firm concerning the legality of the proposed change.

Ariz. ex rel. Goddard v. Frito-Lay, Inc., 273 F.R.D. 545, 561 (D. Ariz. 2011). Instead of simply stating its conclusion that reasonable cause existed, state civil rights agency issued its reasonable cause determination under the signature of one of its lawyers. In so doing, agency had waived "all attorney-client . . . privilege" that it may have had in its investigation of discrimination complaint and its preparation of the reasonable cause decision.

Brigham & Women's Hosp. Inc. v. Teva Pharm. USA, Inc., 707 F. Supp. 2d 463, 471 (D. Del. 2010). Plaintiff's assertion of advice of counsel as a defense to a claim of inequitable conduct during prosecution of patent applications resulted in subject matter waiver.

In re Human Tissue Prods. Liab. Litig., 255 F.R.D. 151, 160 (D.N.J. 2008). Defendants waived privilege as to communications with attorneys hired to conduct background check. Defendants put communications at issue by claiming that they acted in good faith in dealing with company selling stolen human tissue since background check revealed no relevant wrongdoing by company's principal.

Sharper Image Corp. v. Honeywell Int'l Inc., 222 F.R.D. 621, 638-40 (N.D. Cal. 2004). Defendant's reliance on advice of counsel regarding patent infringement waived the privilege with regard to communications on infringement issues. Waiver applied to relevant communications pre- and post-complaint in the instant action. However, the waiver did not extend to the defendant's communications with counsel regarding two pending patent applications.

Sedillos v. Bd. of Educ. of Sch. Dist. No. 1, 313 F. Supp. 2d 1091, 1094 (D. Colo. 2004). By relying on the advice of counsel to defend his actions, defendant waived the attorney-client privilege with regard to all communications on the subject matter of that advice.

But see:

In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 798 F.2d 32, 34 (2d Cir. 1986). Holding that "the assertion that the corporation was acting upon the advice of counsel does not establish, without more . . . that the attorney-client privilege was waived."

Gardner v. Major Auto. Cos., No. 11 Civ. 1664 (FB) (VMS), 2014 WL 1330961, at *1-3, *6-7 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2014). General statements made during depositions of defendant's secretary and general counsel that the board of directors relied on the advice of counsel in deciding not to appoint a special committee and in deciding whether to obtain a second valuation did not waive privilege. The court determined that these statements were general statements, and, importantly, the company made it clear to the court that it did not intend to rely on an advice of counsel defense at trial.

Synogy, Inc. v. ZS Assocs., No. 07-3536, 2013 WL 3914483, at *2-3 (E.D. Pa. July 29, 2013). Plaintiff did not put counsel's advice at issue where the CEO stated in his deposition that a document was "vetted by counsel," but he had not relied on the advice of counsel to determine the document's contents. The court found that advice of counsel was not put "at issue" merely because it may have affected the client's state of mind in a relevant matter.

CFIP Master Fund v. Citibank, 738 F. Supp. 2d 450, 474 n.27 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). Trustee's statement that it had conferred with counsel as evidence of good faith did not waive privilege where party specifically chose not to assert advice of counsel defense. "The focus of [the trustee's] 'good faith' defense is on the nature of the inquiry that [it] undertook, not the substance of the legal advice that was eventually provided."

McGuire v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., No. 08-1072-JTM, 2009 WL 1044945, at *3 (D. Kan. Apr. 20, 2009). Where defendants had intentionally used attorney-client communications in support of advice of counsel defense, court granted limited protective order that compelled in-house counsel to give deposition but strictly limited the scope of the deposition.

Sanofi-Synthelabo v. Apotex Inc., 363 F. Supp. 2d 592, 595 (S.D.N.Y. 2005). Fleeting and uncertain comment in deposition regarding advice of counsel did not waive privilege because opponent was not placed at any disadvantage by comment, which called for no impeachment.

Akamai Techs., Inc. v. Digital Island, Inc., No. C-00-3508 CW(JCS), 2002 WL 1285126, at *9 (N.D. Cal. May 30, 2002). Provision of attorney-drafted memorandum summarizing legal issues related to claim as part of, and to facilitate, settlement discussions did not waive privilege.

In re Comverge, Inc. S'holders Litig., Civil Action No. 7368-VCP, 2013 WL 1455827, at *5 (Del. Ch. Apr. 10, 2013). Defendants did not place counsel's advice at issue when they asserted that the board of directors had consulted counsel before making a decision. This assertion, made only to refute plaintiff's claim that the board had not sought legal advice, was not enough to waive the privilege.

See also:

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 341 F.3d 331, 336-37 (4th Cir. 2003). A client may waive the attorney-client privilege through his answers to FBI agents' questions during a non-custodial interview. When agents asked witness why he had answered "no" to a question on an INS "green card" application, the man answered that he had done so on the advice of his attorney. The court held that this answer waived the privilege and enabled the government to question the attorney before a grand jury about otherwise privileged communications.

b. Lack of Understanding

In some cases, a client may place communications with her attorney at issue by asserting a defense of lack of understanding of the terms or extent of an agreement. In Synalloy Corp. v. Gray, 142 F.R.D. 266, 270 (D. Del. 1992), the parties signed an agreement that extinguished all "pending claims" between them. Defendant claimed this agreement extinguished liability for a short swing profit claim. Plaintiff argued that, under its understanding of the agreement, the profit claim was not covered, and it would never have agreed to extinguish such a claim. The court held that the misunderstanding injected a new issue of inducement through fraudulent misrepresentation, and therefore the communications of the attorney would be required to determine reliance and lack of understanding. Thus, the court held that plaintiff waived the privilege by introducing this new issue to the litigation. Id.; see also Sax v. Sax, 136 F.R.D. 542, 543 (D. Mass. 1991) (asserting lack of mutual understanding of memorandum agreement waived attorney-client privilege); Pitney-Bowes, Inc. v. Mestre, 86 F.R.D. 444, 447 (S.D. Fla. 1980) (same); Stovall v. United States, 85 Fed. Cl. 810, 815 (Fed. Cl. 2009) (government's intention to use communications with counsel as parol evidence in a breach of contract case waived privilege by putting communications at issue).

A party may waive the attorney-client privilege regarding legal advice received in a transaction by asserting a claim that requires proof of reasonable reliance on another party's representation. Union Cnty., Iowa v. Piper Jaffray & Co., 248 F.R.D. 217, 222-23 (S.D. Iowa 2008); see also Synalloy, 142 F.R.D. at 269-70 (waiver resulted because a counterclaim for fraudulent misrepresentation put at issue whether the defendant's reliance was reasonable). In Union County, Iowa v. Piper Jaffray & Co., plaintiff, a county government, waived its privilege by placing at issue the reasonableness of its reliance on its financial advisor in connection with a bond offering. Plaintiff sued its bond advisor for breach of fiduciary duty, breach of contract, negligent misrepresentation, negligence, and fraud after the bond insurer went bankrupt. Adopting a test that balanced the importance of the attorney-client relationship against the interests of fundamental fairness, the court held that plaintiff placed at issue any intervening or superseding causes, such as tax or legal advice, because several of the claims required the county to demonstrate that it reasonably relied on defendant's advice. 248 F.R.D. at 222-23.

c. Extent of "At Issue" Waiver

In cases where a client has waived the privilege by placing privileged communications in issue, the scope of the resulting waiver may extend to communications bearing on that subject matter that the court deems necessary to litigate the issue fairly. However, waiver only affects those communications that address the issue raised by the client, and not related issues.

See Pray v. N.Y. City Ballet Co., No. 96 Civ. 5723 RLC, 1998 WL 558796, at *2-3 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 13, 1998) (privilege waived where defendant asserted as an affirmative defense to a sexual harassment claim that it took reasonable steps to remedy plaintiff's complaints by conducting an internal investigation, but only with respect to communications concerning the steps taken to carry out the investigation and not with respect to the advice given to defendant by its attorneys before and after the internal investigation); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 79 (2000).

Lambricht v. Ryan, 698 F.3d 808, 817-20 (9th Cir. 2012). The court clarified that the holding in Bittaker v. Woodford, described below, extended to the entire habeas litigation, not just pre-trial discovery. Accordingly, it was improper for the district court to modify its protective order and to allow state prosecutors to use evidence from the petitioner's evidentiary hearing against him at a state resentencing hearing.

Bittaker v. Woodford, 331 F.3d 715, 719-21 (9th Cir. 2003). By asserting ineffective assistance of counsel related to prior habeas petition, criminal litigant effected implied waiver of attorney-client privilege, but only as to issues related to habeas petition, and only to the extent necessary to allow the state to fairly litigate matters put at issue.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings Oct. 12, 1995, 78 F.3d 251, 254-55 (6th Cir. 1996). The owner and president of a laboratory disclosed to government investigators that they had consulted Medicare attorney regarding certain charging practices reflected in the laboratory's marketing plan and that they had relied on the attorney's advice. Court held that the laboratory had waived the attorney-client privilege with respect to the specific aspect of the marketing plan discussed with investigators, but not with respect to other aspects of the marketing plan discussed with the attorney.

In re Lidoderm Antitrust Litig., No. 14-md-02521, 2016 WL 4191612, at *5-6 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 9, 2016). In litigation over a settlement alleged to be anticompetitive, defendants could not testify at trial about their reasons for entering into the settlement without waiving privilege over communications with counsel who acted as the principal negotiators and advisors regarding the settlement. Even if defendants asserted non-legal reasons for entering into the settlement, plaintiff would be entitled to test the truth of defendants' statements with contemporaneous information, including otherwise privileged communications.

Foster v. City of New York, No. 14 Civ. 4142 (PGG)(JCF), 2016 WL 524639, at *4-5 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 5, 2016). Applying a fairness analysis, the court held that the City impliedly waived attorney-client privilege and work product protection by asserting an advice-of-counsel defense. However, in considering the scope of waiver, the court tailored the waiver to encompass only communications between counsel for the City and non-attorney City employees concerning the relevant topic (the legality of the City's policies), and not internal communications and other information created by and communicated only among counsel.

In re Fresh & Process Potatoes Antitrust Litig., No. 4:10-md-02186-BLW-CWD, 2014 WL 1413676, at *3-7 (D. Idaho Apr. 11, 2014). Certain defendants asserted a good faith defense based on advice of counsel and entered into what they characterized as a "narrow" waiver agreement with plaintiffs. These defendants argued that waiver applied only to the information that counsel had provided to defendants, not to information in counsel's files that had not been transmitted to defendants. The court rejected this argument and found that waiver extended to all communications with counsel and information in counsel's possession that may have been considered by counsel in rendering the opinions relied upon, so that plaintiffs could fully question defendants and their counsel.

Asberry v. Corinthian Media, Inc., No. 09 Civ. 1013, 2009 WL 3073360, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 18, 2009). Defendant's assertion of reasonable investigation as affirmative defense to wrongful termination action waived privilege over communications with counsel prior to termination, but not post-termination.

McGuire v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., No. 08-1072, 2009 WL 1044945, at *3 (D. Kan. Apr. 20, 2009). Defendant's assertion of reasonable investigation as affirmative defense to wrongful termination action waived privilege over communications with counsel prior to termination, but not post-termination.

Honda Lease Trust v. Middlesex Mut. Assurance Co., No. 3:05CV1426(RNC), 2007 WL 2889468, at *3 (D. Conn. Sept. 28, 2007). Plaintiff did not waive attorney-client privilege with subsequent counsel by suing former counsel.

McKenna v. Nestle Purina Petcare Co., No. 2:05-cv-0976, 2007 WL 433291, at *4 (S.D. Ohio Feb. 5, 2007). Employer's assertion of "adequate investigation" defense waived privilege to internal investigation materials.

AT&T Access Charge Litig., 451 F. Supp. 2d 651, 655-56 (D.N.J. 2006). Defendant's affirmative defense based on reliance on prior FCC decisions did not constitute at-issue waiver of the attorney-client privilege where defendant stated that it would not rely on advice of counsel as a defense to plaintiff's claims.

11. Witness Use of Documents

a. Refreshing Recollection of Ordinary Witnesses

The attorney-client privilege may also be waived by using privileged documents for the purpose of refreshing the recollection of a witness. Rule 612 of the Federal Rules of Evidence provides that "if a witness uses a writing to refresh memory for the purposes of testifying . . . an adverse party is entitled to have the writing produced at the hearing, to inspect it, to cross-examine the witness thereon, and to introduce in evidence those portions which relate to the testimony of the witness." Under Federal Rule of Evidence 612, if the witness uses the communication to refresh or aid his testimony while he is actually testifying, then the privilege is waived and the court must order disclosure. FED. R. EVID. 612(1). However, if the witness merely used the communication to refresh his recollection prior to testifying, the court has discretion to order disclosure in the interests of justice. FED. R. EVID. 612(2). Courts and commentators have created different guidelines for the exercise of this discretion. See, e.g., In re Rivastigmine Patent Litig., 486 F. Supp. 2d 241, 243 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (discussing the approaches courts have adopted); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 90 cmt. d (2000) (waiver should be found only in the uncommon circumstance when the document serves as a script for the witness's testimony in place of his own memory); 4 JACK W. WEINSTEIN ET AL., WEINSTEIN'S FEDERAL EVIDENCE § 612.06[2] (Lexis 2014) (waiver should be found only when witness has consulted a writing embodying his own communication and his testimony discloses a significant part of the communication).

Deponent's review of privileged information during deposition preparation did not waive attorney-client privilege where the review did not appear to have influenced the deponent's testimony. Although deponent reviewed an unredacted report in preparation for his deposition and stated that his review of documents, including the report, had "somewhat" refreshed his recollection, the court exercised its discretion under FRE 612, and applying the “functional approach,” determined that justice did not require the production of the unredacted report.

Calandra v. Sodexho, No. 3:06CV49WWE, 2007 WL 1245317, at *4 (D. Conn. Apr. 27, 2007). Adopting the Rivastigmine functional analysis test to find that no waiver occurred where plaintiff used notes he had prepared in an effort to retain an attorney in order to refresh his recollection in preparation for his deposition. Plaintiff had personal knowledge of the facts summarized in the notes and, in fact, went into greater detail in the deposition than the notes provided.

In re Rivastigmine Patent Litig., 486 F. Supp. 2d 241, 243-44 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). The court applied a two-part functional analysis test: (1) a threshold showing that the documents had sufficient impact on the witness’s testimony to trigger the application of Rule 612, and (2) balancing whether “production is necessary for fair cross-examination,” or “the examining party is simply engaged in a fishing expedition.” After in camera review the court ruled that the material was unlikely to have influenced the witness’s testimony.

Farm Credit Bank v. Huether, 454 N.W.2d 710, 718 (N.D. 1990). Waiver extends to a document specifically referred to while testifying but not to other documents in the same file.

Baker v. CNA Ins. Co., 123 F.R.D. 322, 327 (D. Mont. 1988). Use of privileged documents to refresh recollection prior to deposition does not constitute waiver unless the testimony disclosed the substance of a significant portion of the communication.

Courts are reluctant to order disclosure when a witness has merely looked at a document prior to testifying.

See:

Leucadia, Inc. v. Reliance Ins. Co., 101 F.R.D. 674, 679 (S.D.N.Y. 1983). The court noted that the legislative history of the amendments to Federal Rule of Evidence 612 indicates that Congress did not intend to bar the assertion of the attorney-client privilege for writings used by a witness to refresh his memory. Court, therefore, held that the mere fact that a deposition witness “looked at” a document protected by the attorney-client privilege in preparation for a deposition is inadequate to destroy the privilege.

Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Muller & Phipps (Haw.) Ltd., 85 F.R.D. 118, 199-20 (W.D. Mo. 1980). Correspondence file of attorney-witness was not discoverable even though he “looked at” it prior to his deposition.

But see:

Thomas v. Euro RSCG Life, 264 F.R.D. 120, 121-22 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). At a deposition, plaintiff admitted that, shortly before the deposition, she reviewed notes that recounted conversations she had with her employer’s in-house counsel. Because the plaintiff looked at the notes before the deposition, FRE 612(2) indicates that it is at the court’s discretion to find waiver. The court held that plaintiff’s review waived privilege because the notes “evinced no work-product concerns” and the subject matter of the notes were likely to play a substantial role in the case.

In re Scrap Metal Antitrust Litig., No. 1:02 CV 0844, 2006 WL 2850453, at *7 (N.D. Ohio Sept. 30, 2006). Outline used by counsel to prepare defendant’s key witness after witness’s previous testimony revealed numerous inconsistencies with prior deposition testimony was not subject to work product protection because of the detailed nature of the outline (described as a “script” by the court) and the “articulate and detailed recollections” subsequently provided during defendant’s examination of the witness.

Audiotext Commc'ns Network, Inc. v. US Telecom, Inc., 164 F.R.D. 250, 254 (D. Kan. 1996). Notebook of privileged documents that witness “flipped through” the night before his deposition had an impact on witness’s testimony because the witness testified that he was “astonished” that he had forgotten some of the items that were in the notebook.

Bank Hapoalim, B.M. v. Am. Home Assurance Co., No. 92 Civ. 3561, 1994 WL 119575, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 6, 1994). Despite the fact that a witness testified he only “looked at” documents prior to deposition, the fact that he spent several hours reviewing them, was able to identify specific documents that he had reviewed, and displayed knowledge of the information contained in the documents showed that the documents impacted his testimony and should be produced.

In general, only limited waiver results when a witness has used a document to refresh his recollection. The privilege is not waived for all other documents that relate to the document used to refresh recollection. Marshall v. U.S. Postal Serv., 88 F.R.D. 348, 380-81 (D.D.C. 1980) (privilege waived only as to documents used to refresh recollection, but not as to all communications on same subject). Rule 612 permits the court to inspect the communications in camera and excise portions unrelated to the subject matter of the testimony. See The Extent Of Waiver, § I.G.6, supra.

b. Use of Documents by Experts

Prior to the 2010 amendments to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26, there was a significant risk that any documents provided to a testifying expert witness would be discoverable pursuant to the expert discovery provisions of Rule 26, even if they were privileged. The overwhelming majority of courts that addressed the issue held that privileged materials considered by a testifying expert were discoverable under Rule 26. See In re Pioneer Hi-Bred Int’l, Inc., 238 F.3d 1370, 1375-76 (Fed. Cir. 2001) (“any disclosure to a testifying expert in connection with his testimony assumes that privileged or protected material will be made public.”); Synthes Spine v. Walden, 232 F.R.D. 460, 463 (E.D. Pa. 2005) (collecting cases and requiring disclosure of privileged material); see also Galvin v. Pepe, No. 09-cv-104-PB, 2010 WL 3092640, at *6-7 (D.N.H. Aug. 5, 2010) (citing Synthes Spine).

See:

Dyson Tech. Ltd. v. Maytag Corp., 241 F.R.D. 247, 249 (D. Del. 2007). A party’s designation of its employee as a testifying expert waived the work product protection and attorney-client privilege with respect to the materials used in forming the employee/expert’s opinions. The court also rejected the argument that disclosure required by FRCP 26 did not apply because the employee was not “retained” or “specially employed” for his expert testimony.

In re Omeprazole Patent Litig., 227 F.R.D. 227, 231 (S.D.N.Y. 2005). The court held that a party waived its attorney-client privilege by disclosing to its expert the reasons for deleting certain sections of his expert reports.

Herrick Co. v. Vetta Sports, No. 94 Civ. 0905 (RPP), 1998 WL 637468, at *1, *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 17, 1998), rev’d in part on other grounds, 360 F.3d 329 (2d Cir. 2004). “[A] party waives the attorney-client and work-product privileges whenever it puts an attorney’s opinion into issue, by calling the attorney as an expert witness or otherwise.” Party waived privilege by designating its ethics consultant as its testifying legal ethics expert during the course of litigation. The court ordered the production of all documents relating to the advice rendered by the expert to the party on the general subject matter of the expert’s report filed with the court.

In re E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 918 F. Supp. 1524, 1548 (M.D. Ga. 1995), rev'd on other grounds, 99 F.3d 363, 368 (11th Cir. 1996). An expert's reliance on summary data waives any privilege that might protect the more detailed underlying data.

But see:

Tikkun v. City of New York, 265 F.R.D. 152, 156 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). Testifying expert did not have to disclose the underlying data for his opinion because it was protected by the attorney-client privilege. The court held that it is "not inequitable to respect the [expert's] assertion of privilege" because the attorney-client communications were just one basis for his opinion, the plaintiff did not provide the expert with the data, and organizations with no role in the litigation created the data years before the litigation began.

The 2010 amendments to Rule 26 made significant changes to the rules governing discovery of expert witnesses, severely limiting the discovery of communications between counsel and experts and of experts' draft reports. See Sara Lee Corp. v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 273 F.R.D. 416, 419 (N.D. Ill. 2011) (recounting the history leading to the 2010 amendments to Rule 26). The amendments to Rule 26 went into effect on December 1, 2010, and apply to cases pending on that date if "just and practicable." See Order (U.S. April 28, 2010) transmitting to Congress proposed 2010 rule amendments.

As amended, Rule 26(b)(4)(B)-(C) provides:

(4) Trial Preparation: Experts.

(B) Trial-Preparation Protection for Draft Reports or Disclosures.

Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect drafts of any report or disclosure required under Rule 26(a)(2), regardless of the form in which the draft is recorded.

(C) Trial-Preparation Protection for Communications Between a Party's Attorney and Expert Witnesses.

Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect communications between the party's attorney and any witness required to provide a report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), regardless of the form of the communications, except to the extent that the communications:

- (i) relate to compensation for the expert's study or testimony;
- (ii) identify facts or data that the party's attorney provided and that the expert considered in forming the opinions to be expressed; or

- (iii) identify assumptions that the party's attorney provided and that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed.

The advisory notes to the amendments to Rule 26 explain that the amendment is designed to prevent the needless expense and chilling of the attorney-expert relationship caused where discovery of their communications and experts' draft reports is allowed:

The Committee has been told repeatedly that routine discovery into attorney-expert communications and draft reports has had undesirable effects. Costs have risen. Attorneys may employ two sets of experts – one for purposes of consultation and another to testify at trial – because disclosure of their collaborative interactions with expert consultants would reveal their most sensitive and confidential case analysis. At the same time, attorneys feel compelled to adopt a guarded attitude toward their interaction with testifying experts that impedes effective communication, and experts adopt strategies that protect against discovery but also interfere with their work.

FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(1) (2010) advisory committee's note. Rule 26(a)(2)(B)(ii) was specifically intended "to alter the outcome in cases that have relied on the 1993 formulation in requiring disclosure of all attorney-expert communications and draft reports. The amendments to Rule 26(b)(4) make this change explicit by providing work-product protection against discovery regarding draft reports and disclosures or attorney-expert communications." FED. R. CIV. P. 26(a)(2)(B) (2010) advisory committee's note.

Rule 26(b)(4)(B) was added to provide work product protection under Rule 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) for drafts of expert reports or disclosures. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(4) (2010) advisory committee's note. Rule 26(b)(4)(C) was added to provide work product protection for attorney-expert communications, and was designed to protect counsel's work product and ensure that lawyers may interact with experts "without fear of exposing those communications to searching discovery." Id. See CFTC v. Newell, 301 F.R.D. 348, 352 (N.D. Ill. 2014) (government not allowed to discover drafts of expert reports or attorney-expert communications, unless communications fall within one of the three specific exceptions in Rule 26(b)(4)(C)).

The protections of Rule 26(b)(4)(C) do not apply to three specific exceptions set forth in the rule. Id. Discovery of attorney-expert communications on subjects outside the three exceptions or regarding draft expert reports or disclosures is permitted only in limited circumstances and by court order. Id. A party seeking such discovery must make the showing specified in Rule 26(b)(3)(A)(ii) (substantial need and undue hardship). Id. "It will be rare for a party to be able to make such a showing given the broad disclosure and discovery otherwise allowed regarding the expert's testimony. . . . In the rare case in which a party does make this showing, the court must protect against disclosure of the attorney's mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories under Rule 26(b)(3)(B)." Id. Amended Rule 26(a)(2)(B)(ii) clarifies that the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, and legal theories of counsel are not discoverable by redefining the scope of expert disclosures and discovery from “the data or other information” considered by an expert to “facts or data considered” by the expert witness in forming their opinions. “The refocus of disclosure on ‘facts or data’ is meant to limit to disclosure to material of a factual nature by excluding theories or mental impressions of counsel.” FED. R. CIV. P. 26(a)(2)(B) (2010) advisory committee’s note.

Although the 2010 amendments provide significant protection for expert drafts and attorney-expert communications, the rule may not preclude discovery of facts or data provided to the expert by an attorney, such as fact work product prepared for the expert by counsel.

See:

In re Application of the Republic of Ecuador, 735 F.3d 1179, 1186-87 (10th Cir. 2013). The court rejected an argument that Rule 26(b)(3)(A) protects from discovery materials prepared by or for an expert witness in anticipation of litigation. “Contrary to Chevron’s assertion that these revisions were intended to have wide-ranging effects, the revisions appear to alter only the outcome of cases either allowing discovery of draft reports or attorney-expert communications.” (internal citations omitted)

In re MTBE Prods. Liab. Litig., 293 F.R.D. 568, 576-77 (S.D.N.Y. 2013). The court rejected an argument that Amended Rule 26 protected work product created by a consultant at the request of counsel, which the consultant then reviewed to refresh his recollection when acting as a testifying expert. “Thus, even after the 2010 Amendment, the scope of expert discovery contemplated by Rule 26 is still expansive. As the Advisory Committee Note to the 2010 Amendment clarifies, Rule 26 ‘require[s] disclosure of any material considered by [a] [testifying] expert, from whatever source, that contains factual ingredients.’”

Discovery of facts known or opinions held by non-testifying experts, however, is generally discoverable only upon a showing of “exceptional circumstances.” FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(4)(D). See, e.g., Szulik v. State Street Bank & Trust Co., No. 12-10018-NMG, 2014 WL 3942934, at *2 (D. Mass. Aug. 11, 2014) (party could not subpoena a non-testifying expert who had been retained to provide professional consulting services and assistance in litigation for documents it had obtained from third-parties). See also The Work Product Doctrine: Use Of Documents By Witnesses And Experts, § III.E.9, infra.

H. DISCLOSURE TO THE GOVERNMENT

When corporations or other organizations learn of internal wrongdoing, or become the subject of a government investigation, they often want to cooperate with the government to investigate the wrongdoing and to assist the government with its regulatory and enforcement duties. In many cases, the organization will be interested in avoiding organizational liability, criminal or civil, for the wrongdoing of individuals working for the organization and will be willing to disclose information it has learned through an internal investigation. However, the organization typically will want to provide factual information and avoid disclosing privileged material, because voluntarily disclosing privileged information to government agencies typically waives the privilege and exposes otherwise protected information to discovery by other parties, including private litigants. Beginning with the Holder Memorandum in 1999, and continuing with the Thompson Memorandum in 2003 and the McNulty Memorandum in 2006, the Department of Justice (“DOJ”) put pressure on corporations to waive attorney-client privilege and work product protections as a condition for receiving cooperation credit under the DOJ's charging guidelines. In response, corporations and the organized bar vigorously resisted these intrusions on privileged information.

Two developments in 2008 suggested that government investigators would decrease the pressure on corporations to disclose privileged information and provide some predictability in determining the scope of waiver where there is disclosure. First, the U.S. Attorneys' Manual² as revised in 2008 directed federal prosecutors not to request privilege waivers, and instead directed them to seek non-privileged facts. Second, in October of 2008, the SEC adopted a similar policy in the SEC Enforcement Manual. However, in January 2010, the SEC revised its Enforcement Manual to allow investigators to request privilege waivers with senior agency approval. Subsequent revisions to the Justice Manual and the SEC Enforcement Manual have not significantly altered either agency's approach to privilege.

1. U.S. Attorneys' Manual (2008) – Disclosure of Relevant Facts and Non-Privileged Documents.

The August 2008 revisions to the U.S. Attorneys' Manual responded to broad criticism of the DOJ's waiver policies by directing prosecutors not to request privileged information. Instead, the DOJ's official policies emphasized that they seek the facts available to a corporation and expressly stated that privilege waivers should not be a factor in assessing corporate cooperation.

The 2008 revised U.S. Attorneys' Manual recognized that the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine “serve an extremely important function in the American legal system.” The Manual noted that although “waiving the attorney-client and work product protections has never been a prerequisite under the Department's prosecution guidelines for a corporation to be viewed as cooperative,” the legal and business communities have asserted that the DOJ's policies “have been used, either wittingly or unwittingly, to coerce business entities into waiving attorney-client privilege and work-product protection.” Id. Therefore, prosecutors were directed to seek “the facts known to the corporation about the putative criminal misconduct under review” instead of privileged information. Justice Manual § 9-28.710. The 2008 revised U.S. Attorneys' Manual stated:

What the government seeks and needs to advance its legitimate (indeed, essential) law enforcement mission is not waiver of [attorney-client privilege and work product] protections, but rather the facts known to the corporation about the putative criminal misconduct under review. . . . The critical factor is whether the corporation has provided the facts about the events”

Id. § 9-28.710. In a change of policy, the 2008 revised U.S. Attorneys' Manual linked eligibility for cooperation credit to disclosure of “relevant facts of which it has knowledge” and non-privileged documents, instead of privileges waivers. Id. § 9-28.720 (Aug. 2008), 2008 WL 5999740.

Where a corporation has conducted an internal investigation of wrongdoing, the distinction between facts and privileged materials may be complicated. The 2008 revised U.S. Attorneys' Manual indicated the standard for cooperation is "has the party timely disclosed the relevant facts about the putative misconduct?" Id. § 9-28.720(a). On its face, the revised policy provided that a corporation may disclose the facts learned during an internal investigation without disclosing the details and substance of the investigation and still be viewed as cooperative. The 2008 revised U.S. Attorneys' Manual provided the following useful example:

By way of example, corporate personnel are typically interviewed during an internal investigation. If the interviews are conducted by counsel for the corporation, certain notes and memoranda generated from the interviews may be subject, at least in part, to the protections of attorney-client privilege and/or attorney work product. To receive cooperation credit for providing factual information, the corporation need not produce, and prosecutors may not request, protected notes or memoranda generated by the lawyers' interviews. To earn such credit, however, the corporation does need to produce, and prosecutors may request, relevant factual information--including relevant factual information acquired through those interviews, unless the identical information has otherwise been provided--as well as relevant non-privileged evidence such as accounting and business records and emails between non-attorney employees or agents.

Id. § 9-28.720(a) n.3 (emphasis added).

Although the 2008 revised U.S. Attorneys' Manual focused on facts that resulted from internal investigations, a corporation seeking cooperation credit was also expected to disclose non-privileged documents and other information:

There are other dimensions of cooperation beyond the mere disclosure of facts, of course. These can include, for example, providing non-privileged documents and other evidence, making witnesses available for interviews, and assisting in the interpretation of complex business records.

Id. § 9-28.720 n.2.

The 2008 revised U.S. Attorneys' Manual directed prosecutors not to request communications between corporate counsel and the corporation's employees, directors, or officers "regarding or in a manner that concerns the legal implications of the putative misconduct at issue." Id. § 9-28.720(b). Thus, both the conduct of the investigation and privileged communications regarding the conduct, which may have occurred before the investigation was launched, were outside the scope of a proper request for information. This guidance was subject to exceptions where the attorney-client privilege has been waived, for example, where the company asserts an advice of counsel defense or the communications are in furtherance of a crime or fraud. Id. § 9-28.720(b)(i) & (ii).

The 2008 revised U.S. Attorneys' Manual also addressed joint defense arrangements:

Similarly, the mere participation by a corporation in a joint defense agreement does not render the corporation ineligible to receive cooperation credit, and prosecutors may not request that a corporation refrain from entering into such agreements. Of course, the corporation may wish to avoid putting itself in the position of being disabled, by virtue of a particular joint defense or similar agreement, from providing some relevant facts to the government and thereby limiting its ability to seek such cooperation credit. Such might be the case if the corporation gathers facts from employees who have entered into a joint defense agreement with the corporation, and who may later seek to prevent the corporation from disclosing the facts it has acquired. Corporations may wish to address this situation by crafting or participating in joint defense agreements, to the extent they choose to enter them, that provide such flexibility as they deem appropriate.

Id. § 9.28.730 (Sept. 2008).

2. Justice Manual (2023): Disclosure of All Non-Privileged, Relevant Facts is the Threshold for Cooperation Credit.

The Justice Manual, as revised in March 2023, makes it clear that it is not necessary to waive the attorney-client privilege or work product protections to obtain cooperation credit, and prosecutors should not ask for such waivers. However, the DOJ will expect timely disclosure of "all relevant facts" concerning alleged misconduct.

[W]aiving the attorney-client and work product protections has never been a prerequisite under the Department's prosecution guidelines for a corporation to be viewed as cooperative.

* * * *

What the government seeks and needs to advance its legitimate (indeed, essential) law enforcement mission is not waiver of those protections, but rather the facts known to the corporation about the putative criminal misconduct under review. In addition, while a corporation remains free to convey non-factual or 'core' attorney-client communications or work product – if and only if the corporation voluntarily chooses to do so – prosecutors should not ask for such waivers and are directed not to do so. The critical factor is whether the corporation has provided the facts about the events[.]

See also § 9-28.720(b) (except where there has been waiver or assertion of an advice of counsel defense, “prosecutors may not request the disclosure of” attorney-client communications or protected work product “as a condition for the corporation’s eligibility to receive cooperation credit.”)

§ 9-28.720 (emphasis in the original) explains:

Eligibility for cooperation credit is not predicated upon the waiver of attorney-client privilege or work product protection. Instead, the sort of cooperation that is most valuable to resolving allegations of misconduct by a corporation and its officers, directors, employees, or agents is timely disclosure of the relevant facts concerning such misconduct.

The DOJ expects disclosure of “all relevant facts:”

In short, the corporation may be eligible for cooperation credit regardless of whether it chooses to waive privilege or work product in the process, if it timely provides all relevant facts about the individuals who were involved in the misconduct. But if the corporation does not disclose such facts, it will not be entitled to receive any credit for cooperation.

Where a corporation has conducted an internal investigation, the DOJ will not seek privileged notes and communications, but it will expect disclosure of the facts learned during the investigation:

If the interviews [of corporate personnel] are conducted by counsel for the corporation, certain notes and memoranda generated from the interviews may be subject, at least in part, to the protections of attorney-client privilege and/or attorney work product. To receive cooperation credit for providing factual information, the corporation need not produce, and prosecutors may not request, protected notes or memoranda generated by the interviews conducted by counsel for the corporation. To earn such credit, however, the corporation does need to produce, and prosecutors may request, relevant factual information – including relevant factual information acquired through these interviews, unless the identical information has otherwise been provided – as well as relevant non-privileged evidence such as accounting and business records and emails between non-attorney employees or agents.

3. Cooperation Under the SEC Enforcement Manual (2008) – Disclosure of All Relevant Facts.

The 2008 SEC Enforcement Manual, at least on its face, suggested there would be less intrusion on the privilege. See generally SEC Enf. Manual (2008) § 4. The October 2008 revision to the SEC Enforcement Manual directed:

[T]he staff should not ask a party to waive the attorney-client or work product privileges and is directed not to do so. All decisions regarding a potential waiver of privilege are to be reviewed with the Assistant supervising the matter and that review may involve more senior members of management as deemed necessary. The Enforcement Division’s central concern is whether the party has disclosed all relevant facts within the party’s knowledge that are responsive to the staff’s information requests, and not whether a party has elected to assert or waive a privilege. As discussed below, if a party seeks cooperation credit for timely disclosure of relevant facts, the party must disclose all such facts within the party’s knowledge. On request, and to the extent possible, the staff should continue to work with parties to explore alternative means of obtaining factual information when it appears that disclosure of responsive documents or other evidence may otherwise result in waiver of applicable privileges.

A party remains free to disclose privileged communications or documents if the party voluntarily chooses to do so. In this regard, the SEC does not view a party’s waiver of privilege as an end in itself, but only as a means (where necessary) to provide relevant and sometimes critical information to the staff. In the event a party voluntarily waives privilege, the staff cannot assure the party that, as a legal matter, the information provided to the staff during the course of the staff’s investigation will not be subject to disclosure pursuant to subpoena or other legal process.

SEC Enf. Manual (2008) § 4.3 (emphasis added). A corporation seeking cooperation credit had to make timely disclosure of “all [relevant] facts within the party’s knowledge.” SEC Enf. Manual (2008) § 4.3; see also SEC Enf. Manual (2010) § 4.3. This policy was subject to exception, however, when a target of an investigation asserted an advice-of-counsel defense or when there was evidence that the crime-fraud exception applied. SEC Enf. Manual (2008) §§ 4.1.1, 4.3; see also SEC Enf. Manual (2010) § 4.3. The SEC Enforcement Manual acknowledged that “[a]s a matter of public policy, the SEC wants to encourage individuals, corporate officers and employees to consult counsel about potential violations of the securities laws.” SEC Enf. Manual (2008) § 4.3; see also SEC Enf. Manual (2010) § 4.3.

To illustrate the difference between relevant facts and protected information, the 2008 SEC Enforcement Manual provided, with respect to internal investigations: “If the interviews are conducted by attorneys, certain memoranda or notes generated in connection with the interview may be subject, at least in part, to the attorney-client or work product privileges. However, the underlying factual information disclosed by the witnesses during the interviews is not privileged.” SEC Enf. Manual (2008) § 4.3.

4. Subsequent Revisions to SEC Enforcement Manual Allow Privilege Waiver Requests

Beginning with the revised SEC Enforcement Manual released in January 2010 and continuing through the current Enforcement Manual, released in October 2016, corporations still may not be penalized for refusing to waive privilege, but investigators are no longer instructed not to request privilege waiver. Investigators are expressly allowed to request waivers with prior approval by the Director or Deputy Director of the SEC.

Section 4.3 of the SEC Enforcement Manual now provides:

The staff must respect legitimate assertions of the attorney-client privilege and attorney work product protection. As a matter of public policy, the SEC wants to encourage individuals, corporate officers and employees to consult counsel about the requirements and potential violations of the securities laws. Likewise, non-factual or core attorney work product – for example, an attorney’s mental impressions or legal theories – lies at the core of the attorney work product doctrine.

A key objective in the staff’s investigations is to obtain relevant information, and parties are, in fact, required to provide all relevant, non-privileged information and documents in response to SEC subpoenas. The staff should not ask a party to waive the attorney-client privilege or work product protection without prior approval of the Director or Deputy Director. A proposed request for a privilege waiver should be reviewed initially with the Assistant Director supervising the matter and that review should involve more senior members of management as appropriate before being presented to the Director or Deputy Director.

Both entities and individuals may provide significant cooperation in investigations by voluntarily disclosing relevant information. Voluntary disclosure of information need not include a waiver of privilege to be an effective form of cooperation and a party’s decision to assert a legitimate claim of privilege will not negatively affect their claim to credit for cooperation. However, as discussed below, if a party seeks cooperation credit for timely disclosure of relevant facts, the party must disclose all such facts within the party’s knowledge.

Corporations often gather facts through internal investigations regarding the conduct at issue in the staff’s investigation. In corporate internal investigations, employees and other witnesses associated with a corporation are often interviewed by attorneys. Certain notes and memoranda generated from attorney interviews may be subject, at least in part, to the protections of attorney-client privilege and/or attorney work product protection. To receive cooperation credit for providing factual information obtained from interviews, the corporation need not necessarily produce, and the staff may not request without approval, protected notes or memoranda generated by the attorneys’ interviews. To earn such credit, however, the corporation must produce, and the staff always may request, relevant factual information—including relevant factual information acquired through those interviews.

A party may choose to voluntarily disclose privileged communications or documents. In this regard, the SEC does not view a party's waiver of privilege as an end in itself, but only as a means (where necessary) to provide relevant and sometimes critical information to the staff. See Report of Investigation Pursuant to Section 21(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and Commission Statement on the Relationship of Cooperation to Agency Enforcement Decisions, Securities Exchange Act Rel. No. 44969 n.3 (Oct. 23, 2001) (“Seaboard 21(a) Report”). In the event a party voluntarily waives the attorney-client privilege or work product protection, the staff cannot assure the party that, as a legal matter, the information provided to the staff during the course of the staff's investigation will not be subject to disclosure pursuant to subpoena, other legal process, or the routine uses set forth in the Commission's Forms 1661 and 1662.

SEC Enf. Manual (2017) § 4.3 (emphasis in original). This language also appears in the 2010, 2012, 2013, 2015 and 2016 versions of the SEC Enforcement Manual, with slight modifications. SEC Enf. Manual (2010) § 4.3; SEC Enf. Manual (2012) § 4.3; SEC Enf. Manual (2013) § 4.3; SEC Enf. Manual (2015) § 4.3; SEC Enf. Manual (2016) § 4.3.

Although the SEC Enforcement Manual acknowledges the importance of privilege and claims that a corporation will not be penalized for asserting legitimate privileges, it is difficult to reconcile these statements with the express expectation that investigators will be seeking privilege waivers. The current SEC Enforcement Manual shows government recidivism in the culture of waiver that ensures that the debate about the propriety of government-coerced waivers will continue.

The 2017 version of the SEC Enforcement Manual references FRE 502(b) and provides the following guidance to SEC staff:

Whether an inadvertent production is first identified by staff or by the producing party, before determining how to proceed, staff should consult with his or her supervisor(s) and, if appropriate, the Regional Director, Unit Chief, Chief Counsel, Chief Litigation Counsel, and/or the Professional Responsibility Counsel in OGC. Generally, if an inadvertent production is discovered by staff, staff will notify the party through his or her counsel of its receipt of inadvertently produced documents.

SEC Enf. Manual (2017) § 4.2. Listed as a “Consideration” is “[w]hether the staff should return (or sequester) an inadvertently produced document” or whether the staff “has a legally sound basis for using it” based on “applicable state professional responsibility rules, as well as, in many cases, the applicable law of privilege and rules of evidence.” Id. After such a determination, “staff typically informs the party whether the staff intends to return, sequester, or use the document” and “may inform the party whether and to whom staff has provided copies of the document outside the SEC (e.g., a judge).” Id. If the document is returned to the producing party based on privilege, the staff is instructed to request that the party submit a privilege log. Id. (“If it is determined that, based on a claim of privilege, a document should be returned to the party, staff should require that the party promptly submit a privilege log for the document.”).

The 2017 version of the SEC Enforcement Manual allows the SEC to enter an agreement under which a party may produce documents to the staff before conducting a privilege review while still seeking to preserve applicable privilege claims over the produced materials:

In some instances, a party may seek to produce documents to the staff before reviewing them for privilege, while also seeking to preserve any claims of privilege on the materials. If it will benefit the investigation, staff can choose to accept such a production by entering into a written agreement (the Model Agreement for Purposeful Production without Privilege Review) with the producing party. Under the agreement, responsibility for identifying any privileged materials resides solely with the party, and acceptance of the production is not an agreement to shift such responsibility to the staff. Further, under the terms of the written agreement, the party must agree, among other things, not to assert that the staff’s investigation has been tainted by the staff’s receipt, review, examination, or use of any material later determined to be privileged.

SEC Enf. Manual (2016) § 4.2.1. Before entering into such an agreement, a producing party should consider the ramifications of disclosing privileged information to the government, including whether such a disclosure amounts to waiver vis-à-vis third parties. See Disclosure to the Government: Selective Waiver, § I.H.5, infra.

5. Selective Waiver

If a party discloses privileged information to a government agency, it creates a significant risk that other parties, including third-party litigants, will be able to discover that information in subsequent proceedings. Corporations have argued that voluntary disclosures to government agencies should result only in “selective waiver,” that is, waiver as to the government but not as to third-party litigants.

The seminal case supporting selective waiver is Diversified Industries, Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596 (8th Cir. 1977) (en banc). In Diversified, a corporation responded to allegations that it had paid bribes to obtain business by forming an independent audit committee and retaining outside counsel to prepare an internal report on the issue. The internal report was subsequently produced to the Securities and Exchange Commission (“SEC”). The Eighth Circuit held that this disclosure constituted only a “limited waiver” that did not preclude the corporation from withholding the report from private litigants on the grounds of attorney-client privilege. Id. at 611. The Eighth Circuit explained: “To hold otherwise may have the effect of thwarting the developing procedure of corporations to employ independent outside counsel to investigate and advise them in order to protect stockholders, potential stockholders and customers.” Id.; see also United States v. Shyres, 898 F.2d 647, 657 (8th Cir. 1990) (applying the reasoning of Diversified); McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. EEOC, 922 F. Supp. 235, 243 (E.D. Mo. 1996) (applying the reasoning of Diversified).

The selective waiver doctrine has been rejected by all but a small minority of courts. The clear majority rule under federal law is that waiver as to even one government agency constitutes waiver as to all, including other government agencies and private litigation adversaries.

a. The Rejection of the Selective Waiver Doctrine (Majority Rule)

Most courts have rejected or applied only a narrow construction of the selective waiver doctrine and have held that selective disclosure of a document to the government constitutes complete waiver of the privilege as to all third parties. As the D.C. Circuit observed in one of the early selective waiver cases, the privilege was not designed to allow a client “to pick and choose among his opponents, waiving the privilege for some and resurrecting the claim of confidentiality to obstruct others.” Permian Corp. v. United States, 665 F.2d 1214, 1221 (D.C. Cir. 1981); accord United States v. Thompson, 562 F.3d 387, 394 (D.C. Cir. 2009).

Since the D.C. Circuit first rejected selective waiver, the First, Third, Fourth, Sixth, Ninth, and Tenth Circuits have rejected the selective waiver doctrine. In Westinghouse Electric Corp. v. Republic of Philippines, 951 F.2d 1414, 1424-27 (3d Cir. 1991), a corporation was being investigated by the government. The court held that the corporation’s voluntary disclosure of privileged documents during this investigation fully waived any attorney-client or work product privilege, even with respect to third parties in civil litigation. The court reasoned that the protection of the attorney-client privilege was not required to encourage corporations to make such disclosures to a government agency since the corporation would most likely share any exculpatory documents with the government willingly, privileged or not, in order to obtain lenient treatment. Id.; see also In re Pac. Pictures Corp., 679 F.3d 1121, 1127-28 (9th Cir. 2012); United States v. Murray, No. 11-1245, 2012 WL 745617, at *3 (3d Cir. Mar. 8, 2012).

Likewise, in United States v. Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 129 F.3d 681 (1st Cir. 1997), the First Circuit refused to adopt the selective waiver doctrine. The court held that MIT fully waived the privilege with respect to documents it disclosed to a government audit agency (the Defense Contract Audit Agency, or “DCAA”) pursuant to the terms of a contract that it had with the government. Neither the government’s interest in obtaining privileged information nor MIT’s interest in supporting its relationship with the government justified preserving the attorney-client privilege. The court noted: “But the general principle that disclosure normally negates the privilege is worth maintaining. To maintain it here makes the law more predictable and certainly eases its administration.” Id. at 685. Acknowledging the difficulty created by government demands, the court stated: “MIT chose to place itself in this position by becoming a government contractor.” Id. at 686; see In re Lupron Mktg. & Sales Practice Litig., 313 F. Supp. 2d 8, 9-12 (D. Mass 2004).

In re Steinhardt Partners, L.P., 9 F.3d 230, 236 (2d Cir. 1993). Court refused to acknowledge selective waiver in the case before it, but expressly declined to adopt a per se rule against elective waiver, leaving the door open where the parties enter into a confidentiality agreement.

In re Martin Marietta Corp., 856 F.2d 619, 623 (4th Cir. 1988). A client conducted an internal investigation into alleged fraudulent accounting procedures and disclosed the results to the government to avoid indictment. The court found that this disclosure resulted in waiver for other civil litigation. The resulting waiver extended to non-disclosed materials, and even to undisclosed details underlying the published data. However, the court noted that there was only a partial waiver for opinion work product.

In re Subpoenas Duces Tecum, 738 F.2d 1367, 1370 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Relying on Permian, the court found that a party waived the privilege by disclosing information to the SEC, despite the fact that the party's transmittal letter stated that the documents were confidential and their submission of them to the SEC was not a waiver of any privilege.

In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 824 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Court found that company had waived privilege by voluntarily submitting report of investigative counsel to the SEC. This waiver included any documentation necessary to evaluate the report.

b. Decisions in Support of Selective Waiver

Although the selective waiver doctrine has been rejected by most courts, there remains some debate in a few jurisdictions over whether disclosure to the government waives privilege when the disclosures are made pursuant to a confidentiality agreement with the government. The Second Circuit left this issue open in Steinhardt Partners, 9 F.3d 230, 236 (2d Cir. 1993). The court stated:

[W]e decline to adopt a per se rule that voluntary disclosures to the government waive work-product protection . . . Establishing a right rule would fail to anticipate situations in which the disclosing party and the government . . . have entered into an explicit agreement that the [government agency] will maintain the confidentiality of the disclosed materials.

9 F.3d at 236.

Some courts have applied the selective waiver doctrine where disclosure was pursuant to a confidentiality agreement with the government. For example, in In re Natural Gas Commodity Litigation, No. 03 Civ. 6186VMAJP, 2005 WL 1457666, at *5-6 (S.D.N.Y. June 21, 2005), the court noted that the Second Circuit in In re Steinhardt Partners, above, did not completely reject the doctrine, leaving open the possibility that disclosure to the government might not constitute a waiver in all cases. The court held that, where the producing parties had entered into confidentiality agreements with the government and where the civil parties seeking discovery had been provided with the underlying factual material upon which the disclosed reports had been based, disclosure to the SEC did not waive work product protections. See also In re: Ex parte Application of financialright GmbH, 17-mc-105(DAB), 2017 WL 2879696, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. June 23, 2017) (applying selective waiver doctrine and holding that disclosure of privileged investigation to DOJ did not waive either the attorney-client privilege or the work product protection where disclosing party had a non-waiver agreement with the government); Pensacola Firefighters' Relief Pension Fund Bd. of Tr. v. Merrill Lynch Pierce, 265 F.R.D. 589, 597 (N.D. Fla. 2010) (although the court found that the defendant waived the attorney-client privilege when it disclosed documents to the SEC, the court held that production of all documents produced to the SEC without a more specific request could potentially allow the plaintiff to bypass limitations on the scope of discovery established by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure); In re Micron Tech., Inc. Sec. Litig., 264 F.R.D. 7, 10-11 (D.D.C. 2010) (applying the law enforcement privilege and refusing to compel the disclosure of documents to plaintiffs in a shareholder class action lawsuit that defendant had already provided to the Department of Justice for an antitrust investigation after determining that compelling disclosure could chill future informants); In re Cardinal Health Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 04 Civ. 575, 2007 WL 495150, at *8-9 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 26, 2007) (no waiver of work product protection even in absence of confidentiality agreement). But see In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 249 F.R.D. 457, 462-65 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (rejecting selective waiver).

The Seventh Circuit has not yet definitely stated its position on selective waiver. See Dellwood Farms, Inc. v. Cargill, Inc., 128 F.3d 1122, 1126-27 (7th Cir. 1997) (noting that courts have generally rejected selective waiver doctrine, but finding that government had not deliberately waived its law enforcement privilege by playing tapes to corporate counsel to persuade company to plead guilty merely because it made a mistake in failing to obtain a non-disclosure agreement with corporate counsel). At least one district court case in the Seventh Circuit has stepped through the door opened by Dellwood, holding that where the company “insisted on a confidentiality agreement” before disclosing privileged materials to the SEC, the selective waiver doctrine preserved the confidentiality of work product documents. Lawrence E. Jaffe Pension Plan v. Household Int'l, Inc., 244 F.R.D. 412, 433 (N.D. Ill. 2006); but see In re Aqua Dots Prod. Liab. Litig., 270 F.R.D. 322, 328-30 (N.D. Ill. 2010) (finding that a footnote in a cover letter requesting that the disclosed documents remain confidential is not sufficient to constitute a confidentiality agreement and thus holding that otherwise applicable work product protection was waived when defendant disclosed protected documents to a government agency).

Nov. 13, 2002) (citing Delaware's general reluctance to find waiver of privileges, the court upheld a form of selective waiver, compelling production of documents disclosed to the government prior to execution of a confidentiality agreement but protecting documents disclosed after the confidentiality order was in place). But see In re Straight Path Communications Inc., C.A. No.: 2017-0486-SG, 2020 WL 3171373, at *3 (Del. Ch. June 15, 2020) (court distinguished Saito as primarily focused on work product protections rather than attorney-client privilege). See also Regents of the Univ. of Cal. v. Super. Court of San Diego Cnty., 81 Cal. Rptr. 186, 194 (Cal. Ct. App. 2008) (applying California law, the court held that disclosure of privileged information to federal agencies investigating defendants for criminal wrongdoing was involuntary, due to the coercive nature of the Thompson/McNulty Memoranda, and did not waive otherwise applicable privileges: "The means of coercion the government used here were, as a practical matter, more powerful than a court order. . . . [T]he defendants here had no means of asserting the privileges without incurring the severe consequences threatened by the government agencies."); Danielson v. Super. Court, 754 P.2d 1145, 1147-48 (Ariz. Ct. Super. Court*, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 812, 820-21 (Cal. Ct. App. 2004) (rejecting generally the selective waiver doctrine).

The Sixth Circuit decisively rejected the approach for selective waiver based on the existence of a confidentiality agreement. In re Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp. Billing Practices Litigation, 293 F.3d 289 (6th Cir. 2002). Columbia/HCA refused to disclose its internal audit materials to the Department of Justice, and ultimately did so only after entering into a confidentiality agreement with the government that stated: "[t]he disclosure of any report, document, or information by one party to the other does not constitute a waiver of any applicable privilege or claim under the work-product doctrine." Id. at 292. Despite the agreement, the court rejected "the concept of selective waiver, in any of its various forms" and affirmed an order compelling the release of the audits to private litigants. Id. at 302. A party waives work product protection by disclosing information to an adversary, or under circumstances that substantially increase the likelihood that a potential adversary could obtain the information. The courts that have rejected selective waiver for work product have done so on the grounds that the government is an adversary or potential adversary. See In re Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp. Billing Practices Litig., 293 F.3d 289, 305-06 (6th Cir. 2002) (“When a party discloses materials to a government agency investigating allegations against it, it uses those materials to forestall protection (if the charges are unfounded) on to obtain lenient treatment (in the case of well-founded allegations). These objectives, however rational, are foreign to the objectives underlying the work-product doctrine.”). See also In re Qwest Commc’ns Int’l Inc., 450 F.3d 1179, 1196 (10th Cir. 2006) (“Qwest disclosed to adversaries under agreements which did not realistically further dissemination.”); *United States v. Cir. 1984) (adversarial relationship existed where disclosure was made to convince SEC not to pursue more formal investigation or enforcement).

Where the government and the disclosing party share a common interest, however, a court may find that there has been no waiver.

See:

United States v. Am Tel. & Tel. Co., 642 F.2d 1285, 1298-1301 (D.C. Cir. 1980). No waiver of work product where disclosing party and the government were proceeding against defendant on overlapping antitrust issues and shared common interests in developing legal theories and analyses with respect to their claims.

Castle v. Sangamo Weston, Inc., 744 F.2d 1464, 1466 (11th Cir. 1984). Turning over materials to EEOC attorneys did not result in waiver of work product protection. At the trial, private plaintiffs' attorneys and counsel for EEOC were engaged in the preparation of a joint trial.

E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., Inc., Civil Action No. 3:09cv58, 2010 WL 1489966, at *8 (E.D. Va. Apr. 13, 2010). Work product protection was not waived by disclosure to the government where the government was investigating defendant, and plaintiff and the government shared a common interest in preventing trade secret theft.

Rule-making and legislative action regarding Federal Rule of Evidence 502 reinforce the trend disfavoring the selective waiver doctrine. Noting strong opposition to a draft rule that would have adopted the selective waiver doctrine, the Judicial Conference's Advisory Committee on Evidence Rules decided not to propose a selective waiver provision in Rule 502. Letter from Hon. Lee H. Rosenthal, Chair, Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure, Judicial Conference, to Senators Leahy and Specter, at 6-7 (Sept. 26, 2007). Following the Advisory Committee's lead, a Statement of Congressional Intent regarding Rule 502(d) submitted by the House Judiciary Committee states: "This subdivision does not provide a basis for a court to enable parties to agree to selective waiver of the privilege, such as to a federal agency conducting an investigation, while preserving the privilege as against other parties seeking the information." 154 Cong. Rec. H7817, H7818 to 19 (Sept. 8, 2008) (statement of Rep. Jackson-Lee); see also In re Initial Public Offering Sec. Litig., 249 F.R.D. 457, 460-62 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (although the court noted that Steinhardt Partners left open the possibility of selective waiver, it rejected the doctrine based in part on the decision to remove a selective waiver provision from proposed Federal Rule of Evidence 502). Nonetheless, FRE 502 may limit the scope of a waiver resulting from disclosure of privileged materials to the government.

c. Statutory Exceptions

There are only a few, narrow statutory safe harbors that allow disclosure of privileged information to the government without resulting in waiver.

1. Federal Deposit Insurance Act (FDIA)

The FDIA provides that privileged information disclosed by any person to federal, state, or foreign banking authorities relating to the supervision and regulation of banks is subject to safe harbor protection.

The FDIA provides:

(x) Privileges not affected by disclosure to banking agency or supervisor—

(1) In general--The submission by any person of any information to the Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection, any Federal banking agency, State bank supervisor, or foreign banking authority for any purpose in the course of any supervisory or regulatory process of such Bureau, agency, supervisor, or authority shall not be construed as waiving, destroying, or otherwise affecting any privilege such person may claim with respect to such information under Federal or State law as to any person or entity other than such Bureau, agency, supervisor, or authority. 12 U.S.C. §1828(x); see also 12 U.S.C. §1785(j) (credit unions).

The FDIA was amended in December 2012 to include the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) as a regulator with whom information could be shared without waiving privilege. Act of Dec. 20, 2012, Pub. L. No. 112-215, 126 Stat. 1589 (enacting H.R. 4014) (codified in 12 U.S.C.A. §1828(x)). The 2012 amendments further designated the CFPB as a “covered agency” that may share privileged information with other federal agencies without the disclosure constituting waiver. Act of Dec. 20, 2012, Pub. L. No. 112-215, 126 Stat. 1589 (enacting H.R. 4014) (codified in 12 U.S.C.A. §1821(t)).

The CFPB is a federal agency established by the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Dodd-Frank Act) to supervise and monitor depository institutions, credit unions with assets over ten billion dollars, and certain non-depository institutions. See 12 U.S.C.A. §5514(a)(1) (enumerating non-depository entities subject to CFPB's supervisory authority, including, without limitation, entities that offer or provide origination, brokerage, or servicing of consumer real estate loans, or loan modification or foreclosure relief services; private education loans; and payday loans); 12 U.S.C.A. §5515(a) (CFPB supervises insured depository institutions, insured credit unions, and their affiliates). See also CFPB Bulletin 12-01 (Jan. 4, 2012), at 1 (describing the CFPB's supervision authority), available at http://files.consumerfinance.gov/f/2012/01/GC_bulletin_12-01.pdf (accessed July 4, 2023). The CFPB has taken the position that it may compel supervised entities to provide it with information--including privileged information--and that the provision of this information does not constitute waiver. In 2012, the CFPB took two actions. First, the CFPB issued a letter asserting that it could compel disclosure of privileged information, and that pursuant to the compelled disclosure doctrine, disclosure would not result in waiver. See, e.g., CFPB Bulletin 12-01 (Jan. 4, 2012), at 2, available at <http://files.consumerfinance.gov/f/2012/01/GC>

bulletin_12-01.pdf (accessed July 4, 2023) (asserting that “supervised institutions are required to provide all documents and information responsive to the [CFPB's] request [for information]” and, “because entities must comply with the Bureau's supervisory requests for information, the provision of privileged information to the Bureau would not be considered voluntary and would thus not waive any privilege that attached to such information”).

Second, the CFPB, pursuant to its rulemaking authority, (see 12 U.S.C.A. 5512), issued a proposed rule in March 2012 that became effective in August 2012, in which the CFPB purported to override federal and state law with respect to the effect of disclosure to this federal agency, providing that disclosure to the CFPB would not result in waiver of privilege. 12 C.F.R. 1070.48. See also 77 Fed. Reg. 51, 15286-89 (Mar. 15, 2012) (proposed rule); 77 Fed. Reg. 129, 3961721 (July 5, 2012) (final rule).

The ABA, in April 2012, sent a letter to the CFPB, arguing: (1) that the Dodd-Frank Act did not grant the CFPB rights to compel disclosure and (2) that disclosure without a federal statute would lead to waiver.

In a letter dated April 12, 2012, from Wm. T. Robinson III, President of the American Bar Association, to Monica Jackson, Office of the Executive Secretary, CFPB (at 4-5) (“ABA Letter”), the ABA Letter stated:

Contrary to the Bureau's position, the Dodd-Frank Act does not grant the Bureau the authority to compel supervised entities to produce privileged or work product protected materials Although the ABA understands that banks often produce privileged materials to Federal banking agencies when requested to do so during examinations, the ABA is not aware of any reported Federal appellate court case holding that Federal banking regulators--or any other Federal agencies--can require production of privileged materials, nor do the Federal banking statutes contain such authority. Furthermore, the application of this alleged agency authority to compel production of privileged information with regard to non-banks is wholly unprecedented.”

The ABA Letter questioned the effectiveness of the proposed rule with respect protecting privileged information disclosed to the CFPB because nothing in the Dodd-Frank Act nor any other Federal statute grants the Bureau the authority to compel or require supervised entities to submit privileged or work product protected information” and serious questions exist as to whether the submission of privileged materials to the Bureau would [be] truly ‘involuntary.’”

Although the December 2012 amendments to the FDIA may allay concerns with respect to depository institutions, the FDIA's safe harbor protection likely does not cover non-depository institutions. The FDIA itself does not purport to regulate non-depository institutions, and section 1828 of the FDIA specifically is titled Regulations governing insured depository institutions” which the Act defines as bank[s] or savings association[s] the deposits of which are insured by the [Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation]....” See 12 U.S.C.A. 1828; 12 U.S.C.A. 1813(c)(2). Further, it is questionable whether the CFPB's rulemaking authority is sufficient to bind state courts and alter states' substantive laws regarding privilege. As the Judicial Conference Advisory Committee on Evidence Rules explained, FRE 502 was enacted by Congress through its authority under the Commerce Clause instead of through the rulemaking process precisely because a rule of privilege cannot take effect through the ordinary rulemaking process and cannot bind state courts. Thus, the disclosure of privileged information to the CFPB by non-depository institutions may still lead to waiver, notwithstanding the CFPB's rulemaking and congressional amendments of the FDIA. See, e.g., American Financial Services Association, 2014 Federal Priorities (identifying as a priority for 2014 the protection of privileged and confidential information submitted by non-depository institutions to the CFPB); see also 81 Fed. Reg. 58310 (Aug. 24, 2016), available at <https://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2016-08-24/pdf/2016-19594.pdf> (accessed July 4, 2023) (proposed CFPB rule expanding its discretion to share confidential supervisory information with state attorney generals and other agencies without waiving the confidentiality).

2. Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (“FISA”)

FISA enables the FBI to conduct highly sensitive investigations pursuant to ex parte orders for production issued by the FISA Court. See 50 U.S.C.A. 1861(e). FISA provides that privileged information acquired by the FBI will not lose its privileged status.

50 U.S.C.A. §1861(h) provides:

(h) Information acquired from tangible things received by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in response to an order under this subchapter concerning any United States person may be used and disclosed by Federal officers and employees without the consent of the United States person only in accordance with the minimization procedures adopted pursuant to subsection (g). No otherwise privileged information acquired from tangible things received by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in accordance with the provisions of this subchapter shall lose its privileged character. No information acquired from tangible things received by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in response to an order under this subchapter may be used or disclosed by Federal officers or employees except for lawful purposes.

3. Cybersecurity Information Sharing Act of 2015 (“CISA”)

CISA (6 U.S.C.A. 1501 et seq.) provides a safe harbor for sharing certain cybersecurity information with the federal government without waiving privilege. Section 1504(d)(1) provides that a non-federal entity may provide cyber threat indicators, (6 U.S.C.A. §1501(6), defining cybersecurity threat indicator”) and defensive measures (6 U.S.C.A. 1501(7), defining “defensive measure”) to the federal government without waiving applicable privileges or protections.

6 U.S.C.A. 1504(d)(1) provides:

(1) No Waiver of Privilege or Protection

The provision of cyber threat indicators and defensive measures to the Federal Government under this subchapter shall not constitute a waiver of any applicable privilege or protection provided by law, including trade secret information.

As CISA overrides other state and federal law, this provision applies in circumstances where state or federal privileges or protections may be invoked. “Guidance to Assist Non-Federal Entities to Share Cyber Threat Indicators and Defensive Measures with Federal Entities under the Cybersecurity Information Sharing Act of 2015 (October 2020), at 26, 33, available at Guidance to Assist Non-Federal Entities to Share Cyber Threat Indicators and Defensive Measures with Federal Entities under the Cybersecurity Information Sharing Act of 2015 \(cisa.gov\) (accessed July 4, 2023).

6. FRE 502 – Limitation on Scope of Waiver

Although disclosure of privileged materials to the government may waive the attorney-client privilege and work product protections, FRE 502 limits the scope of such waiver.

FRE 502(a) provides:

a) Disclosure made in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency; scope of a waiver. –

When the disclosure is made in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency and waives the attorney-client privilege or work-product protection, the waiver extends to an undisclosed communication or information in a federal or state proceeding only if:

- (1) the waiver is intentional;
- (2) the disclosed and undisclosed communications or information concern the same subject matter; and
- (3) they ought in fairness to be considered together.

FED. R. EVID. 502(a).

The Advisory Committee’s Note explains that subject matter waiver should be the exception, not the rule:

The rule provides that a voluntary disclosure in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency, if a waiver, generally results in a waiver only of the communication or information disclosed; a subject matter waiver (of either privilege or work product) is reserved for those unusual situations in which fairness requires a further disclosure of related, protected information, in order to prevent a selective and misleading presentation of evidence to the disadvantage of the adversary.

FED. R. EVID. 502(a) advisory committee's note. The Note further clarifies, "subject matter waiver is limited to situations in which a party intentionally puts protected information into the litigation in a selective, misleading and unfair manner." Id. The Note cites In re United Mine Workers of America Employee Benefit Plans Litigation, 159 F.R.D. 307, 312 (D.D.C. 1994) (limiting the waiver of work product to documents actually disclosed), as an example of the proper scope of waiver. The court in United Mine Workers held that subject matter waiver was only proper where there has been a deliberate disclosure intended to gain tactical advantage. 159 F.R.D. at 312. There, the court found that the documents were not disclosed in an effort to achieve an advantage because all of the documents were unhelpful to the disclosing party. Id. The court explained further disclosure was likely to grant the opposing party a "strategic windfall" that could "undermine the adversary system." Id. See also Williams & Connolly LLP v. SEC, No. 09-651, 2010 WL 3025030, at *5 (D.D.C. Aug. 4, 2010) (finding that the production of handwritten notes by the government pursuant to Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 16 did not create a waiver for all handwritten notes and emphasizing that the existence of additional undisclosed handwritten notes did not mean that they even involved the same subject matter); but see SEC v. Microtune, Inc., 258 F.R.D. 310, 317 (N.D. Tex. 2009) (disclosure of some internal investigation materials to SEC resulted in subject matter waiver because Microtune had affirmatively used the disclosure to obtain a lenient deal from the government); Mainstay High Yield Corp. v. Heartland Indus. Partners, L.P., 263 F.R.D. 478, 482-83 (E.D. Mich. 2009) (finding submission of "white paper" to federal prosecutors for purpose of obtaining leniency would waive entire subject matter of document, but allowing party opportunity to prove white paper was submitted by attorney without party's authorization).

Courts applying FRE 502(a) to disclosures of internal investigation information to the government focus on whether the disclosures would give an unfair advantage to a litigation adversary.

See:

In re General Motors LLC Ignition Switch Litig., 80 F. Supp. 3d 521, 533-34 (S.D.N.Y. 2015). Pursuant to FRE 502(a), disclosure of an internal investigation report to federal offices and agencies did not waive privilege with respect to underlying investigation materials such as notes, summaries, and formal memoranda relating to individual interviews conducted by company's outside counsel. Where a party has neither offensively used a report in litigation, nor made a selective or misleading presentation that is unfair to adversaries in litigation, it does not present the "unusual and rare circumstances in which fairness requires a judicial finding of waiver with respect to related protected information."

In re Weatherford Intn'l Sec. Litig., No. 11 Civ. 1646 (LAK)(JCF), 2013 WL 6628964, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 16, 2013). Disclosure to the SEC of PowerPoint presentations that summarized the facts of an internal investigation did not result in broad subject matter waiver. Instead, the disclosure waived privilege over other, related, undisclosed privileged information that was "explicitly referenced" in the presentations to the SEC. "In short, interview materials need not be produced unless those specific materials are explicitly identified, cited or quoted in information disclosed to the SEC."

Gruss v. Zwiirn, No. 09-Civ. 6441 (PGG)(MHD), 2013 WL 3481350 (S.D.N.Y. July 10, 2013). Where company disclosed PowerPoint presentations to the SEC that set forth summaries of what each of 21 witnesses told counsel during investigation related interviews, the company waived attorney-client privilege over counsel's interview notes, first because the disclosures were the substance of individually identifiable communications with counsel, and second, according to the court, the company had produced in discovery only favorable witness interview excerpts shown to the SEC, while refusing to produce the witness summaries and notes from which the favorable excerpts were drawn. The court found that "Defendants have manipulated their evidentiary privileges to serve their interests." The court also held that the company had waived the work product protection over factual portions of the interview notes and summaries. The court ordered defendant to produce the notes and summaries to the court for in camera review to determine what portions of the documents were opinion work product, which had not been waived.

7. FRE 502 Protections in Other Proceedings: Practical Limitations

FRE 502(d) provides that a federal court order finding no waiver "by disclosure connected with the litigation before the court" will be binding on "any other federal or state proceeding." FRE 502(e) provides that an agreement "on the effect of disclosure in a federal proceeding is binding only on the parties to the agreement, unless it is incorporated into a court order."

These provisions raise two practical questions where a corporation wishes to disclose information to a federal office or agency, but no "proceeding" yet exists. First, in subsequent litigation, how will the producing party obtain one ruling regarding waiver that will be binding on all other state and federal proceedings? For example, if a corporation has disclosed privileged information to the SEC, which subsequently brings an action against the corporation, will a court order limiting the scope of discovery to only the documents actually disclosed to the SEC bind other courts? Third-party litigants in separate actions may argue that the disclosure to the SEC was not "in connection with" the subsequent litigation brought by the SEC, therefore a court in separate litigation has the authority independently to determine the scope of waiver. Although the "in connection with" language may be broad enough to encompass subsequent litigation relating to the SEC investigation, courts may differ in their interpretation of the rule.

A second practical problem arises with respect to non-waiver/"claw back" or similar agreements that a producing party may enter into with the government with respect to inadvertent disclosure. Rule 502(e) provides that agreements among parties are not binding on others, such as subsequent third-party opponents, unless the agreements are incorporated into a court order. As one commentator has suggested with respect to confidentiality agreements, the solution to both of these practical problems may be for a producing party to (1) insist that the government issue a subpoena and then (2) file an action for a protective order. See Gregory P. Joseph, The Impact of Rule 502(d) on Protective Orders. Within the context of that "proceeding," the court can incorporate the terms of the parties' confidentiality agreement into a protective order. That court would also be able to issue rulings on the scope of waiver that would be binding in other federal and state proceedings with respect to disclosures made pursuant to the subpoena. However, the disadvantage of this approach may be to force the government to formalize an otherwise informal request and potentially make public what otherwise would not have been a publicly disclosed investigation. Id.

The FRE 502 order entered by the court in SEC v. Bank of America Corp., No. 09 Civ. 06829 (JSR), 2009 WL 3297493 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 14, 2009), is an example of parties and the court using FRE 502 proactively to limit waiver to the privileged materials actually disclosed to the government. In Bank of America, Bank of America (“BoA”) had decided to waive privilege and to disclose several specific categories of documents to the government. Id. at *1. In the proposed order, BoA defined the “subject matter” of the documents with respect to a specific date range and specific substantive areas and stated that it intended to disclose “all documents” to the government that fell within the defined subject matter. Id. The court entered BoA’s proposed order, effectively adopting BoA’s definition of subject matter, and ordered that BoA’s “waiver” would not result in broader waiver in the instant proceeding or in any other federal or state proceeding, including 58 pending state and federal actions that had been filed against BoA. Id. at *1. See also In re MF Global Holdings Ltd., No. 11-15059, 2012 WL 769577, at *3 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Mar. 7, 2012) (following Bank of America).

I. EXCEPTIONS TO THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

1. The Crime-Fraud Exception

The attorney-client privilege does not apply when a client consults a lawyer for the purpose of furthering an illegal or fraudulent act. United States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554, 563 (1989); In re Antitrust Grand Jury, 805 F.2d 155, 162 (6th Cir. 1986); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Duces Tecum, 773 F.2d 204, 206 (8th Cir. 1985); United States v. Horvath, 731 F.2d 557, 562 (8th Cir. 1984); cf. Clark v. United States, 289 U.S. 1, 13-14 (1933). The so-called “crime-fraud exception” removes the protection of the attorney-client privilege for communications made in furtherance of contemplated or continuing crimes or frauds. This exception encompasses criminal and fraudulent conduct based on action as well as inaction.

See:

Nix v. Whiteside, 475 U.S. 157, 174 (1986). “A defendant who informed his counsel that he was arranging to bribe or threaten witnesses or members of the jury would have no ‘right’ to insist on counsel’s assistance or silence. Counsel would not be limited to advising against that conduct. An attorney’s duty of confidentiality, which totally covers the client’s admission of guilt, does not extend to a client’s announced plans to engage in future criminal conduct.”

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 745 F.3d 681, 691-93 (3d Cir. 2014). The Third Circuit affirmed the district court’s finding that the crime-fraud exception applied to attorney’s unmemorialized oral communications with client and its order compelling the attorney to testify before a grand jury. There was a reasonable basis for the district court to find that attorney’s advice to client that he should not make proposed payments to obtain business because they could potentially violate the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act and attorney’s provision of information about the types of conduct that violate the law were used by the client to fashion his conduct in furtherance of a crime or fraud.

In re United States, 321 F. App’x 953, 956-57 (Fed. Cir. 2009). Court found crime-fraud exception applicable to violation of court order where government engaged in prohibited ex parte communications.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 419 F.3d 329, 335-36 (5th Cir. 2005). Affirming district court ruling that privilege had been waived with regard to defendant’s comments to attorney regarding obstruction of justice. The lower court properly conducted an in camera examination of the defendant’s counsel and, based on that evidence and affidavits, the government had indeed made a prima facie showing of criminal activity.

United States v. Alexander, 287 F.3d 811, 816-17 (9th Cir. 2002). Client's threats against attorney and others were not subject to privilege.

Craig v. A.H. Robins Co., 790 F.2d 1, 3-4 (1st Cir. 1986). General counsel's advice to destroy documents after loss of court case was not privileged in later suit.

In re Antitrust Grand Jury, 805 F.2d 155, 165-66 (6th Cir. 1986). Communications made with intent to further violations of the Sherman Act held not privileged based on the crime-fraud exception.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 731 F.2d 1032, 1038-39 (2d Cir. 1984). Fraudulent conveyance was a sufficient basis for application of the crime-fraud exception.

Abbott Laboratories v. H&H Wholesale Services, Inc., No. 17 CV 3095 (CBA)(LB), 2018 WL 2459271, at *6 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 9, 2018). Crime-fraud exception applied where the record reflected that a deficient production "was calculated and purposeful."

Int'l Med. Grp., Inc. v. Walker, No. 1:08-cv-923-JMS-TAB, 2011 WL 1752101, at *3 (S.D. Ind. May 9, 2011). Clients waived the privilege when they used their attorneys to commit discovery fraud.

United States v. Boender, No. 09 CR 186-1, 2010 WL 849360, at *6 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 8, 2010). Client's communications with attorney regarding an invoice were not privileged because the client knew the invoice was fabricated and had used his real estate attorney as a conduit to place the invoice among documents that might be turned over to the government.

Catton v. Def. Tech. Sys., Inc., No. 05 Civ. 6954 (SAS), 2007 WL 3406928, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 15, 2007). Crime-fraud exception applied to communications between a company and its attorney for the purpose of obtaining opinion letters in connection with transfers of company securities where plaintiffs alleged that defendants knowingly made false representations to an attorney to induce him to issue opinion letters that stated certain securities could be transferred without indicating that they were "restricted."

Specialty Minerals, Inc. v. Pleuss-Stauffer AG, No. 98 Civ. 7775(VM)(MHD), 2004 WL 42280, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 7, 2004). Intentional failure to disclose prior art to the Patent Office can constitute fraud on the Patent Office and would therefore waive the privilege for attorney-client communications involving the patent application proceedings.

Irving Trust Co. v. Gomez, 100 F.R.D. 273, 276 (S.D.N.Y. 1983). Intentional or reckless tort of refusing to release funds without a basis for belief that the customer was not entitled to his money was sufficient basis for application of the crime-fraud exception.

In re St. Johnsbury Trucking Co., 184 B.R. 446, 455-56 (Bankr. D. Vt. 1995). Fraud on the court is sufficient basis for application of the crime-fraud exception.

Hutchinson v. Farm Family Cos. Ins. Co., 867 A.2d 1, 6-7 (Conn. 2005). Crime-fraud exception extends to claims involving bad faith. There is no justification for a privilege where communications are made for the purpose of evading legal or contractual obligations.

People v. Dang, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 763, 767 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001). Client's statement to attorney that he would kill witness if not successful in bribing the same was not protected by the privilege.

But see:

Newman v. State, 863 A.2d 321, 335-36 (Md. 2004). Where defendant told attorney of plans to commit murder, the communication was privileged and not within the scope of the crime-fraud exception. The defendant did not seek advice or assistance in furtherance of a crime, nor was such a statement unusual in contested custody proceedings. Simply confessing a desire to commit a crime in the future is not sufficient to waive the privilege.

In re Public Defender Serv., 831 A.2d 890, 910 (D.C. 2003). Crime-fraud exception does not apply where the communication did not further ongoing or future crimes. The court ruled that a lawyer could not be compelled to disclose his client's communications to him in which the client may have asked the attorney to use a false affidavit at trial. The court observed that it is an attorney's duty to try to convince a client not to commit a crime or fraud that they may be contemplating. When the attorney is successful, the communication has not furthered a crime or fraud and, as a consequence, is not discoverable.

Transcript of Record at 9-10, United States v. Stevens, No. 8:10-cr-00694-RWT (D. Md. May 5, 2011) (No. 190). “[A] lawyer should never fear prosecution because of advice that he or she has given to a client who consults him or her, and a client should never fear that its confidences will be divulged unless its purpose in consulting the lawyer was for the purpose of committing a crime or fraud.”

The crime-fraud exception does not apply to communications concerning crimes or frauds that occurred in the past. Zolin, 491 U.S. at 562. Such communications remain protected. In cases where the communications at issue were made for the purpose of covering up past misconduct or obstructing justice, however, the privilege may be waived because these activities constitute a continuing offense.

See:

United States v. Lentz, 524 F.3d 501, 524-25 (4th Cir. 2008). Court held the communication with attorney was in furtherance of a murder plot, triggering the crime-fraud exception.

In re Fed. Grand Jury Proceedings, 89-10, 938 F.2d 1578 (11th Cir. 1991). Court held that the crime-fraud exception applies only to current or future illegal acts. Thus, the privilege protected a memorandum sent after the fraud was completed but that memorialized communications that occurred during the fraud. Court concluded that post-crime repetition or discussion of earlier communications can be privileged even though the original conversation would not have been privileged because of the crime-fraud exception.

Craig v. A.H. Robins Co., Inc., 790 F.2d 1, 3 (1st Cir. 1986). Deliberate destruction of documents in an effort to cover up wrongdoing barred the invocation of the privilege as to all communications.

Pritchard-Keang Nam Corp. v. Jaworski, 751 F.2d 277, 281 (8th Cir. 1984). In Missouri, the crime-fraud exception does not apply unless the crime or fraud was contemplated by the client when counsel was employed.

The crime-fraud exception protects against abuse of the attorney-client relationship. In re Napster, Inc. Copyright Litig., 479 F.3d 1078, 1090 (9th Cir. 2007), abrogated on other grounds by Mohawk Indus., Inc. v. Carpenter, 130 S.Ct. 599 (2009). Thus, when an attorney dissuades or prevents their client from engaging in illegal conduct, the attorney-client relationship has not been abused; rather, the relationship has served the administration of justice by promoting legal conduct. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Investigation, 772 N.E.2d 9, 21-22 (Mass. 2002). Whatever the client's initial intentions, the attorney-client communication in such a case does not further the commission of a crime or fraud; instead it furthers obedience to the law. To withhold the privilege from such communications “would penalize a client for doing what the privilege is designed to encourage—consulting a lawyer for the purpose of achieving law compliance.” RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 82 cmt. c (2000); accord In re Sealed Case, 107 F.3d 46, 49 (D.C. Cir. 1997).

After a party has invoked the attorney-client privilege, the person seeking to abrogate the privilege under the crime-fraud exception has the burden to present a prima facie case that the advice was obtained in furtherance of an illegal or fraudulent act. See In re Chevron Corp., 633 F.3d 153, 166 (3d Cir. 2011) (party seeking waiver must “make a prima facie showing that (1) the client was committing or intending to commit a fraud or crime, and (2) the attorney-client communications were in furtherance of that alleged crime or fraud”) (citation omitted); see also In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 401 F.3d 247, 251 (4th Cir. 2005); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 144 F.3d 653, 659-60 (10th Cir. 1998); United States v. Jacobs, 117 F.3d 82, 87-88 (2d Cir. 1997), abrogated on other grounds by Loughrin v. United States, 134 S. Ct. 2384, 2387-88 (2014); In re Grand Jury, 845 F.2d 896, 897-98 (11th Cir. 1988); In re Sealed Case, 754 F.2d 395, 399 (D.C. Cir. 1985); In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 731 F.2d 1032, 1038-39 (2d Cir. 1984); United States v. Horvath, 731 F.2d 557, 562 (8th Cir. 1984); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 689 F.2d 1351, 1352 (11th Cir. 1982). It is not necessary to show that the crime or fraud was actually completed – only that the crime or fraud was the objective of the communication. In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 731 F.2d at 1039. A party may not merely allege that a fraud occurred and that disclosure would help her prove the fraud, but must identify a specific communication made in furtherance of the fraud. See In re BankAmerica Corp. Sec. Litig., 270 F.3d 639, 641-42 (8th Cir. 2001); see also Babych v. Psychiatric Solutions, Inc., No. 09 C 8000, 2010 WL 5128355, at *6 n.5 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 15, 2010) (holding that the crime-fraud exception does not apply when the party seeking waiver failed to allege how the communications might have been in furtherance of fraud).

Courts have reached different conclusions about the burden of proof required to make a prima facie case. See In re Feldberg, 862 F.2d 622, 625-26 (7th Cir. 1988) (noting differences). The Supreme Court left open the question of what showing of proof must be made to trigger the crime-fraud exception. United States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554, 563-64 n.7 (1989).

- The First Circuit has held “[s]hould a party seek to invoke the crime-fraud exception, she must provide ‘something to give color to the charge; there must be prima facie evidence that it has some foundation in fact.’ The First Circuit has expressly declined to adopt any of the more particularized formulations of this standard that the other circuits have developed.” In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 220 F.R.D. 130, 152 (D. Mass. 2004) (citations omitted).
- The Second and Sixth Circuits have held that the party seeking to abrogate the privilege must demonstrate probable cause to believe that a crime or fraud was committed. See In re Richard Roe, Inc., 68 F.3d 38, 40 (2d Cir. 1995) (reversing district court for applying “relevant evidence” standard rather than more stringent “probable cause” standard); In re Richard Roe, Inc., 168 F.3d 69, 71 (2d Cir. 1999) (again reversing the district court for failure to find probable cause); In re Antitrust Grand Jury, 805 F.2d 155, 165-66 (6th Cir. 1986); In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 731 F.2d 1032, 1039 (2d Cir. 1984) (standard requires probable cause to believe that a crime or fraud has been committed and that the communications were in furtherance thereof, or, in other words, that a prudent person has a reasonable basis to suspect the actual or attempted perpetration of a crime or fraud and that the communications were in furtherance thereof); see also In re Omnicom Grp., Inc. Sec. Litig., 233 F.R.D. 400, 408, 410 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (stating that a heightened probable cause standard should be applied given the complex technical accounting issues and the importance of preserving the attorney-client privilege); SEC v. Herman, No. 00 Civ. 5575 (PHK)(MHD), 2004 WL 964104, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. May 5, 2004) (applying probable cause test); In re Pub. Defender Serv., 831 A.2d 890, 904 (D.C. 2003) (adopting probable cause as the test to establish crime-fraud exception).

- The Third and Eleventh Circuits’ formulations are similar: “the party seeking discovery must present evidence which, if believed by the fact-finder, would be sufficient to support a finding that the elements of the crime-fraud exception were met.” Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 95-96 (3d Cir. 1992); see also In re Grand Jury, 705 F.3d 133, 153-54 (3d Cir. 2012) (clarifying that Third Circuit precedent is “properly captured by the reasonable basis standard” by which a party opposing the privilege must demonstrate a reasonable basis to suspect the perpetration of a crime); In re Grand Jury Investigation, 445 F.3d 266, 278-79 (3d Cir. 2006) (crime-fraud exception applied to communications about client’s legal obligations to comply with grand jury subpoena duces tecum where the government made a prima facie showing that client failed to satisfy her obligation to preserve electronic documents); In re Grand Jury Investigation, 842 F.2d 1223, 1226 (11th Cir. 1987) (announcing a test “satisfied by a showing of evidence that, if believed by a trier of fact, would establish the elements of some violation that was ongoing or about to be committed”).
- The Fourth Circuit requires the party seeking discovery to present evidence that (1) the client was engaged in or planning a criminal or fraudulent scheme when it sought the advice of counsel, and (2) the attorney’s assistance was obtained in furtherance of the crime or fraud or was closely related to it. The party asserting privilege may respond with evidence to rebut the opposing party’s claims. The nature of the alleged crime or fraud, as well as facts supporting the application of the crime-fraud exception, may be presented ex parte and in confidence in grand jury proceedings, which are closed proceedings, and, consequently, the party asserting privilege should make a “best guess” as to the crime and evidence it must counter. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 642 F. App’x 223, 226-27 (4th Cir. 2016) (crime fraud exception applied where lawyer submitted a written submission to a regulator defending the clients’ trades based on clients’ misrepresentations to the lawyer).
- The Fifth Circuit requires evidence that, if un rebutted, would result in a finding of fraud. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 419 F.3d 329, 336 (5th Cir. 2005); In re Int’l Sys. & Controls Corp. Sec. Litig., 693 F.2d 1235, 1242 (5th Cir. 1982); In re Campbell, 248 B.R. 435, 440 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000) (applying Fifth Circuit test).

- The Seventh Circuit requires evidence sufficient to require an explanation by the party asserting the privilege. In re Feldberg, 862 F.2d 622, 625-26 (7th Cir. 1988).
- The Eighth Circuit has said that it requires a threshold showing “that the legal advice was obtained in furtherance of the fraudulent activity and was closely related to it.” In re BankAmerica Corp. Sec. Litig., 270 F.3d 639, 642 (8th Cir. 2001) (internal citation omitted). A party may not merely allege that a fraud occurred and that disclosure would help her prove the fraud; there must be “a specific showing that a particular document or communication was made in furtherance of the client’s alleged crime or fraud.” Id. (citation omitted).
- The Ninth Circuit standard in criminal cases is “reasonable cause to believe that the attorney’s services were utilized in furtherance of the ongoing unlawful scheme.” See United States v. Martin, 278 F.3d 988, 1001 (9th Cir. 2002). However, in civil cases the Ninth Circuit employs a preponderance of the evidence standard. In re Napster, Inc. Copyright Litig., 479 F.3d 1078, 1094-95 (9th Cir. 2007), abrogated on other grounds by Mohawk Indus., Inc. v. Carpenter, 130 S. Ct. 599 (2009). The Napster court also said that the party seeking to preserve the privilege has the right to introduce countervailing evidence. Id. at 1093.
- The Tenth Circuit has said that a prima facie case is established by “substantial and competent evidence” that the defendant used its attorney’s legal services in furtherance of a crime. In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 144 F.3d 653, 660-61 (10th Cir. 1998).
- The District of Columbia Circuit requires “evidence that if believed by [the] trier of fact would establish the elements of an ongoing or imminent crime or fraud.” In re Sealed Case, 754 F.2d 395, 399 (D.C. Cir. 1985); accord In re Sealed Case, 107 F.3d 46, 50 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (repeating the test).

Some courts hold that a finding of fraud requires “higher threshold showings of both intent and materiality than does a finding of inequitable conduct.” In re Spalding Sports Worldwide, Inc., 203 F.3d 800, 807 (Fed. Cir. 2000); see also Vardon Golf Co. v. Karsten Mfg. Corp., 213 F.R.D. 528, 535 (N.D. Ill. 2003) (in order to establish a prima facie case that would destroy the protection of attorney-client privilege, the party making the claim is required to establish the elements of common law fraud). Dean Wigmore, however, considered the distinction between fraud and other intentional torts an overly “crude boundary.” 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2298, at 577 (McNaughton rev. ed. 1961). Following this more expansive approach, many courts have defined the exception to encompass communications in furtherance of a “tort,” Horizon of Hope Ministry v. Clark Cnty., Ohio, 115 F.R.D. 1, 5 (S.D. Ohio 1986); a “crime or tort,” People v. Belge, 59 A.D.2d 307, 309 (N.Y. App. Div. 1977); a “crime, fraud, or other type of misconduct fundamentally inconsistent with the basic premises of the adversary system,” Coleman v. ABC, 106 F.R.D. 201, 208 (D.D.C. 1985) (quoting In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 812 (D.C. Cir. 1982)); or “intentional torts moored in fraud.” Sackman v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 173 F.R.D. 358, 364 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) (quoting Cooksey v. Hilton Int'l Co., 863 F. Supp. 150, 151 (S.D.N.Y. 1994)). See also In re Richard Roe, Inc., 168 F.3d 69, 71 (2d Cir. 1999) (a knowing pursuit of baseless litigation is sufficient to show the fraud element of the crime-fraud exception test when the suit had “little or no legal or factual basis”); Lewis v. Delta Airlines, Inc., No. 2:14-cv-01683-RFB, 2015 WL 9460124 (D. Nev. Dec. 23, 2015) (extending crime-fraud exception to intentional wrongful conduct under the Americans with Disabilities Act); Madanes v. Madanes, 199 F.R.D. 135, 149 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (privilege does not protect communications in furtherance of an intentional tort); Rattner v. Netburn, No. 88 Civ. 2080, 1989 WL 223059, at *47 (S.D.N.Y. June 20, 1989) (same); In re Heuwetter, 584 F. Supp. 119, 127 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (torts); Irving Trust Co. v. Gomez, 100 F.R.D. 273, 276 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) (“intentional or reckless tortious behavior”); Diamond v. Stratton, 95 F.R.D. 503, 505 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) (intentional tort).

In establishing a prima facie case, courts generally will examine evidence of the client’s knowledge and intent to further the illegal act at the time the communication was made. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 82 cmt. c (2000). The client’s intent is determinative; the ignorance or knowledge of the attorney does not matter.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena v. United States, 870 F.3d 312, 319-20 (4th Cir. 2017). Applying crime-fraud exception despite government not asserting that the attorney was aware of the crime or fraud.

United States v. Gorski, 807 F.3d 451, 461-62 (1st Cir. 2015). Crime-fraud exception abrogated claims of attorney-client privilege as to both individual defendant and company he controlled, where individual defendant hired personal lawyer and separate law firm to represent company and communicated with both to conceal false certifications that individual defendant used to obtain government contracts for company, even though personal lawyer was not involved in company transactions designed to conceal false certifications.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 87 F.3d 377, 381-82 (9th Cir. 1996). Privilege is waived where communications were in furtherance of criminal activity, despite the fact that attorney was unaware of the criminal activity and may actually have hindered the attempted criminal activity.

In re Grand Jury Investigation, 842 F.2d 1223, 1228 (11th Cir. 1987). Exception applies regardless of whether the attorney is aware of the client’s improper purpose.

The crime-fraud exception may also be applied to deny privilege protection to what would otherwise have been protected documents because of the misconduct of a party's private investigators. See, e.g., Meyer v. Kalanick, No. 15-Civ.-9796, 2016 WL 3189961, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. June 7, 2016) (crime-fraud exception applied and required defendant to produce materials from private investigator, who had lied to third parties during investigation to obtain information about plaintiff and plaintiff's counsel).

In contrast, in cases where the attorney is involved in the crime or fraud and the client is ignorant, the client can assert the attorney-client privilege. In re Impounded Case (Law Firm), 879 F.2d 1211, 1214 (3d Cir. 1989).

Court found that communications surrounding this letter were privileged since the client was consulting lawyer about the legality of his conduct and because it was the client, not the attorney, who had drafted the deceptive letter.

But see:

United States v. Bergrin, No. 09-369, 2011 WL 4368970, at *6 (D. N.J. Sept. 19, 2011). "While the attorney-client privilege normally can only be waived by the client, the crime-fraud exception applies in a case against the attorney or his law firm where the attorney is acting unilaterally in committing crimes to further his representation of his client."

To establish the prima facie case, a link must also be drawn between the privileged communication and the crime or fraud. Generally, there must be at least some temporal proximity between the communication and the crime. In re Grand Jury Investigation, 445 F.3d 266, 279-80 (3d Cir. 2006) (communication with counsel concerning what documents were responsive to grand jury subpoena and subsequent acquiescence in the deletion or destruction of those documents constituted a misuse of counsel's advice and supported application of crime-fraud exception); In re Sealed Case, 107 F.3d 46, 50 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (temporal proximity between counsel's advice and vice-president's violation of law not enough); Pritchard-Keang Nam Corp. v. Jaworski, 751 F.2d 277, 282 (8th Cir. 1984) (communications occurring before allegedly fraudulent activity was even contemplated could not have been made in furtherance of the sale); In re Grand Jury Proceedings in Matter of Fine, 641 F.2d 199, 204 (5th Cir. 1981) (fact that suspicious transaction took place within 6 months of corporation's formation insufficient to establish that corporation was formed to further a criminal enterprise); Harris v. Sw. Power Pool, Inc., No. 4:11CV00679, 2012 WL 645908, at *3 (E.D. Ark. Feb. 28, 2012) (noting that temporal proximity between the advice from counsel and the crime or fraud is not enough to establish the necessary nexus); Parkway Gallery Furniture, Inc. v. Kittinger/Pennsylvania House Grp., Inc., 116 F.R.D. 46, 53 (M.D.N.C. 1987) (passage of 3 or 4 years between consultation with counsel and illegality showed that "[p]laintiffs fail to show a nexus in time. The timing of the alleged fraud is critical. The moving party must show the client was engaged in or planning misconduct at the time he seeks the advice of counsel.").

Moreover, the communication must not merely relate to the crime or fraud; it must be in furtherance of it. See In re BankAmerica Corp. Sec. Litig., 270 F.3d 639, 643-44 (8th Cir. 2001) (granting mandamus where district court did not link specific communications at issue to alleged fraud); Cox v. Adm'r U.S. Steel & Carnegie, 17 F.3d 1386, 1416 (11th Cir. 1994), modified on reh'g, 30 F.3d 1347 (11th Cir. 1994); United States v. White, 887 F.2d 267, 271 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (communication must be in furtherance of the crime or fraud, not just related to the crime or fraud); In re Antitrust Grand Jury, 805 F.2d 155, 168 (6th Cir. 1986) ("[M]erely because some communications may be related to a crime is not enough to subject that communication to disclosure; the communication must have been made with an intent to further the crime") (citations omitted); Pritchard-Keang Nam Corp. v. Jaworski, 751 F.2d 277, 281-82 (8th Cir. 1984) (report of the results of an investigation into questionable payments was not itself in furtherance of crime or fraud, and therefore was not subject to disclosure under the crime-fraud exception); In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 815 n.91 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (discussing the different standards required by the Circuit to establish the closeness of this link).

In addition, the court may not rely solely on the privileged document itself to prove the crime-fraud exception. Instead, in United States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554 (1989), the Supreme Court held that a party must make a preliminary showing before the court can conduct an in camera review. Because in camera review is a smaller intrusion on the attorney-client privilege than outright disclosure, a lesser evidentiary showing is needed to trigger it. Id. at 572. To make this showing, the movant must establish preliminary justification for a reasonable, good-faith belief that the communication is subject to the crime-fraud exception.

Id. at 571-72; see also In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 745 F.3d 681, 689 (3d Cir. 2014) (Zolin standard applies in determining whether to conduct an in camera examination of a witness). If this showing is made, the trial court has the discretion to conduct an in camera examination of the entire communication. However, the court is not required to conduct an in camera inspection. Id.

The reasoning in Zolin is similar to the Supreme Court's treatment of the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule in Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171 (1987). In Bourjaily, the Court held that, in making a preliminary factual determination under Federal Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2)(E) about the existence of a conspiracy and the non-offering party's involvement in the conspiracy, a court may examine the hearsay statement sought to be admitted. 483 U.S. at 181. In Zolin, likewise, a court may review the allegedly privileged communications in camera to determine whether the crime-fraud exception applies. 491 U.S. at 572. Both Zolin and Bourjaily thus rejected the alternative rule that a court, in determining the preliminary facts relevant to the admission of the evidence, must only look to independent evidence other than the statements sought to be admitted. Distinct from the situation in Bourjaily, the Zolin court, however, required that a party seeking the in camera review must make a threshold showing that such review may reveal evidence to establish the claim that a crime-fraud exception applies. Id. at 571-72. In order to meet this preliminary showing requirement, a party opposing the privilege may use any non-privileged evidence in support of its request for in camera review, even if its evidence is not "independent" of the contested communications. Id. at 573-74 (allowing the use of partial transcripts reflecting the content of the contested communications to determine whether in camera review of the contested communications is appropriate). The party opposing the assertion of the attorney-client privilege must overcome this initial threshold showing, apparently without direct reliance on the contested evidence (although the party might show the contents of such communications by using other means or other medium of expression, like transcripts) before the contested evidence is directly examined in camera by the court.

Court refuses to review privileged document that had been stolen from defendant by qui tam plaintiff who was former employee of defendant.*

The crime-fraud exception can thus be proven during in camera inspection only after the moving party sets forth a factual basis sufficient for a reasonable person to conclude that such a review would establish the non-privileged nature of the documents. Zolin, 491 U.S. at 573-74; see also In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 419 F.3d 329, 335-36 (5th Cir. 2005) (finding that district court properly conducted in camera examination where there was a good faith belief that defendant had discussed criminal conduct with counsel). In Haines v. Liggett Group, Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 96 (3d Cir. 1992), the court explored the relationship between (1) the burden of establishing a prima facie case and (2) the showing required to justify an in camera review under Zolin. In the second showing, the court determines whether adequate evidence has been presented such that in camera review will be fruitful. In making this determination, the court may consider only the presentation of the party challenging the privilege and seeking the in camera review. See In re Grand Jury Investigation, 974 F.2d 1068, 1073, 1075 (9th Cir. 1992). If in camera review is deemed potentially useful under this showing, the court then examines the disputed material and weighs the evidence to determine if the prima facie burden has been met. When evaluating the prima facie case, the court must follow a more formal procedure, and the party invoking the protection of the privilege must be given opportunity to be heard under due process. Haines, 975 F.2d at 97; see also:

After district court found that government had established prima facie case that lawyers' services were obtained in furtherance of ongoing crime and ordered production of all "matters identified in the subpoenas," the Ninth Circuit vacated and remanded, directing the district court to conduct an in camera review of documents. The court noted that in camera review is not required at the first step of the government's prima facie case, at which point the government may rely on non-privileged information, but in camera review is necessary to determine which documents fall within the scope of the exception.

United States v. Boender, 649 F.3d 650, 655-659 (7th Cir. 2011). Court rejected argument that appellant's conviction for obstruction of justice was based on inadmissible attorney-client privileged communications. Seventh Circuit held that the district court was justified in holding an adversarial in camera hearing to determine the existence of the crime-fraud exception. Court held that the government's proffer of evidence gave more than enough 'color to the charge' that [appellant's] communications [with his attorney] regarding the existence and authenticity of the invoice were in furtherance of his endeavor to obstruct justice by conveying fake information to the government and influencing the ongoing grand-jury investigation."

United States v. Trenk, 385 F. App'x 254, 257 (3d Cir. 2010). Court held that although privileged documents were properly before the district court for in camera inspection, the district court should not have applied the crime-fraud exception without first notifying the appellant and providing him with an opportunity for argument. Quoting earlier Third Circuit precedent, the court stated: "Where a fact finder undertakes to weigh evidence in a proceeding seeking an exception to the privilege, the party invoking the privilege has the absolute right to be heard by testimony and argument."

After the court determines that the crime-fraud exception applies, the privilege will not protect any communications made in furtherance of the fraud. However, the exception does not remove protection for other non-related communications. See In re Special Sept. 1978 Grand Jury (II), 640 F.2d 49, 61 n.16 (7th Cir. 1980); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 82 cmt. g (2000).

2. Exception For Suits Against Former Attorney

A client may also waive the privilege when he sues his former attorney. Laughner v. United States, 373 F.2d 326, 327 n.1 (5th Cir. 1967); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 83 (2000); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2327 (Supp. 2019); JOHN W. STRONG, MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 91.1 (7th ed. 2016). Thus, the privilege will not protect communications relevant to a dispute over compensation or whether a lawyer acted wrongfully or negligently. 3 JACK W. WEINSTEIN ET AL., WEINSTEIN'S FEDERAL EVIDENCE § 503.33 (Lexis 2014); 24 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & KENNETH W. GRAHAM, JR., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 5503 (1st ed. West 2019).

Some courts have held that an attorney may not use privileged information offensively against a client. See, e.g., In re Rindlisbacher, 225 B.R. 180, 183-84 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1998) (action filed by attorney against former client that was based on privileged information the attorney obtained while representing the former client was barred by both the attorney's ethical obligations and his obligation pursuant to the attorney-client privilege to preserve client confidences). Other courts have provided that actions by an attorney may be brought provided that document containing privileged information are sealed or other measures are taken to preserve confidentiality. See Willy v. Admin. Review Bd., 423 F.3d 483, 498-99 (5th Cir. 2005) (noting that concerns about the disclosure of suits by in-house counsel "alone would not warrant dismissing a plaintiff's case, especially where there are other means to prevent unwarranted disclosure of confidential information" and allowing in-house attorney to maintain his suit against oil company); Siedle v. Putnam Invs., Inc., 147 F.3d 7, 11-12 (1st Cir. 1998) (complaint filed by attorney against former client that included privileged information must be sealed by the court to protect the confidentiality of the privileged communications); Chubb & Son v. Superior Court of S.F., A140860, 2014 WL 3919614, at *12 (Cal. Ct. App. Aug. 12, 2014) (in an employment discrimination suit by attorney against former law firm employer and client, an insurer, the parties were not prohibited from disclosing privileged materials of third parties (the insurer's clients) to their respective counsel) (emphasis in original); Heckman v. Zurich Holding Co. of Am., 242 F.R.D. 606, 611-13 (D. Kan. 2007) (in-house attorney could bring retaliatory discharge action against former employer provided legal duty of confidentiality was observed).

This exception acts as a selective waiver for the attorney only. The communications remain privileged as to the rest of the world. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 83 cmt. e (2000).

3. Fiduciary Exception

An exception to the attorney-client privilege has been developed for actions between an organization and the parties to whom it owes fiduciary duties.³ This exception originally started in the area of shareholder derivative actions in which courts were reluctant to permit corporations to invoke the attorney-client privilege to shield information from shareholders. See Garner v. Wolfenbarger, 430 F.2d 1093, 1102-04 (5th Cir. 1970). However, the Garner doctrine has expanded to non-derivative cases and has become an important and sometimes tricky exception to the attorney-client privilege.

a. The Garner Doctrine

In Garner v. Wolfenbarger, 430 F.2d 1093, 1103-04 (5th Cir. 1970), the Fifth Circuit held in a shareholder derivative suit:

[W]here the corporation is in suit against its stockholders on charges of acting inimically to stockholder interests, protection of those interests as well as those of the corporation and of the public require that the availability of the privilege be subject to the right of the stockholders to show cause why it should not be invoked in the particular instance.

The Garner court thus concluded that the protection of the privilege could be removed upon a showing of good cause. In reaching its decision, the court analogized the exception to the crime-fraud and joint-defense exceptions to the attorney-client privilege. Id. at 1102-03. (For a discussion of the joint-defense privilege, see § II.A, below.) The Garner court rationalized that a fiduciary relationship between the corporation and its shareholders creates a commonality of interest which precludes the corporation from asserting the attorney-client privilege against its shareholders. Id. at 1103.

The Garner court set forth a number of factors relevant to the presence or absence of a shareholder's "good cause" to invoke the exception. Id. at 1104. The Restatement sets out similar factors (as detailed below) which echo Garner's factors with respect to organizations generally. A court should thus consider:

- (1) The number of shareholders (or beneficiaries) actively requesting the privileged communication and their share in the organization. See Fausek v. White, 965 F.2d 126, 133 (6th Cir. 1992) (40% of shareholders sufficient); Ward v. Succession of Freeman, 854 F.2d 780, 786 (5th Cir. 1988) (less than 4% of shareholders not sufficient).
- (2) The bona fides of the shareholders. In non-derivative contexts, this has also been framed as the substantiality of the beneficiaries' claim and whether there is an ulterior motive to place pressure on the organization.

- (3) The nature of the shareholder’s claim and whether it is obviously colorable. In non-derivative contexts, this element has also been set forth as determining the good faith of the beneficiaries.
- (4) The apparent relevance of the requested communications to the shareholders’ or beneficiaries’ claim, and the extent to which the information is available from other non-privileged sources. See Fausek, 965 F.2d at 133 (requiring uniqueness, not just convenience, and concluding that the desired material was not readily available elsewhere, if at all); In re LTV Sec. Litig., 89 F.R.D. 595, 608 (N.D. Tex. 1981) (availability is an important factor, but true unavailability is needed – ease and cheapness are not as important); Buttonwood Tree Value Partners, L.P. v. R.L. Polk & Co., No. 9250-VCG, 2018 WL 346036, at *5 (Del. Ch. Jan. 10, 2018) (true unavailability is needed – stockholder cannot simply assert that the information is unavailable when stockholder has made no effort to obtain the information from non-privileged sources); Ryan v. Gifford, Civil Action No. 2213-CC, 2007 WL 4259557, at *3 (Del. Ch. Nov. 30, 2007) (“Of particular importance is the unavailability of this information from other sources when information regarding the investigation and report of the Special Committee is of paramount importance to the ability of plaintiffs to assess and, ultimately prove, that certain fiduciaries of the Company breached their duties. Consequently, . . . these communications must be produced.”).
- (5) The extent to which the shareholders’ or beneficiaries’ claim accuses the corporation of wrongful action or the managers of the organization of clearly criminal or non-criminal illegal acts.
- (6) Whether the communication relates to past acts or to future events.
- (7) Whether the communication concerns advice regarding litigation brought by the shareholders or beneficiaries. See Zitin v. Turley, No. Civ. 89-2061-PHX-CAM, 1991 WL 283814, at *8 n.1 (D. Ariz. June 20, 1991) (finding that the Garner exception did not apply because the communications that shareholders sought were not related to the decisions that gave rise to the shareholders’ claims).
- (8) The specificity of the shareholders’ or beneficiaries’ request (i.e., the extent to which the communication is identified versus the extent to which the shareholders or beneficiaries are blindly fishing).
- (9) The extent to which the requested communications might contain trade secrets or other confidential or valuable information of the corporation or organization.

- (10) The extent that protective orders entered by the court will protect disclosure.
- (11) Whether a disinterested group of officers or directors made the decision not to waive the privilege.

See Garner, 430 F.2d at 1104; RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 85 cmt. c (2000). These factors are non-exclusive and of equal weight. See id. But see RMED Int'l, Inc. v. Sloan's Supermarkets, Inc., No. 94 Civ. 5587PKLRLE, 2003 WL 41996, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 6, 2003) (“The apparent necessity of the information and its availability from other sources is considered the most important factor and is stressed by courts undertaking the Garner analysis”) (applying Garner to a class action securities fraud suit); Deutsch v. Cogan, 580 A.2d 100, 105 (Del. Ch. 2005) (identifying colorability of claims, identification of communications, necessity of shareholders having access to such information, and the availability of such information from other sources as particularly significant). Through this analysis, the court balances the injury that may result to the corporation from disclosure against (1) the benefit to be gained from the proper disposition of the litigation and (2) the rights of the shareholders. Garner, 430 F.2d at 1101.

In general, the burden is on the party seeking the otherwise privileged materials to show “good cause” to invoke the fiduciary exception to the privilege. See Garner, 430 F.2d at 1103-04 (“[P]rotection of [stockholder] interests as well as those of the corporation and of the public require that the availability of the privilege be subject to the right of the stockholders to show cause why it should not be invoked in the particular instance.”); see also Martin v. Valley Nat'l Bank of Ariz., 140 F.R.D. 291, 323 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (discussing initial burden in ERISA beneficiary context with respect to the trustee of an employee stock ownership plan); but see Wash.-Balt. Newspaper Guild, Local 35 v. Wash. Star Co., 543 F. Supp. 906, 909 n.5 (D.D.C. 1982) (distinguishing beneficiary interests in a corporate setting from those in an ERISA setting).

Most courts have followed Garner both in the derivative context and, as set forth in more detail in § I.I.3.b, below, in fiduciary contexts as well. See Bland v. Fiatallis N. Am., Inc., 401 F.3d 779, 787 (7th Cir. 2005) (recognizing fiduciary exception in ERISA context); Fausek, 965 F.2d at 133 (recognizing that former minority shareholders had shown good cause to abrogate corporate privilege claimed by majority shareholder); Fortson v. Winstead, McGuire, Sechrest & Minick, 961 F.2d 469, 475 n.5 (4th Cir. 1992) (even though limited partners did not establish good cause to invoke exception, the court recognized that the fiduciary exception could apply in a general partner-limited partner relationship); Tatum v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 247 F.R.D. 488, 495 (M.D.N.C. 2008) (recognizing the existence of a fiduciary exception where an ERISA plan administrator asserts attorney-client privilege to matters on which a fiduciary duty is owed to the beneficiaries); In re Gen. Instrument Corp. Sec. Litig., 190 F.R.D. 527, 529-30 (N.D. Ill. 2000) (following Garner and applying the fiduciary exception to shareholder derivative suit); Quintel Corp., N.V. v. Citibank, N.A., 567 F. Supp. 1357, 1363-64 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) (ordering disclosure between client and the bank that represented client in a real estate transaction); Wash.-Balt. Newspaper Guild, 543 F. Supp. at 909-10 (ordering disclosure of communications between attorney and trustee pursuant to Garner); In re LTV Sec. Litig., 89 F.R.D. at 608; Neusteter v. Dist. Court, 675 P.2d 1, 6 (Colo.

1984); Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Indiana Elec. Workers Pension Trust Fund IBEW, No. 614, 2013, 2014 WL 3638848, at *11-13 (Del. July 23, 2014) (adopting the Garner fiduciary exception for both derivative actions and proceedings pursuant to 8 Del. C. § 220 involving shareholder requests to inspect a company's books and records); In re Lululemon Athletica, Inc., C.A. No. 9039-VCP, 2015 WL 1957196, at *9 (Del. Ch. Apr. 30, 2015) (applying the Garner fiduciary exception and ordering disclosure of a company's books and records, including an email chain exchanged by and among executive officers and outside counsel of the company); Beard v. Ames, 96 A.D.2d 119, 120-21 (N.Y. App. Div. 1983).

However, some federal and state courts have refused to follow Garner. See Herrmann v. Rain Link, Inc., No. 11-1123-RDR, 2012 WL 1207232, at *8 (D. Kan. Apr. 11, 2012) (calling into doubt whether Kansas courts would apply fiduciary exception because attorney-client privilege is codified under Kansas state law); Murphy v. Gorman, 271 F.R.D. 296, 319-20 (D.N.M. 2010) (finding that New Mexico courts would not find a fiduciary exception and that such exception would not apply to a case where the beneficiary of a trust sought to subpoena the trustee's communications with counsel); Milroy v. Hansen, 875 F. Supp. 646, 651-52 (D. Neb. 1995) (denying request of a director and minority shareholder to obtain privileged documents, and stating that the Garner doctrine's "continued vitality is suspect"); Shirvani v. Longs Peak Emergency Physicians, P.C., 72 P.3d 454, 463 (Colo. App. 2003) (declining to extend Garner where director/minority stockholder of a corporation had no right to documents otherwise protected under the attorney-client privilege); Huie v. DeShazo, 922 S.W.2d 920, 924-25 (Tex. 1996) (rejecting the fiduciary exception under Texas law and allowing the attorney-client privilege to shield from trust beneficiaries communications between trustee and attorney regarding trust administration).

b. Extension of Garner Beyond Derivative Suits

The Garner doctrine originally arose in the context of the shareholder derivative suit. In a derivative suit, the shareholder purports to represent the corporation itself, and in such cases, there is a clear fiduciary duty owed by the directors and officers to the corporation. Many courts have expanded the application of Garner to areas beyond those in which officers owe fiduciary duties to a company's shareholders.

See:

In re Witness Before Special Grand Jury 2000-2, 288 F.3d 289, 293-94 (7th Cir. 2002). Rejecting claim by then-governor of Illinois George Ryan that his conversations with "in-house" government counsel were privileged and observing that "[j]ust as a corporate attorney has no right or obligation to keep otherwise confidential information from shareholders[,] Garner v. Wolfenbarger, 430 F.2d 1093, 1101 (5th Cir.1970), so a government attorney should have no privilege to shield relevant information from the public citizens to whom she owes ultimate allegiance, as represented by the grand jury."

Fausek v. White, 965 F.2d 126, 130-33 (6th Cir. 1992). Minority shareholders brought direct action against the former majority shareholder for misrepresentations in valuing their stock. Shareholders sought to depose the attorney who advised the majority shareholder during the stock acquisition. Court found that the Garner rationale applied even though the case was a direct action. It reasoned that Garner was not limited to derivative actions, but that the type of action was just a factor to consider in determining “good cause.” Minority shareholders alleged that majority shareholder had become the alter ego of the corporation and therefore owed a fiduciary duty to plaintiffs which he could not circumvent by resorting to a claim of privilege. Court agreed that the majority shareholder owed a fiduciary duty to the minority shareholders and found that Garner applies whenever the corporation stands in a fiduciary relationship to those seeking to abrogate the privilege. As a result, even though the corporation was not a named party to the case, the existence of the duty to the shareholders permitted an exception to the attorney-client privilege.

Ward v. Succession of Freeman, 854 F.2d 780, 786 (5th Cir. 1988). Court refused to limit Garner to derivative actions but noted that it should be more difficult to show good cause in a non-derivative shareholder action, because where shareholders seek to recover damages for themselves (rather than sharing with all of the shareholders or corporation), their motivations are more suspect and “more subject to careful scrutiny.”

Lawrence E. Jaffe Pension Plan v. Household Int’l, Inc., 244 F.R.D. 412, 421-23 (N.D. Ill. 2006). Fiduciary exception applied to communications with accounting firm in securities fraud class action by shareholders against lender. Although the court noted that it “view[ed] the non-derivative nature of the claim as a strong factor to consider in determining whether to prevent invocation of the attorney-client privilege,” it found that plaintiffs established the requisite good cause.

RMED Int’l, Inc. v. Sloan’s Supermarkets, Inc., No. 94 Civ. 5587PKLRLE, 2003 WL 41996, at *4 n.13 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 6, 2003). Applying Garner in securities fraud class action after noting that the non-derivative nature of the case was relevant to the determination of good cause, and holding that disclosure of attorney advice regarding a Federal Trade Commission investigation into corporation’s acquisition practices was required under the fiduciary exception.

In re ML-Lee Acquisition Fund II, L.P. & ML-Lee Acquisition Fund (Ret. Accounts) II, L.P. Sec. Litig., 848 F. Supp. 527, 564 (D. Del. 1994). Fact that a suit was not a derivative action was only one factor to consider under the Garner doctrine, and that factor alone did not preclude disclosure of privileged communications between general partners and limited partnership counsel to mutual fund limited partners.

Nellis v. Air Line Pilots Ass’n, 144 F.R.D. 68, 70-71 (E.D. Va. 1992), criticized on other grounds in Jones v. Union Carbide Chems. & Plastics Co., 67 F.3d 295 (4th Cir. 1995). Court applied the fiduciary exception in a suit by union members against their national union on the basis that unions owe a fiduciary duty to their members. The court found that communications between union officials and union attorneys came within the exception.

Ferguson v. Lurie, 139 F.R.D. 362, 366 (N.D. Ill. 1991). Court permitted limited partners suing for securities fraud to invoke the Garner doctrine to obtain communications between the real estate limited partnership and its counsel.

Aguinaga v. John Morrell & Co., 112 F.R.D. 671, 676-82 (D. Kan. 1986). Garner doctrine applied to grant former union members access to attorney-client communications and work product of the union.

Donovan v. Fitzsimmons, 90 F.R.D. 583, 584-87 (N.D. Ill. 1981). Secretary of Labor, bringing suit on behalf of beneficiaries of a pension fund, was granted access to privileged materials based on Garner.

Broad v. Rockwell Int’l Corp., Civil Action No. CA-3-74-437-D, 1977 WL 928, at *1-2 (N.D. Tex. Feb. 18, 1977). Garner rationale applied where corporation was sued by debenture holders.

Metro. Bank & Trust Co. v. Dovenmuehle Mortg., Inc., No. CIV. A. 18023-NC, 2001 WL 1671445, at *2-4 (Del. Ch. Dec. 20, 2001). Following Garner, but holding that limited partner failed to show good cause for access to otherwise privileged communications of general partner.

Because courts have expanded the Garner doctrine to include other cases where a fiduciary duty is owed to constituents or beneficiaries, courts usually require the shareholder in non-derivative actions to have been a shareholder when the alleged misfeasance or misrepresentations occurred. They reason that purchasers who acquired their interest after the wrongful actions took place were not owed any duty at the time, and therefore cannot show good cause. See Moskowitz v. Lopp, 128 F.R.D. 624, 637 (E.D. Pa. 1989) (denying plaintiff's wholesale disclosure request because plaintiff was not a shareholder at the time the communication took place); In re Atl. Fin. Mgmt. Sec. Litig., 121 F.R.D. 141, 146 (D. Mass. 1988) (Garner exception did not apply because plaintiffs had not yet purchased stock when the communications occurred and therefore could not establish that a fiduciary relationship existed); Quintel Corp., N.V., 567 F. Supp. at 1363-64 (privilege attached only to communications made prior and subsequent to the period of the fiduciary relationship). Other courts will allow subsequent purchasers to invoke the Garner exception. In re Bairnco Corp. Sec. Litig., 148 F.R.D. 91, 97-99 (S.D.N.Y. 1993); Cohen v. Uniroyal, Inc., 80 F.R.D. 480, 484 (E.D. Pa. 1978) (applying Garner rationale in shareholder class action where plaintiffs were not shareholders at the time of the allegedly fraudulent conduct). See also Lawrence E. Jaffe Pension Plan, 244 F.R.D. at 423 (securities fraud class action brought to recover financially for injuries sustained by the investing public as a result of corporation's alleged fraud was subject to Garner exception because the class represented a "substantial majority of shareholders who owned stock at the time of the [attorney-client] communications in question"); Salberg v. Genworth Fin., Inc., No. 2017-0018-JRS, 2017 WL 3499807, at *7 (Del. Ch. July 27, 2017) (applying Garner exception in a Section 220 books and records action and denying shareholders' complaint to compel production of privileged documents that concerned a parallel derivative proceeding brought by the same shareholders); In re Lululemon Athletica, Inc. No. 9039-VCP, 2015 WL 1957196, at *10-14 (Del. Ch. Apr. 30, 2015) (applying Garner exception in Section 220 books and records action and requiring production of privileged documents); cf. In re Omnicom Grp., Inc. Sec. Litig., 233 F.R.D. 400, 412 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (exception did not apply where "[t]he transactions that are at the heart of the complaint and that formed the trigger for the targeted attorney-client communications were undertaken in the absence of a fiduciary relationship to a substantial portion of the class members.").

While many courts have extended Garner beyond derivative actions, some courts have refused to do so. The Ninth Circuit has limited Garner to derivative actions and refused to create an exception for individual shareholder actions. Weil v. Inv./Indicators, Research & Mgmt., Inc., 647 F.2d 18, 23 (9th Cir. 1981). In Weil, the court distinguished Weil's individual action, which benefited only the named plaintiff and her class, from the derivative suit in Garner, which presumably benefited the corporation, and therefore refused to apply the Garner exception. Id. In addition, the court noted that Weil was a former, not current, shareholder of the corporation. Id. Despite this, the court allowed the requested discovery based on a finding of waiver. Id. at 25. See also United States v. Jicarilla Apache Nation, 564 U.S. 162, 173 (2011) (holding that the fiduciary exception to the attorney-client privilege did not apply to the federal government as nominal "trustee" for the Jicarilla Apache Nation because the government did not act in an actual trustee role with respect to the management of funds for the tribe and the tribe was not the “real client” of the government); Opus Corp. v. IBM Corp., 956 F. Supp. 1503, 1509-11 (D. Minn. 1996) (rejecting application of the Garner doctrine to prevent a general partner from invoking the attorney-client privilege to protect disclosure of communications to other partners); Shirvani v. Capital Inv. Corp., 112 F.R.D. 389, 390-91 (D. Conn. 1986) (rejecting the Garner doctrine in action brought directly against the corporation by shareholders).

Some courts have extended the Garner doctrine to situations outside of the shareholder/corporate client context to include other fiduciary relationships. For example, in In re Baldwin-United Corp., 38 B.R. 802, 805 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1984), the court held that a creditor’s committee, in its fiduciary capacity, ought to “go about [its] duties without obscuring [its] reasons from the legitimate inquires of [the] beneficiaries.” The court noted that the Garner doctrine provided the best balance between the “creditor’s right to information and the committee’s need for confidentiality” and held that the committee should establish good cause for withholding privileged information from the creditors. Id. See also In re Teleglobe Commc’ns Corp., 493 F.3d 345, 384 (3d Cir. 2007) (predicting that Delaware courts would extend the Garner doctrine to set aside a corporate parent’s assertion of privilege on a showing of good cause where an insolvent subsidiary brought a claim for breach of fiduciary duty against its parent in a bankruptcy proceeding under Delaware law); TattleTale Alarm Sys. Inc. v. Calfee, Halter & Griswold, LLP, No. 2:10-cv-226, 2011 WL 382627, at *10 (S.D. Ohio Feb. 3, 2011) (“[A] thorough review of federal decisions, including the ones which recognize the [Garner] exception, persuades the Court that Ohio would enforce the attorney-client privilege for [certain loss-prevention communications].”); In re Kipnis Section 3.4 Trust, No. 1 CA-CV 13-0260, 2014 WL 2515207, at *6-7 (Ariz. App. Div. 1 June 3, 2014) (the trustee of a trust has the obligation to disclose to the beneficiary all attorney-client communications that occurred in its fiduciary capacity with respect to the administration of the trust, but not the communications of the trustee that were obtained for self-protection); NAMA Holdings, LLC v. Greenberg Traurig, LLP, 18 N.Y.S. 3d 1, 7-9 (N.Y. App. Div. Oct. 8, 2015) (noting theory that when a trustee looks for legal advice in executing one’s fiduciary duties, he or she is doing so on behalf of the beneficiaries of the trust and therefore cannot shield one’s actions from the attorney’s actual clients, and remanding to district court for further analysis regarding whether the Garner fiduciary exception applied to communications between a trustee and the trust’s attorney).

In In re MetLife Demutualization Litigation, 495 F. Supp. 2d 310, 314-16 (E.D.N.Y. 2007), rev’d in part by Murray v. Metro. Life Ins. Co., 583 F.3d 173, 177 (2d Cir. 2009) (reversing MetLife court’s disqualification of mutual insurance company’s counsel after holding that policyholders were not counsel’s clients), the court applied Garner to hold that a mutual insurance company’s policyholders could discover communications between the insurance company and its lawyers related to the company’s demutualization, which required the policyholders’ vote. At least one court has rejected the application of the fiduciary exception to insurance policyholders in coverage disputes with their insurance companies. See Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tedford, Civil Action No. 3:07CV73-A-A, 2009 WL 2425841, at *7 (N.D. Miss. Aug. 6, 2009) (rejecting application of Garner to a communication between an insurer and outside counsel regarding whether a particular claim would receive coverage). But in Dome Petroleum, Ltd. v. Employers Mutual Liability Insurance Co. of Wisconsin, 131 F.R.D. 63, 68-69 (D.N.J. 1990), the court analogized to the Garner doctrine in holding that an insurer could not assert the privilege against the subrogee of the policyholder in an insurance coverage dispute. The court noted, however, that the subrogor's duty not to interfere with the subrogee's rights did not rise to the level of a fiduciary obligation, although it did provide the same commonality of interest with which Garner was concerned. Id. at 69. Cf. Lexington Ins. Co. v. Swanson, 240 F.R.D. 662, 666-67 (W.D. Wash. 2007) (finding the subrogee of an insurance claim could directly assert the privilege).

The extension of the Garner doctrine has been particularly noteworthy in the context of pension plans, where courts have extended the doctrine to communications made by attorneys acting as Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 ("ERISA") fiduciaries. See In re Occidental Petroleum Corp., 217 F.3d 293, 297-98 (5th Cir. 2000) (attorney-client privilege did not preclude employees of a corporation's former subsidiary, who were participants in employee stock option plan ("ESOP") funded by corporation's stock, from discovering relevant corporate documents in ERISA action against corporation alleging breach of fiduciary duty in relation to ESOP); United States v. Mett, 178 F.3d 1058, 1062-66 (9th Cir. 1999) (recognizing generally a fiduciary exception but declining to apply it to memoranda containing legal advice unrelated to plan administration that plan trustees obtained to protect themselves from civil and criminal liability); Wildbur v. ARCO Chem. Co., 974 F.2d 631, 645 (5th Cir. 1992) (stating that "[w]hen an attorney advises a plan administrator or other fiduciary concerning plan administration, the attorney's clients are the plan beneficiaries for whom the fiduciary acts, not the plan administrator" but declining to find a fiduciary relationship to justify disclosure when communications related to pending lawsuit, not plan administration); Tatum, 247 F.R.D. at 496-97 (applying Garner doctrine to communications between an ERISA administrator and counsel); Smith v. Jefferson Pilot Fin. Ins. Co., 245 F.R.D. 45, 47 (D. Mass. 2007) (fiduciary exception applicable to insurance companies in ERISA suit); Henry v. Champlain Enters., Inc., 212 F.R.D. 73, 83-87 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (Garner doctrine applied to ESOP participants' derivative action against their employers' officers, directors and shareholders, who also served as plan fiduciaries); Helt v. Metro. Dist. Comm'n, 113 F.R.D. 7, 9-10 (D. Conn. 1986) (Garner doctrine applied where beneficiary of a pension plan sought to discover correspondence between attorneys for the pension plan and the plan's trustee); Wash.-Balt. Newspaper Guild, Local 35 v. Wash. Star Co., 543 F. Supp. 906, 909-10 (D.D.C. 1982) (recognizing that fiduciary exception could apply to allow beneficiary of a pension plan to discover communications between attorneys for the pension plan and the plan's trustee).

In In re Long Island Lighting Co., 129 F.3d 268, 272 (2d Cir. 1997), however, the Second Circuit held that the fiduciary exception embodied in the Garner doctrine did not apply to communications between an employer and its counsel regarding amendments to an employee benefits plan, even though counsel was also the plan's fiduciary under ERISA. While acknowledging that the fiduciary exception applied to communications made by an ERISA fiduciary that are intended to aid an employer in administering its benefits plan, the court concluded that the communications at issue were not related to the fiduciary obligations the attorney owed to the plan beneficiaries. Id. at 272. The court found that the employer did not waive the attorney-client privilege by employing the same attorney to handle both fiduciary and non-fiduciary matters pertaining to its benefits plan. Id. The Third Circuit has not yet decided whether to recognize the fiduciary exception in the ERISA context but has held that insurers who are statutory fiduciaries under ERISA and act as claim administrators may not assert the fiduciary exception. Wachtel v. Health Net, Inc., 482 F.3d 225, 229, 233-34 (3d Cir.

2007). But see Stephan v. Unum Life Ins. Co. of Am., 697 F.3d 917, 931 n.6 (9th Cir. 2012) (rejecting Wachtel and holding that because memoranda between a plan administrator's claims analyst and its in-house counsel were prepared to advise the analyst how to best interpret the plan, and were communicated to the analyst before any final determination on the employee's claim had been made, the memoranda pertained to plan administration and fell within the fiduciary exception); Krase v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 962 F. Supp. 2d 1033, 1037 (N.D. Ill. 2013) (applying the fiduciary exception to insurers in ERISA cases); Klein v. Nw. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 806 F. Supp. 2d 1120, 1129 (S.D. Cal. 2011) (rejecting Wachtel); Buzzanga v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., No. 4:09-CV-1353 (CEJ), 2010 WL 1292162, at *3 (E.D. Mo. Apr. 5, 2010) (same); Smith v. Jefferson Pilot Fin. Ins. Co., 245 F.R.D. 45, 51 (D. Mass. 2007) (same).

Courts that extend the fiduciary exception to privileged communications will generally do so until the fiduciary and the beneficiaries' interests significantly diverge; the exception may apply through a final administrative decision. E.g., Moss v. Unum Life Ins. Co., 495 Fed. App'x 583, 596 (6th Cir. 2012) (documents created before final benefits determination had been made but after lawsuit by beneficiary was filed against insurer were not subject to fiduciary exception); Moore v. Metro. Life Ins. Co., 799 F. Supp. 2d 1290, 1296-97 (M.D. Ala. 2011) (applying exception to communications of ERISA administrator occurring after beneficiary filed lawsuit because MetLife was acting as a fiduciary in determining benefits); Thies v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 768 F. Supp. 2d 908, 913 (W.D. Ky. 2011) (in insurance context, applying the fiduciary exception to email sent after denial of plaintiffs' claim for accidental death benefits but before denial of administrative appeal, even though plaintiffs retained counsel during that time); Buzzanga, 2010 WL 1292162, at *3-4 (applying the fiduciary exception to three documents generated before plaintiff's claim for accidental death benefits was denied but protecting a document created in response to plaintiff's appeal after determining that the parties' interests had diverged due to the prospect of litigation); Allen v. Honeywell Ret. Earnings Plan, 698 F. Supp. 2d 1197, 1202-03 (D. Ariz. 2010) (extending application of the fiduciary exception through the final administrative denial of retirement plan participants' ERISA claims and noting that "[i]f the parties' interests had, in fact, diverged prior to the initial administrative claim" as defendants suggested, defendants "should not have engaged in the administrative process" and "should not have invited an appeal of the initial administrative determination"). Cf. Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'g Emps. in Aerospace v. Boeing Co., No. 05-1251, 2009 WL 3711599, at *4 (D. Kan. Nov. 3, 2009) (holding that the fiduciary exception did not negate privilege when ERISA beneficiaries had already commenced litigation against plan fiduciary for breach of fiduciary duties because "the legal fiction of the trustee as representative of the beneficiaries [was] dispelled") (internal quotations and citations omitted).

The Restatement favors an expansive application of the Garner doctrine for two reasons. First, the function of the directors and managers of an organization is to advance the interests of the shareholders, members, and beneficiaries, and thus they should not keep information from their constituents. Second, in litigation between the directors and officers and their constituents, the officers have an incentive to place their own interests above those of the organization in deciding whether to waive the privilege. RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 85 cmt. b (2000). The Restatement thus sets out several factors that should be considered in order to invoke the exception in "organizational fiduciary" cases:

- (1) the extent to which beneficiaries seeking the information have interests that conflict with those of opposing or silent beneficiaries;
- (2) the substantiality of the beneficiaries' claim and whether the proceeding was brought for ulterior purpose;
- (3) the relevance of the communication to the beneficiaries' claim and the extent to which information it contains is available from nonprivileged sources;
- (4) whether the beneficiaries' claim asserts criminal, fraudulent, or similarly illegal acts;
- (5) whether the communication relates to future conduct of the organization that could be prejudiced;
- (6) whether the communication concerns the very litigation brought by the beneficiaries;
- (7) the specificity of the beneficiaries' request;
- (8) whether the communication involves trade secrets or other information that has value beyond its character as a client-lawyer communication;
- (9) the extent to which the court can employ protective orders to guard against abuse if the communication is revealed; and
- (10) whether the determination not to waive the privilege made [on] behalf of the organization was by a disinterested group of directors or officers.

c. Disclosure of Special Litigation Committee Reports

Special Litigation Committee ("SLC") reports are likely to be discoverable upon a motion to terminate a derivative action. In Joy v. North, 692 F.2d 880, 893-94 (2d Cir. 1982), the court held that upon a motion to terminate, an SLC must disclose its report and supporting data since the motion to terminate operates as a waiver of the attorney-client privilege.

Similarly, in In re Continental Illinois Securities Litigation, 732 F.2d 1302, 1306-07 (7th Cir. 1984), the trial court had ordered public disclosure of an SLC report upon the motion of several newspapers for access during a hearing on a motion to terminate. The Seventh Circuit declined to adopt a per se rule requiring disclosure of the SLC report upon a corporation's motion to terminate. Id. at 1316. Instead, the court held that the presumption of public access to information before the court outweighed the corporation's need for confidentiality. Id. at 1314.

In In re Perrigo Co., 128 F.3d 430, 434 (6th Cir. 1997), the trial court held that a report prepared by an independent director that was protected by both the attorney-client privilege and work product immunity would become a public record if submitted to the court by either party for consideration in connection with the corporation's motion to dismiss. The Sixth Circuit reversed and held that while the report should be disclosed to other parties to the litigation under a protective order, it was "clear error . . . to direct that simply . . . submitting the Formanek Report [to the court] . . . automatically places it in the public domain." Id. at 441 (internal quotations omitted). The court explained that the trial court's order requiring automatic public disclosure left the corporation with the "choice of waiving the protection of the Report or withdrawing its motion to dismiss" and that it would have "the effect of giving the derivative plaintiffs . . . the untrammelled power to waive [the corporation's protections] in the Report." Id. at 438-39. However, the court did indicate that there may be some point where the trial court may, after a full hearing on the matter, conclude that public disclosure of the report or certain portions of the report is necessary for limited purposes. Id. at 441.

Court granted plaintiffs' motion to compel discovery in shareholder derivative action after SLC filed a motion for summary judgment. Court concluded that the SLC must produce all supporting data for the report and granted plaintiffs' motion for depositions of the SLC members.

Court ordered Special Litigation Report filed in support of defendant's motion to dismiss derivative action unsealed following dismissal of derivative action, but while related direct securities actions were pending. Court concluded that even if there might have been some incidental harm to defendant, "it [was] not of sufficient weight to overcome the public interest in disclosure."

Privilege not waived when only portions of the SLC's findings, which did not summarize evidence found in the report or reveal the facts leading to the conclusions found in the report, and not the SLC report itself, were released to the court and the public.

4. Internal Communications with Law Firm In-House Counsel

The attorney-client privilege applies to internal communications with attorneys while they are acting as in-house counsel for their law firm. United States v. Rowe, 96 F.3d 1294, 1296-97 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that grand jury investigating attorney could not subpoena law firm associates asked by partner to investigate ethical violations by another attorney because associates were acting as in-house counsel); EEOC v. Kelley, Drye & Warren LLP, No. 10 Civ. 655 (LTS) (MHB), 2011 WL 280804, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 2011) (an attorney's memorandum to in-house counsel and to the firm's executive committee, which offered an explanation contrary to the executive committee's conclusion, was privileged since it sought a legal opinion from the law firm's in-house counsel); Nesse v. Pittman, 206 F.R.D. 325, 328 (D.D.C. 2002) (attorney-client privilege protects communications with firm counsel regarding ethics issues surrounding termination of relationship with former client); Hertzog, Calamari & Gleason v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 850 F. Supp. 255, 255-56 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (“[n]o principled reason appears for denying” privilege for internal communications with firm lawyer “acting as an attorney, rather than as a participant”); Lama Holding Co. v. Shearman & Sterling, No. 89 Civ. 3639 (KTD), 1991 WL 115052, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. June 17, 1991) (upholding privilege for internal communications with firm counsel). See also In re Refco Sec. Litig. (Krys v. Sugrue), 759 F. Supp. 2d 342, 347 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (law firm not required to produce to former client internal firm emails where malpractice claims were not before the court); EEOC v. BDO USA, LLP, 856 F.3d 356, 361, 365-66 (5th Cir. 2017) (overturning a district court decision that placed the burden on the requesting party to demonstrate that in-house counsel was not acting in a legal capacity and stating that the proper legal standard requires in-house counsel to demonstrate it acted in a legal capacity). In each of these cases, the courts upheld the privilege against claims by third parties who had not been clients of the firm or by former clients whose representation had ended before the communications at issue were made.

A question arises when a firm seeks legal advice from in-house counsel regarding the representation of current clients. Some courts have held that a law firm's duty as a fiduciary to its client conflicts with its interest in investigating and preventing litigation against it, for example, where a firm seeks its own internal counsel's advice with regard to whether a current client may have a malpractice or other claim against the firm. The trend in the case law, however, recognizes the importance of enabling lawyers to confer with firm counsel regarding ongoing representation and has upheld attorney-client privilege in these contexts, particularly when the law firm has taken steps to separate firm counsel's communications from work being provided to the client.

The decision in In re Sunrise Sec. Litig., 130 F.R.D. 560, 595 (E.D. Pa. 1989), is an example of a case in which the court found that a conflict of interest and refused to apply privilege to communications with firm counsel. In In re Sunrise, is an example of a case in which the court found a conflict of interest and refused to apply privilege to communications with firm counsel. In In re Sunrise, the court recognized that the attorney-client privilege could attach to internal communications with firm counsel, but held that where the communications concerned current clients, the assertion of privilege sometimes “creat[es] a prohibited conflict of interest.” Id. The court cited Pennsylvania Rule of Professional Conduct 1.7, which is similar to ABA Model Rule of Professional Conduct 1.7. Model Rule 1.7(a) states that a conflict exists where “(1) the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client; or (2) there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.” The court in In re Sunrise reasoned that in-house counsel owed a fiduciary duty both to the firm, as his client, and to the firm's client, the plaintiff seeking discovery. The court held that the firm could not assert the privilege against its own client when the two duties come into conflict. In re Sunrise, 130 F.R.D. at 597. The court analogized to the line of cases following Garner v. Wolfenbarger, 430 F.2d 1093 (5th Cir.

1970), which created an exception to the attorney-client privilege when an organization is sued by a party to whom it owes a fiduciary duty. See Fiduciary Exception, § I.I.3, supra.

Some courts that have addressed the issue have agreed with the approach taken by the court in In re Sunrise.

See:

Asset Funding Group, L.L.C. v. Adams & Reese, L.L.P., Civil Action No. 07-2965, 2009 WL 1605190, at *2-3 (E.D. La. June 5, 2009). Plaintiff could discover documents pertaining to a conflict check in client's suit against law firm alleging that the firm simultaneously represented third party with conflicting interests.

Burns v. Hale & Dorr LLP, 242 F.R.D. 170, 173 (D. Mass. 2007). In suit with beneficiary of trust, firm could not claim privilege over internal communications relating to representation of trustee because firm owed fiduciary duty to beneficiary.

Thelen Reid & Priest LLP v. Marland, No. C 06-2071 VRW, 2007 WL 578989, at *7-8 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 21, 2007). Firm could not assert privilege for internal communications regarding representation of plaintiff, a former client.

VersusLaw, Inc. v. Stoel Rives, LLP, 111 P.3d 866, 878-79 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005). Privilege does not apply when communications with firm in-house counsel regarding potential malpractice create a conflict of interest.

Koen Book Distribs., Inc. v. Powell, Trachtman, Logan, Carrie, Bowman & Lombardo P.C., 212 F.R.D. 283, 286 (E.D. Pa. 2002) (citing Pennsylvania Rule of Professional Conduct 1.7(b)). Privilege cannot apply because once law firm knew of malpractice claim, it had obligation to withdraw from representation or seek "clients' consent to continue the representation 'after full disclosure and consultation.'"

Bank Brussels Lambert v. Credit Lyonnais (Suisse), S.A., 220 F. Supp. 2d 283, 288 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). Firm's conflict check was not protected by attorney-client privilege in malpractice suit.

In re SonicBlue Inc., Nos. 03-51775, 03-51776, 03-51777, 03-51778-MM, 2008 WL 170562, at *9 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. Jan. 18, 2008). "[W]here conflicting duties exist, the law firm's right to claim privilege must give way to the interest in protecting current clients who may be harmed by the conflict."

The rule in In re Sunrise does not exclude from the privilege all communications with firm counsel. Rather, the rule only applies after the firm learns that a conflict has arisen between its representation of a current client and the firm's interest in avoiding liability for its professional misconduct. In re Sunrise, 130 F.R.D. at 597 (holding privilege is inapplicable "if the communication implicates or creates a conflict between the law firm's fiduciary duties to itself and its duties to the client seeking to discover the communication"); accord Asset Funding Group, 2009 WL 1605190, at *2 ("[W]hile a law firm may seek legal advice from its own counsel on ethical issues and such advice is confidential, once the law firm learns that a client may have a claim against a firm or needs client consent in order to commence or continue representation of another client, the firm should disclose its communications on these issues.").

The trend in the case law rejects the In re Sunrise approach, particularly where the law firm has taken steps to separate firm counsel's communications from the work being provided to the client. See, e.g., Crimson Trace Corp. v. Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, 326 P.3d 1181 (Or. 2014) (en banc); St. Simons Waterfront, LLC v. Hunter, Maclean, Exley & Dunn, P.C., 746 S.E.2d 98 (Ga. 2013); RFF Family Partnership, LP v. Burns & Levinson, LLP, 991 N.E.2d 1066 (Mass. 2013); Garvy v. Seyfarth Shaw LLP, 966 N.E.2d 523, 536-39 (Ill. App. Ct. 2012), appeal denied, 979 N.E.2d 876 (Ill. 2012) (Illinois does not recognize a fiduciary-duty exception to the attorney-client privilege, and, even if recognized under Illinois law, the exception would not apply to law firm's communications with firm in-house counsel and outside counsel concerning client's claims); Palmer v. Superior Court, 231 Cal. App. 4th 1214, 180 Cal. Rptr. 3d 620 (Cal. App. 2 Dist. 2014); TattleTale Alarm Sys., Inc. v. Calfee, Halter & Griswold, LLP, No. 2:10-cv-226, 2011 WL 382627 (S.D. Ohio Feb. 3, 2011).

In TattleTale, the court rejected the approaches taken by the courts in In re Sunrise and Koen. Plaintiff sought its former firm's internal "loss prevention" communications made while the firm represented plaintiff. Applying Ohio law, but finding no Ohio precedent, the court canvassed federal precedent. TattleTale, 2011 WL 382627, at *3. In In re Teleglobe Communications Corp., 493 F.3d 345, 368 (3rd Cir. 2007), the Third Circuit held that, where a conflict of interest arises, the proper course of action is for the attorney to end the representation; however, "the black-letter law is that when an attorney (improperly) represents two clients whose interests are adverse, the communications are privileged against each other notwithstanding the lawyer's misconduct." Relying on Teleglobe as a starting point, and considering the balance of interests, including the fact that there were other sources of proof available to the plaintiff, the court concluded that Ohio would not carve out an exception to the attorney-client privilege for internal firm "loss prevention" communications under the circumstances presented. TattleTale, 2011 WL 382627, at *8-10.

In RFF Family Partnership, the Massachusetts Supreme Court held, as a matter of first impression, that communications between firm attorneys and in-house counsel regarding malpractice claims asserted by a current client are protected by the attorney-client privilege, provided that (1) the law firm has designated attorneys within the firm to represent the firm as in-house counsel; (2) in-house counsel has not performed any work on the client matter at issue; (3) the time spent by attorneys communicating with in-house counsel is not billed to the client; and (4) the communications with in-house counsel are made in confidence and kept confidential. 991 N.E.2d at 1080-81. The court rejected the theory that communications with in-house counsel are discoverable under the fiduciary exception or the so-called "current client exception." Id. at 1076, 1078. The Georgia Supreme Court adopted a similar rule in St. Simons Waterfront, LLC v. MacLean Exley & Dunn P.C., 746 S.E.2d 98, 102 (Ga. 2013). The court in St. Simons Waterfront held that communications between a law firm's attorneys and its in-house counsel are protected by the attorney-client privilege where (1) a genuine attorney-client relationship exists between the firm's lawyers and in-house counsel; (2) the communications were intended to advance the firm's interest in limiting exposure to liability rather than the client's interest in obtaining sound legal representation; (3) the communications were conducted and maintained in confidence; and (4) no exception to the privilege applies.

Similarly, in May 2014, the Oregon Supreme Court reversed the trial court and held, as a matter of first impression, that communications between law firm attorneys and firm in-house counsel regarding actual and potential conflicts of interest with a then-current client were protected by the attorney-client privilege in subsequent malpractice litigation by the client. Crimson Trace Corp. v. Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, 326 P.3d 1181 (Or. 2014) (en banc). The communications with firm in-house counsel met the three elements for privilege under Oregon law: (1) the communications were between a client (the law firm) and the client's lawyer (firm in-house counsel); (2) the communications were intended to be kept confidential; and (3) the communications were made for the purpose of rendering professional legal services to the client (the law firm). Id. at 1189-91. Further, the communications were not subject to any recognized exception to the attorney-client privilege under Oregon law. Id. at 1191. The Oregon Supreme Court specifically rejected the application of a "fiduciary exception," noting that it was not one of the five exceptions explicitly enumerated by Oregon's statutory framework and explained that it would be error to conflate ethical considerations with the separate issue of the scope of privilege. Id. at 1195. See also Palmer v. Superior Court, 231 Cal. App. 4th 1214, 180 Cal. Rptr. 3d 620 (Cal. App. 2 Dist. 2014) (rejecting "fiduciary" and "current client" exceptions to the privilege).

In August 2013, the American Bar Association recognized the attorney-client privilege for communications with firm counsel. ABA Resolution 103 articulated the ABA's policy that the attorney-client privilege applies to communications between corporate personnel and in-house counsel to the same extent as communications with outside counsel. Resolution 103 also provided that "any conflict of interest arising out of a law firm's consultation with its in-house counsel regarding the firm's representation of a then-current client and a potentially viable claim the client may have against the firm does not create an exception to the attorney-client privilege, at least so long as the client is appropriately and timely informed of the potentially viable claim" and that "any 'fiduciary exception' to the attorney-client privilege . . . if recognized in the jurisdiction, should not be applied to otherwise privileged communications between law firm personnel and the firm's in-house or outside counsel regarding the law firm's own duties, obligations, and possible liabilities, even if those communications implicate the ongoing representation of a current client." ABA Resolution 103(b)-(c). The ABA urged all courts, legislatures, and other government bodies to support the principles set forth in Resolution 103.

II. EXTENSIONS OF THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE BASED ON COMMON INTEREST

Courts have recognized several extensions of the attorney-client privilege which allow clients and lawyers with common interests to share privileged communications. See, e.g., Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 90 (3d Cir. 1992) (protection of privilege extended to communications between different persons or separate corporations when the communications are part of an ongoing and joint effort to set up a common defense strategy); In re Bairnco Corp. Sec. Litig., 148 F.R.D. 91, 102 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (joint-defense privilege is an extension of the attorney-client privilege); Gottlieb v. Wiles, 143 F.R.D. 241 (D. Colo. 1992) (no waiver occurs from exchange of privileged materials between persons with common interest); FDIC v. Cheng, No. 3:90-CV-0353-H, 1992 WL 420877, at *3 (N.D. Tex. Dec. 2, 1992) (joint-defense privilege is an extension of the attorney-client privilege). These common interest extensions do not themselves confer privilege status to any of the communications involved. See Bitler Inv. Venture II v. Marathon Ashland Petroleum, No. 1:04-CV-477, 2007

WL 465444, at *3 (N.D. Ind. Feb. 7, 2007) (the common interest doctrine is merely an extension of the attorney-client privilege, and where that privilege would not shield a document from discovery it is of no use to litigants); see also SEC, Inc. v. Wyly, No. 10 Civ. 5760 (SAS), 2011 WL 3851129, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. June 17, 2011) (same). Instead, they merely allow communications which are already privileged to be shared between commonly interested parties without causing waiver; the communications themselves must independently satisfy the elements of the privilege. Gulf Islands Leasing, Inc. v. Bombardier Capital, Inc., 215 F.R.D. 466, 470 (S.D.N.Y. 2003); Metro Wastewater Reclamation Dist. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 142 F.R.D. 471, 478 (D. Colo. 1992). These extensions are a form of selective waiver which allow disclosure to some persons without waiving the privilege toward others. The burden is on the party asserting the privilege to show that a common interest does in fact exist. United States v. LeCroy, 348 F. Supp. 2d 375, 381 (E.D. Pa. 2004); LaForest v. Honeywell Int'l Inc., No. 03-CV-6248T, 2004 WL 1498916, at *3 (W.D.N.Y. July 1, 2004).

Unfortunately, courts have not been consistent in their terminology and many courts apply the terms common interest exception, common defense privilege, or joint-defense privilege to discuss a variety of related but different concepts. Basically, there are two types of sharing that courts often analyze under a common interest analysis:

- (1) Sharing between clients represented by the same lawyer: In this outline, the term joint-defense privilege is used for sharing arrangements where several clients share the same attorney. See Joint-Defense Privilege, § II.A, infra.
- (2) Sharing between clients represented by separate counsel: In this outline, the term common defense or common interest privilege is used for sharing arrangements between separately represented clients. See Common Interest Doctrine, § II.B, infra. As noted, some courts use the term joint-defense privilege to cover this type of sharing also.

A. JOINT-DEFENSE PRIVILEGE

When two parties are represented by the same attorney, the co-clients may usually share communications with their common lawyer without destroying confidentiality. See United States v. Bay State Ambulance & Hosp. Rental Serv., Inc., 874 F.2d 20, 28-29 (1st Cir. 1989); Waller v. Fin. Corp. of Am., 828 F.2d 579, 583 (9th Cir. 1987); United States v. Keplinger, 776 F.2d 678, 701 (7th Cir. 1985); Gov't of V.I. v. Joseph, 685 F.2d 857, 861 (3d Cir. 1982). This situation often occurs in criminal trials where co-conspirators or co-defendants utilize the same defense counsel. Under this arrangement, the joint communications remain privileged with respect to the rest of the world, and either client can assert the privilege against a third person. See United Coal Co. v. Powell Constr. Co., 839 F.2d 958, 965 (3d Cir. 1988); JOHN W. STRONG, MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 91 (7th ed. 2016); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 75 (2000). See also:

United States v. Krug, 868 F.3d 82, 87 (2d Cir. 2017). “The mere fact that the communications were among co-defendants who had joined in a joint defense agreement is, without more, insufficient to bring such statements within the attorney-client privilege.”

United States v. Gonzalez, 669 F.3d 974, 979-81 (9th Cir. 2012). Joint-defense privilege applied where there was no written agreement because it could be implied from conduct and situation, where the communications were for the purpose of preparing a joint defense strategy, involved sharing confidential information, and there was a clear understanding that such communications were privileged.

Hanson v. U.S. Agency for Int'l Dev., 372 F.3d 286, 292 (4th Cir. 2004). Joint-defense privilege extended to communications between attorney, defendant and third-party where the defendant and third-party had a common interest in resolving a dispute on favorable terms and received counsel from the same attorney.

In re Auclair, 961 F.2d 65, 69-70 (5th Cir. 1992). Joint-defense privilege applied to the communications by three individuals (grand jury witness, secretary and her husband) who consulted a single attorney on a matter of common interest with the intention to keep the communications confidential. Court noted that the existence of joint interest will be presumed from a joint pre-representation consultation meeting.

AgroFresh Inc. v. Essentiv LLC, C.A. No. 16-662 (MN), 2019 WL 4917894, at *4-5 (D. Del. Oct. 4, 2019). Communication made in absence of attorneys may be privileged pursuant to common interest doctrine.

Regents of University of California v. Affymetrix, Inc., 326 F.R.D. 275, 280-282 (S.D. Cal. 2018). Noting there is support for the position that all parties must be represented by counsel for the common interest exception to apply.

DePuy Orthopaedics, Inc. v. Orthopaedic Hosp., No. 3:12-cv-99-JVB-MGG, 2016 WL 7030400, at *2-4 (N.D. Ind. Dec. 1, 2016). Finding joint representation of two parties by in-house counsel based on mutual consent implied through parties' conduct, such that their communications with shared counsel were privileged as to the outside world but not as to each other.

Greer v. Elec. Arts, Inc., No. C10-3601 RS (JSC), 2012 WL 299671 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 1, 2012). Joint defense privilege extended between an executive for the defendant and a former defendant that had been dismissed without prejudice; because the claims could have been reasserted, the former defendant shared a common interest with the defendant because they were both vulnerable to related claims.

Opplinger v. United States, Nos. 8:08CV530, 8:08CV530, 2010 WL 503042, at *5 (D. Neb. Feb. 8, 2010). Joint-defense privilege extended to two parties who sought joint counsel, agreed to joint representation, and resolved a potential problem between them through a settlement agreement, even though there was an intrinsic adversity between the clients.

Minebea Co. v. Papst, 228 F.R.D. 13, 15-17 (D.D.C. 2005). Holding that the joint defense agreement applied to communications where "(1) the communications were made in the course of a joint defense effort, (2) the statements were designed to further the effort, and (3) the privilege has not been waived." Noting that a written agreement is the best evidence of such an agreement, but that an oral agreement was sufficient to invoke the privilege.

But see:

United States v. Graf, 610 F.3d 1148, 1157-59 (9th Cir. 2010). Finding that Graf was a functional employee, not an independent outside consultant, and rejecting his claim of entitlement to a jointly held attorney-client privilege with the company's attorneys.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 415 F.3d 333, 341 (4th Cir. 2005). Rejecting former employee's claim to joint or common defense privilege over conversations with former employer's counsel where former employee did not enter into a joint defense agreement with former employer and no common litigation interest existed at time of communication.

The burden of establishing the existence of a specific agreement to pursue a joint-defense is on the party asserting the existence of the agreement. See Pensacola Firefighters' Relief Pension Fund Bd. of Trs. v. Merrill Lynch, No. 3:09cv53/MCR/MD, 2011 WL 3512180, at *6-7 (N.D. Fla. July 7, 2011); United States v. Dose, No. CR04-4082-MWB, 2005 WL 106493, at *17 (N.D. Iowa Jan. 12, 2005) (burden is on person asserting privilege to establish existence of joint privilege); United States v. Gotti, 771 F. Supp. 535, 545 (E.D.N.Y. 1991) (same); In re Megan-Racine Assocs., Inc., 189 B.R. 562, 571-72 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1995) (same).

The joint defense privilege only applies where the parties seek representation for legal purposes; joint consultations with an attorney for business or other purposes are not protected. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 156 F.3d 1038, 1042-43 (10th Cir. 1998) (to establish a joint-defense privilege, party asserting privilege must show that: (1) the information arose in the course of a joint-defense effort in (2) the furtherance of that effort); United States v. Aramony, 88 F.3d 1369, 1392 (4th Cir. 1996) (joint defense privilege did not apply when parties consulted with attorney regarding public relations problems caused by criminal allegations); Minebea Co. v. Papst, 228 F.R.D. 13, 15-17 (D.D.C. 2005). Furthermore, the establishment of a joint defense privilege requires the parties to show “[s]ome form of joint strategy . . . rather than merely the impression of one side.” United States v. Weissman, 195 F.3d 96, 100 (2d Cir. 1999). The mere exchange of information is not sufficient. In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 415 F.3d 333, 341 (4th Cir. 2005); Dose, 2005 WL 106493, at *17; see also Wade Williams Distrib., Inc. v. Am. Broad. Cos., No. 00 Civ. 5002(LMM), 2004 WL 1487702, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 2004) (communications between corporate counsel and employee were not privileged notwithstanding understanding of employee and counsel that counsel also represented employee for purposes of deposition); In re Economou, 362 B.R. 893, 896-97 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2007) (where attorney unethically represented two co-defendants with adverse interests at different times, common interest/joint defense doctrine did not apply since the representation was not sought jointly).

The joint defense privilege/common interest doctrine is not an independent basis for privilege, but an exception to the general rule that the attorney-client privilege is waived when privileged information is disclosed to a third party. See, e.g., Cavallaro v. United States, 284 F.3d 236, 250 (1st Cir. 2002); In re Santa Fe Int'l Corp., 272 F.3d 705, 710 (5th Cir. 2001) (noting that the common legal interest privilege is an “extension” of the attorney-client privilege).

Documenting a joint defense arrangement increases the parties' ability to meet their burden of proving that they were acting jointly, but a writing is not necessary, and the mere existence of a written agreement will not, on its own, establish the necessary joint interest. See, e.g., United States v. Weissman, 195 F.3d 96, 96-99 (2d Cir. 1999) (trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding lack of agreement to pursue joint legal strategy where notes taken at joint meeting did not mention the existence of such an agreement); United States v. Moss, 9 F.3d 543, 550 (6th Cir. 1993) (no joint defense privilege where defendants did not establish an ongoing and joint effort to set up a common defense strategy); In re Village at Lakeridge LLC, Nos. NV-12-1456-PaKiTa, NV-12-1474-PaKiTa, 2013 WL 1397447, at *12 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. Apr. 5, 2013) (parties must expressly or implicitly agree to a joint legal strategy, whether in writing or otherwise); Jansson v. Stamford Health, Inc., 312 F. Supp. 3d 289, 304 (D. Conn.

2018) (common interest rule did not apply where parties did not submit a written agreement or otherwise show a “meeting of the minds,” which “requires, at the very least, affidavits from the attorneys and lay representatives of both . . . parties which show that at a specific time or times, ‘a joint defense or strategy has been decided upon and undertaken by the parties and their respective counsel’”) (citation omitted); Prowess, Inc. v. Raysearch Laboratories AB, No. WDQ-11-1357, 2013 WL 509021, at *5 (D. Md. Feb. 11, 2013) (no common interest doctrine protection where a common interest agreement was not signed until after the communications occurred, and the agreement did not state when the common interest arrangement began); Holmes v. Collection Bureau of Am., Ltd., No. C 09-02549 WHA, 2010 WL 143484, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 8, 2010) (observing that no written agreement is required to invoke the joint-defense exception); Ludwig v. Pilington North America, Inc., No. 03 C 1086, 2004 WL 1898238, at *3-4 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 13, 2004) (where there was no evidence of an earlier informal agreement or oral understanding, joint defense privilege did not arise prior to date of signed agreement). For a sample joint/common defense agreement, see Appendix A.

1. Waiver by Consent

The parties to a joint-defense arrangement can voluntarily waive the privilege through consent. Each client may waive the privilege as to his or her own communications with the lawyer, but the privilege for joint communications must be waived by all clients. United States v. Gonzalez, 669 F.3d 974, 982 (9th Cir. 2012) (one party cannot unilaterally waive the privilege for other holders); In re Teleglobe Commc’ns Corp., 493 F.3d 345 (3d Cir. 2007); In re Auclair, 961 F.2d 65 (5th Cir. 1992); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 89-3 & 89-4, John Doe 89-129, 902 F.2d 244 (4th Cir. 1990); Magnetar Techs. Corp. v. Six Flags Theme Park Inc., 886 F. Supp. 2d 466, 485-86 (D. Del. 2012) (waiver of joint privilege requires the consent of all clients, and a client can unilaterally waive the privilege only when the communication only concerns the waiving client); In re Crescent Res., LLC, 457 B.R. 506 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2011) (one client may not unilaterally waive the joint-client privilege and use that jointly privileged information in a proceeding against third parties, absent waiver from the other client); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 75 cmt. e (2000); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2328 (J. McNaughton rev. 1961).

2. Waiver by Subsequent Litigation

The joint-defense privilege is waived in subsequent litigation between the co-clients. Massachusetts Eye & Ear Infirmary v. QLT Phototherapeutics, Inc., 412 F.3d 215 (1st Cir. 2005); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 274 F.3d 563 (1st Cir. 2001); In re Tri-River Trading, LLC, 329 B.R. 252, 269-70 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2005); Magnetar Techs. Corp. v. Six Flags Theme Park Inc., 886 F. Supp. 2d 466, 485 (D. Del. 2012) (a joint representation terminates when the parties have diverged and there is no justification for using common attorneys); JOHN W. STRONG, MCCORMICK ON EVIDENCE § 91 (7th ed. 2016); JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2312, at 603-04 (J. McNaughton rev. 1961); see also Newsome v. Lawson, 286 F. Supp. 3d 657, 664 (D. Del. 2017) (in lawsuit between former joint client and former joint counsel, former joint counsel may not withhold privileged communications from the joint representation, even if the other former joint client is a non-party and refuses to consent to the disclosure); In re Ginn-La St. Lucie Ltd., 439 B.R. 801 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2010) (disregarding a joint-defense agreement between debtors and non-debtor affiliates stating that information shared pursuant to the agreement would remain privileged even if an adversity of interest subsequently arose).

However, the resulting waiver is only a selective waiver since the communications remain privileged with respect to third parties. As a result, in inter-client litigation each client can reveal the joint communications against the other, but a third party cannot obtain access to the communications at all. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 75 (2000). To invoke this selective waiver, there must be actual adversarial litigation to end the co-client relationship. See State v. Cascone, 487 A.2d 186, 189 (Conn. 1985). A mere change in one co-client's position will not constitute subsequent litigation. See People v. Abair, 228 P.2d 336, 340 (Cal. Ct. App. 1951) (turning state's witness does not waive privilege); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 75 cmt. d (2000).

3. In re Teleglobe

The Third Circuit's decision in In re Teleglobe Communications Corp., 493 F.3d 345 (3d Cir. 2007), addresses a number of issues relating to joint privileges among a parent and its subsidiaries. The court's analysis provides a detailed road map for corporate counsel in connection with a number of thorny joint-client, common interest, and community-of-interest privilege issues. In late 2000, BCE directed its wholly owned subsidiary, Teleglobe, to borrow $2.4 billion, but in early April 2001 ceased funding Teleglobe, leaving the company without the means to repay its substantial debt. Teleglobe and several of its subsidiaries filed for bankruptcy protection and brought an adversary proceeding against BCE. Pre-bankruptcy, Teleglobe had consulted with BCE's in-house attorneys on various matters. In the adversary proceeding, Teleglobe sought discovery of BCE's counsel's files, and BCE asserted privilege. The special master ordered that all documents disclosed to in-house counsel, even documents provided by outside counsel hired only to represent BCE, be produced, and the district court affirmed. The appellate court reversed in part and remanded the case, holding that the district court could only compel BCE to produce disputed documents pursuant to the adverse-litigation exception to the co-client privilege if it found that BCE and the debtors were jointly represented by the same attorneys on a matter of common interest that is the subject-matter of those documents. 493 F.3d at 386-87; Cf. United States v. Gonzalez, 669 F.3d 974 (9th Cir. 2012) (finding In re Teleglobe Commc'ns Corp. to be inapposite where the two defendants were not co-clients with the same counsel, and when they were not adverse parties in the instant habeas litigation). The court provided the following guidance:

(1) When in-house counsel represents both the parent and a subsidiary, the privilege is governed by the joint defense/co-client doctrine, not the common interest doctrine. When co-clients become adversaries, the majority rule is that all communications made in the course of the joint representation are discoverable. The court predicted that the Delaware courts would apply the adverse litigation exception to render joint-privileged documents discoverable in all situations, even where one co-client is wholly owned by the other. Teleglobe, 493 F.3d at 364-68.

(2) Despite imprecise application by the courts, the community-of-interest/common interest privilege applies only to communications between attorneys who separately represent different clients, but who share a common legal interest in the shared communication. It does not apply where clients are jointly represented by a shared attorney. Telelobe, 493 F.3d at 365-66.

(3) Courts often find that information sharing within a corporate family does not waive the attorney-client privilege, but they diverge on how they reach this result. The court warned that if the rationale is that a corporate family constitutes one client, or that there is a community of interest, a former subsidiary could access all of its former parent's privileged communications in litigation in which they are adverse. The better rationale is that members of a corporate family are joint clients, and only communications involving specific representations are at risk. Id. at 372.

(4) When the interests of a parent and subsidiary begin to become adverse, any joint representation on the adverse matter should end, both to prevent the subsidiary from being able to invade the parent's privilege in any litigation that ensues, and to protect the interests of the subsidiary. This does not mean, however, that the parent's in-house counsel must cease representing the subsidiary on all other matters, because spin-off transactions can be in the works for months or even years, and continuing to share representation on other matters is both proper and efficient. Id. at 373. The court summarized its guidance for in-house counsel: "By taking care not to begin joint representations except when necessary, to limit the scope of joint representations, and seasonably to separate counsel on matters in which subsidiaries are adverse to the parent, in-house counsel can maintain sufficient control over the parent's privileged communications." Id. at 374.

B. COMMON INTEREST DOCTRINE

Most courts have been willing to expand the rationale of the joint-defense doctrine to include situations in which the clients are pursuing a common interest but do not share the same attorney. See, e.g., Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 90 (3d Cir. 1992) (protection of privilege extended to communications between different persons or separate corporations when the communications are part of an on-going and joint effort to set up a common defense strategy); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas 89-3 & 89-4, 902 F.2d 244 (4th Cir. 1990) (noting expansion from criminal co-defendants to other areas). See also United States v. Henke, 222 F.3d 633, 637 (9th Cir. 2000) (recognizing the common defense extension to the attorney-client privilege but disqualifying attorney because of conflict arising from same); United States v. Schwimmer, 892 F.2d 237, 244 (2d Cir. 1989) (upholding privilege as to communications between defendant and co-defendant's accountant); United States v. Melvin, 650 F.2d 641, 645-46 (5th Cir. 1981) (recognizing sharing arrangement but finding it inapplicable to the facts); United States v. McPartlin, 595 F.2d 1321 (7th Cir. 1979); Kilopass Tech. Inc. v. Sidense Corp., No. C 10-02066, 2012 WL 1144290, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 4, 2012) (the doctrine applies where allied lawyers and clients work together in prosecuting or defending a lawsuit); Roosevelt Irrigation Dist. v. Salt River Project Agric. Improvement & Power Dist., 810 F. Supp. 2d 929, 962 (D. Ariz. 2011) (an attorney may owe a duty of confidentiality to his client's former co-defendant via a joint defense agreement); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 76 (2000); UNIF. R. EVID. 502(b) (explicitly recognizing common defense extension to attorney-client privilege). Compare Chesapeake Bay Found. v. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 722 F. Supp. 2d 66, 74 (D.D.C. 2010) (holding that the attorney-client common interest privilege applies only where the same attorney represents both of the clients), with Hoffmann-La Roche, Inc. v. Roxane Lab., Inc., No. 09-6335 (WJM), 2011 WL 1792791 (D.N.J. May 11, 2011) (refusing to apply the common interest doctrine because there was only a single attorney).

Courts have used a variety of terms for these types of pooling/sharing arrangements including common interest privilege, common defense privilege and even joint-defense privilege. Litigation need not be anticipated by the parties in order for them to claim a common interest; they need only “undertake a joint effort with respect to a common legal interest.” United States v. BDO Seidman, LLP, 492 F.3d 806, 815-16 & n.6 (7th Cir. 2007) (collecting authorities). However, at least one Circuit requires that the parties claiming common defense or common interest protection be under a “palpable threat of litigation” at the time of the communications. See In re Santa Fe Int’l Corp., 272 F.3d 705, 711 (5th Cir. 2001). See also Allied Irish Banks, P.L.C. v. Bank of Am., N.A., 252 F.R.D. 163, 171 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (requiring common interest as to “pending or reasonably anticipated litigation”).

To apply the privilege to specific communications, the parties must show that the communications furthered the joint defense effort or joint legal interest. See, e.g., In re Pac. Pictures Corp. v. Dist. Court, 679 F.3d 1121, 1129 (9th Cir. 2012) (shared desire to see the same outcome in a legal matter not enough for common interest, where there is no proof that the parties are pursuing a “joint strategy” in accordance with some form of agreement); Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 94 (3d Cir. 1992) (party must show “(1) the communications were made in the course of a joint defense effort, (2) the statements were designed to further the effort and (3) the privilege has not been waived”); United States v. Schwimmer, 892 F.2d 237, 244 (2d Cir. 1989); In re Beville, Bresler & Schulman Asset Mgmt. Corp., 805 F.2d 120, 126 (3d Cir. 1986); *United States v. Apr. 5, 2013) (parties must agree to participate in a joint legal strategy, whether in writing or otherwise).

The key requirement for a common defense arrangement is that the clients share a common interest that is legal in nature and work together actively to pursue that interest. See Prowess, Inc. v. Raysearch Labs. AB, No. WDQ-11-1357, 2013 WL 509021, at *5 (D. Md. Feb. 11, 2013) (no common interest doctrine protection where the agreement was not signed until after the communications occurred and did not state when the common interest arrangement began); MobileMedia Ideas LLC v. Apple Inc., 890 F. Supp. 2d 508, 515 (D. Del. 2012) (an oral agreement later memorialized in writing can establish the basis of a common interest agreement); Am. Mgmt. Servs., LLC v. Dep’t of the Army, No. 1:11cv442, 2012 WL 215046, at *13 (E.D. Va. Jan. 23, 2012) (while the Army was not a named party in a related state action, it was a 49% owner of one of the plaintiffs and was an interested party sufficient for the common interest doctrine to apply); N. River Ins. Co. v. Columbia Cas. Co., No. 90 Civ. 2518, 1995 WL 5792, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 5, 1995) (the key to the common defense exception is not “whether the parties theoretically share similar interests but rather whether they demonstrate actual cooperation toward a common legal goal”); In re Leslie Controls, 437 B.R. 493 (Bankr. D. Del. 2010) (finding a common interest even where parties’ legal interests are not entirely congruent, so long as the communications are limited to issues where their legal interests are common); Gus Consulting GMBH v. Chadbourne & Parke, LLP, 858 N.Y.S.2d 591, 593 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2008) (adopting a broad standard for application of the common interest doctrine that requires only an interlocking relationship or a limited common purpose necessitating disclosure to certain parties).

Business or commercial common interests will not support the privilege. See In re John Doe Corp., 675 F.2d 482, 489 (2d Cir. 1982) (disclosure for commercial purposes is inconsistent with legal representation purpose); Fox News Network, LLC v. U.S. Dep't of the Treasury, 739 F. Supp. 2d 515, 563 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (while the common legal interest can exist in a non-litigation setting, it must not merely be a common commercial interest); Beyond Sys. v. Kraft Foods, Inc., No. PJM-08-409, 2010 WL 1568480, at *3 (D. Md. Aug. 4, 2010) (finding no common interest privilege when the evidence merely showed a joint business strategy that included concerns about litigation); Bank Brussels Lambert v. Credit Lyonnaise, 160 F.R.D. 437, 447 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (common defense doctrine “does not encompass a joint business strategy which happens to include as one of its elements concern about litigation”). But see United States v. BDO Seidman, LLP, 492 F.3d 806 (7th Cir. 2007) (business venturers with mutual interests in complying with federal law could share legal communications regarding new IRS regulations); Hunton & Williams, LLP v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, No. 3:06CV477, 2008 WL 906783 (E.D. Va. Mar. 31, 2008), vacated in part on other grounds, 590 F.3d 272 (4th Cir. 2010) (DOJ and private third party entered into valid common interest agreement where both parties had a common legal interest, even if third party also had a business interest at stake); Fresenius Med. Care Holdings, Inc. v. Roxane Labs., No. 2:05-cv-0889, 2007 WL 895059, at *2 (S.D. Ohio Mar. 21, 2007) (patent holder and patent purchaser shared a common interest in obtaining a strong and enforceable patent).

Decisions in which common interest doctrine was found applicable:

Schaeffler v. United States, 806 F.3d 34, 41-43 (2d Cir. 2015). The interest of a consortium of banks in taxpayer obtaining favorable tax treatment for refinancing and restructuring transaction was found to be a sufficient common legal interest for application of common-interest exception to attorney-client privilege. The court held that a financial interest of a party, no matter how large, did not preclude a court from finding a shared legal interest, as required for the application of the common-interest exception, where the legal aspects materially affect the financial interests.

Pampered Chef v. Alexanian, 737 F. Supp. 2d 958, 962 (N.D. Ill. 2010). Where a client communicates with his attorney in the presence of a third person who shares a common legal interest, the attorney-client privilege is not waived as to the information that is exchanged.

Trs. of Elec. Workers Local No. 26 Pension Trust Fund v. Trust Fund Advisors, Inc., 266 F.R.D. 1, 15 (D.D.C. 2010). Roper v. Old Republic Ins. Co., No. 09-C-154, 2010 WL 424598 (E.D. Wis. Feb. 1, 2010). Dexia Credit Local v. Rogan, 231 F.R.D. 268, 274 (N.D. Ill. 2004). The court applied the common interest doctrine to find no waiver when a debtor shared documents with a creditor, because both had the common legal goal of establishing that the defendant engaged in fraud.

Court held that privilege had not been waived where representatives of various companies within single industry met with industry lobbyist to discuss EPA interpretation of a regulation. Decisions in which common interest doctrine was found inapplicable:

In re Pac. Pictures Corp., 679 F.3d 1121, 1129 (9th Cir. 2012). A shared desire to see the same outcome in a legal matter did not constitute a common interest. There was no proof that the parties were pursuing a “joint strategy” in accordance with some form of agreement.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 112 F.3d 910, 922-23 (8th Cir. 1997). First Lady’s conversations with her private attorney and attorneys from the Office of Counsel to the President were not protected by the common-interest doctrine. Although Mrs. Clinton may have had a reasonable belief that her conversations were privileged, the attorney-client privilege did not attach because the White House, as an institution, did not share a common interest with Mrs. Clinton, an individual official being investigated for wrongdoing by the Office of Independent Counsel.

TERA, LLC v. Rice Drilling D, LLC, Civil Action 2:19-cv-2221, 2022 WL 2383543, at *3-4 (S.D. Ohio July 1, 2022). A party and amici were not protected by the common interest doctrine and court ordered production of emails with amici that attached draft briefs; “an amicus’s legal interest in the outcome of an action is not equivalent to that of a [party] such that amicus and the party can be considered truly united in a legal strategy or defense.”

Egiazayan v. Zalmayev, 290 F.R.D. 421, 434 (S.D.N.Y. 2013). Common interest rule applies where there is dual representation or where parties are represented by separate counsel but share a joint defense or strategy. Exception did not apply to communications shared with public relations firm acting as politician’s agent where the firm was not a party to pending litigation against politician and had no need to develop a common litigation strategy to defend those lawsuits.

King Drug Co. v. Cephalon, Inc., No. 06-cv-1797, 2011 WL 2623306, at *4-5 (E.D. Pa. July 5, 2011). Despite a joint-defense agreement between the defendant and its supplier, the common interest doctrine did not apply because, while the supplier paid for part of the defendant’s litigation costs, the defendant controlled the litigation and had very little contact with the supplier regarding the litigation.

In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., No. MD 06-1738(BMC)(JO), 2011 WL 197583, at *5 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 2011). The court refused to apply the common interest doctrine because it found no shared legal interest. Although the company and the agency wanted the same legal outcome, the litigation did not have a legal consequence for the agency.

Denney v. Jenkins & Gilchrist, 362 F. Supp. 2d 407, 415-16 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). Common defense privilege does not extend to any situation where parties’ interests are aligned. Where the parties could not show a cooperative and common legal strategy, there was no privilege for communications disclosed to each other.

Ludwig v. Pilkington N. Am. Inc., No. 03 C 1086, 2004 WL 1898238, at *3-4 (ND. Ill. Aug. 13, 2004). Parties may memorialize their common interest in a written agreement, but a formal written agreement is not required to invoke the privilege. Here the court ordered production of documents not covered by formal agreements, but did so because the evidence did not show any intent to cooperate between the parties with respect to communications not within the agreements.

United States v. Agnello, 135 F. Supp. 2d 380, 382 (E.D.N.Y. 2001). Observing that joint defense privilege does not apply outside of common enterprise and holding that statements made at general meeting of defendants were not privileged.

Although the Restatement does not require the participation of an attorney to apply the common interest doctrine, many courts may not apply the doctrine in the absence of an attorney.

See:

RESTATEMENT THIRD, THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS §76, cmt. d. “Under the privilege, any member of a client set – a client, the client’s agent for communications, the client’s lawyer, and the lawyer’s agent (see §70) – can exchange communications with members of a similar client set. However, a communication directly among the clients is not privileged unless made for the purpose of communicating with a privileged person as defined in §70.”

BBAM Aircraft Management LP BBAM US LP v. Babcock & Brown LLC, Case No. 3:20-cv-1056 (OAW), 2022 WL 3716574, at *3 (D. Conn. Aug. 29, 2022). The common interest doctrine may protect communications between the parties themselves, even if no attorney is involved. For example, if an attorney provides legal advice to a client, the client may repeat that advice to a co-defendant outside the presence of an attorney without waiving privilege.

United States v. Krug, 868 F.3d 82, 87 (2d Cir. 2017). Where clients engaged in a common interest arrangement spoke in the hall while their attorneys were nearby but not within hearing, their communications were not privileged because their statements were not made for the purpose of obtaining legal advice from a lawyer, did not share advice given by a lawyer, and did not seek to facilitate a communication with a lawyer.

Rodriguez v. Seabreeze Jetlev LLC, 620 F.Supp.3d 1009, 1023 (N.D. Cal. 2022). The common interest doctrine did not apply until the parties were represented by counsel.

Oct. 4, 2019). *Communications made in the absence of attorneys may be privileged pursuant to the common interest doctrine, quoting the test set forth in INVISTA North America S.a.r.l. v. M&G USA Corporation, Civil Action No. 11-1007-SLR-CJB, 2013 WL 12171721, at 5 (D. Del. June 25, 2013): “to invoke the common interest doctrine as to a communication between non-attorneys, a party must establish that the communication reflects one of three circumstances: (1) one party is seeking confidential information from the other on behalf of an attorney; (2) one party is relaying confidential information to the other on behalf of an attorney; and (3) the parties are communicating work product that is related to litigation.”

Though some courts and scholars have indicated that common defense clients need not possess entirely congruent common interests, see, e.g., Andritz Sprout Bauer, Inc. v. Beazer E., Inc., 174 F.R.D. 609, 634 (M.D. Pa. 1997) (for common interest doctrine to apply, interests of the parties need not be identical, and may even be adverse in some respects); In re Tribune Co., No. 08-13141 (KJC), 2011 WL 386827, at 4 (Bankr. Fed. Fruit & Produce Co., Inc., No. 11-cv-00542-REB-KLM, 2011 WL 6937195 (D. Colo. Dec. 30, 2011) (although plaintiffs-union members and the non-party union had partially overlapping interests in a lawsuit against the employer, disclosing union attorney work product to plaintiffs waived protection); LaForest v. Honeywell Int’l Inc., No. 03-CV-6248T, 2004 WL 1498916, at *3 (W.D.N.Y. July 1, 2004) (parties with adverse interests lacked common interest to support privilege); *Bank of Am., N.A. v. and be legal, not solely commercial.”); Roberts v. Carrier Corp., 107 F.R.D. 678, 687-88 (D. Ind. 1985) (a third party may share a common interest privilege where “it shares identical, and not merely similar legal interest”); Duplan Corp. v. Deering Milliken, Inc., 397 F. Supp. 1146, 1172 (D.S.C. 1975) (“The key consideration is that the nature of the interest be identical, not similar, and be legal, not solely commercial. Lexmark Int’l, 250 F.R.D. 575 (D. Colo. 2007) (some adversity between parties permissible when invoking common defense privilege); Cadillac Ins. Co. v. Am. Nat’l Bank, Nos. 89 C 3267 & 91 C 1188, 1992 WL 58786 (N.D. Ill. Cal. 1987) (common interest privilege applied to disclosure of legal opinion to prospective purchaser); Seahaus La Jolla Owners Ass’n v. Superior Court, 169 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390, 406 (Cal. Ct. App. 2014) (homeowners association and its counsel, and the individual homeowners who participated in the litigation meetings, maintained a reasonable expectation that information to be disclosed about the status of the litigation was confidential in nature and the presence of some homeowners who may have had conflicting loyalties – affiliations with the defendants – did not destroy all other common interests); Visual Scene, Inc. v. Pilkington Bros., 508 So. 2d 437, 442-43 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1987) (matters of common interest are protected notwithstanding that, in some other respect, the parties are adversaries and on opposite sides of the litigation).

The common defense doctrine is not limited to cases where the shared information relates to pending litigation. See United States v. Schwimmer, 892 F.2d 237, 244 (2d Cir. 1989); United States v. AT&T, 642 F.2d 1285, 1299-1300 (D.C. Conn. 1997) (common interest privilege applied to documents used to develop a tax strategy for five separate corporations to form a consortium to develop and market aerospace engines); Schachar v. Am. Acad. of Ophthalmology, Inc., 106 F.R.D. 187, 192 (N.D. Ill. 1985) (common interest can include proceedings in different states); In re LTV Sec. Litig., 89 F.R.D. 595, 604 (N.D. Tex. 1981) (disclosure to actual or potential co-defendants or their counsel does not constitute waiver); but see Glynn v. EDO Corp., No. JFM-07-01660, 2010 WL 3294347 (D. Md. Aug. 20, 2010) (finding that plaintiff's assertion of the common interest privilege over communications that occurred more than six months before litigation was filed and eighteen months before a common defense agreement was executed was in bad faith and awarding sanctions against the plaintiff); Ambac Assurance Corp. v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 57 N.E.3d 30, 37-40 (N.Y. 2016) (declining to expand the common interest doctrine beyond communications related to pending or anticipated litigation).

The privilege applies to any matter of common interest which causes clients to consult lawyers. For example, the common defense privilege also permits plaintiffs to share information (sometimes referred to as the joint prosecution privilege). See In re Grand Jury Subpoenas 89-3 & 89-4, 902 F.2d 244, 249 (4th Cir. 1990) (common interest extension applies “whether the jointly interested persons are defendants or plaintiffs . . .”); Sedalcek v. Morgan Whitney Trading Grp., Inc., 795 F. Supp. 329, 331 (C.D. Cal. 1992) (recognizing common interest extension applies to plaintiffs). See Appendix A for an example of a common (or joint) defense agreement.

When affiliated companies, such as wholly owned subsidiaries, share privileged materials, some courts find that there has been no waiver because the companies share a common legal interest. See, e.g., Davis v. PMA Cos., No. 11-359, 2012 WL 3922967, at *3 (W.D. Okla. Sept. 7, 2012) (parent and subsidiary should be treated as joint clients for purposes of the attorney-client privilege); Music Sales Corp. v. Morris, 52 U.S.P.Q.2d 1852, 2000 WL 974025, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (communications between wholly owned subsidiaries were privileged because the corporations operated as a single entity); Roberts v. Carrier Corp., 107 F.R.D. 678, 686-88 (N.D. Ind. 1985) (sharing of information between sister corporations to defend lawsuit was covered by the common defense extension to attorney-client privilege).

However, some courts require a showing of more than mere affiliation to establish a common legal interest. Gulf Islands Leasing, Inc. v. Bombardier Capital, Inc., 215 F.R.D. 466, 471-474 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (a subsidiary cannot automatically claim joint privilege with its parent, but instead bears the burden of demonstrating that the withheld communications pertain to a matter in which both parent and subsidiary have a common legal interest). See also In re Keurig Green Mountain Single-Serve Coffee Antitrust Litigation, 12-md-2542 (VSB)(HBP), 2019 WL 6736132, *8 (S.D.N.Y. July 22, 2019) (noting a “trend toward requiring more from corporate entities than simple affiliation to meet their burden of establishing that the documents shared with related corporate entities remain privileged”); STM Atl. N.V. v. Dong Yin Dev. (Holdings) Ltd., Case No. 2:18-cv-01269-JLS-JCG, 2018 WL 6265089, *8 (C.D. Cal. June 8, 2018) (subsidiary's disclosure of documents to its parent company waived privilege; common interest exception did not apply because the documents at issue reflected the two companies were “potentially adverse” as to compliance issues, and the two entities had separate general and compliance counsel); AU New Haven, LLC v. YKK Corp., 15-CV-03411 (GHW)(SN), 2016 WL 6820383, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 18, 2016) (concluding that entities “under common ownership must still demonstrate that [the common interest] rule applies, such as by making a showing that a common attorney was representing both corporate entities or that they otherwise shared a common legal interest”).

When a common defense arrangement has been established, communications from one client, agent, or attorney to another commonly interested client, agent, or attorney are protected under the attorney-client privilege. Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 90 (3d Cir. 1992) (extension allows clients facing a common litigation opponent to exchange privileged communications and work product without waiving protection in order to prepare a defense); Weber v. FujiFilm Med. Sys. USA, Inc., No. 3:10cv401 (JBA), 2011 WL 677282, at *2 (D. Conn. Jan. 24, 2011) (communications among corporate employees, although not directly to or from corporate counsel, can be privileged if those communications are made among employees who need to know the content and share the common interest); see also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 76 (2000). But see Prowess, Inc. v. Raysearch Labs. AB, Civil Case No. WDQ-11-1357, 2013 WL 509021, at *2-3 (D. Md. Feb. 11, 2013) (communications to non-attorneys may be privileged if the purpose is to facilitate legal services, but the facts did not support this where plaintiff failed to establish that counsel was involved in the communications or that the communications were conducted for the purpose of providing information to counsel);

In a case where parties are pooling information, confidentiality must still be maintained against those outside the common defense arrangement, because disclosure to a single non-privileged member or person outside the pool can constitute waiver of the information discussed in the outsider’s presence. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 76 cmt. c (2000). Thus, where parties to a common defense agreement are represented by different counsel, one attorney could void the privilege if a conflict of interest forced her to reveal confidential information about one of her non-clients within the common defense agreement. See, e.g., United States v. Almeida, 341 F.3d 1318, 1323-24 (11th Cir. 2003).

1. Waiver by Consent

The parties to a common defense agreement can waive the privilege voluntarily. Courts are split, however, over who possesses the actual ability to confer such consent. Some courts hold that each pool member retains the power to waive the privilege with respect to that member’s own communications. See, e.g., Great Am. Surplus Lines Ins. Co. v. Ace Oil Co., 120 F.R.D. 533, 536-38 (E.D. Cal. 1988); W. Fuels Ass’n v. Burlington N. R.R. Co., 102 F.R.D. 201, 203 (D. Wyo. 1984); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2328 (J. McNaughton rev. 1961). Likewise, a pool member who did not originate a communication does not have the implied authority to waive the privilege for that communication. See Interfaith Hous. Del., Inc. v. Town of Georgetown, 841 F. Supp. 1393, 1402 (D. Del. 1994) (predicting that the Delaware Supreme Court would hold, in a common defense arrangement, that waiver by one person of information shared in the arrangement does not constitute a waiver by any other party to the communication); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2328 (J. McNaughton rev. 1961). If several members’ communications have been mixed, then all of them must consent for effective waiver unless the non-consenting members’ contributions can be redacted. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 76 cmt. g (2000); 8 JOHN H. WIGMORE, EVIDENCE § 2328 (J. McNaughton rev. 1961).

Other courts require all clients to consent to a waiver. See United States v. Gonzalez, 669 F.3d 974 (9th Cir. 2012) (one party to a joint defense agreement cannot unilaterally waive privilege); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas 89-3 & 89-4, 902 F.2d 244, 249 (4th Cir. 1990) (common defense privilege cannot be waived without the consent of all parties); John Morrell & Co. v. Local Union 304A of United Food & Commercial Workers, 913 F.2d 544, 556 (8th Cir. 1990) (same); In re Jupiter Networks, Inc. Sec. Litig., Nos. C 06-4319 JW (PVT), C 08-00246 JW (PVT), 2009 WL 4644534, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 9, 2009) (noting same but finding that the attorney-client privilege and its exception did not apply to the communications at issue); Metro Wastewater Reclamation Dist. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 142 F.R.D. 471, 478 (D. Colo. 1992) (under Colorado law, a waiver requires the consent of all parties participating in the common defense).

2. Waiver by Subsequent Litigation

Subsequent litigation also operates to selectively waive the privilege among the members of the common defense arrangement. See Ohio-Sealy Mattress Mfg. Co. v. Kaplan, 90 F.R.D. 21, 29 (N.D. Ill. 1980); In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Dated Nov. 6, 1974, 406 F. Supp. 381, 393-94 (S.D.N.Y. 1975); Sec. Investor Prot. Corp. v. Stratton Oakmont, Inc., 213 B.R. 433, 439 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1997) (subsequent litigation between members of a common defense group operates to waive the common defense privilege to the extent joint information is at issue in new case). When litigation arises, each member can use shared information against the maker unless another arrangement has been made. Sec. Investor Prot. Corp., 213 B.R. at 439. The privilege remains effective against persons not within the common defense arrangement, however. Moreover, in a pooling arrangement there is no duty to share information, and thus information that is not shared as part of the common defense remains privileged even against the pool. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 76 cmt. e (2000). Similarly, sharing with only certain members of the pool retains the privilege against those members with whom no information was shared. Id.

3. Extent of Waiver

When waiver of the common defense information is demonstrated, the waiver normally extends only to the shared information and not to all relevant matters. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 76 cmt. g (2000). In contrast, waiver under the joint-defense privilege for co-clients normally reveals all relevant matters concerning the same subject matter (discussed in § II.A.3, above).

C. COMMON INTEREST DOCTRINE AND LITIGATION FUNDING

Litigation funding is the financing of litigation activities by third parties who otherwise have no connection with the litigation. Maya Steinitz, Whose Claim Is This Anyway? Third-Party Litigation Funding, 95 Minn. L. Rev. 1268, 1275-76 (2011). Generally, this third party receives a financial stake in the outcome of the case in exchange for funding. See id. at 1276. Litigation funding makes it possible for parties to litigate when they otherwise would be unable to do so due to exhaustion of funds. See id. Similarly, some parties that can afford to litigate turn to litigation funding to avoid the costs or risks associated with litigation. See id.

Courts are split as to whether documents related to the litigation funding relationship are protected by the attorney-client privilege and whether the disclosure of otherwise privileged documents to the litigation funder waives privilege. Some courts hold that litigation funding communications are covered by the attorney-client privilege based on the common interest exception. See Devon IT, Inc. v. IBM Corp., No. 10-2899, 2012 WL 4748160, at *1 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 27, 2012) (communications with funders and funding agreement drafts were protected by the attorney-privilege under the common interest exception); In re Int'l Oil Trading Co., LLC, 548 B.R. 825, 832-33 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2016) (holding that disclosure of privileged information to litigation funders did not lose privileged status because, under Florida law, common interest is applied to the more expansive common enterprise definition, rather than a narrow application that requires a common legal interest). Other courts have held that parties and litigation funders must share a common legal interest and not simply a financial interest. See Cohen v. Cohen, No. 09 Civ. 10230 (LAP), 2015 WL 745712, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 30, 2015) (communications between plaintiff and her litigation funder were not privileged because the two shared a common financial interest in the outcome of the litigation, not a shared legal strategy); Miller UK Ltd. v. Caterpillar, Inc., 17 F. Supp. 3d 711, 733 (N.D. Ill. 2014) (plaintiff waived attorney-client privilege over certain documents it shared with prospective funders because plaintiff sought funders for money, not legal advice or litigation strategies).

Courts that do not extend the attorney-client privilege to documents and communications shared with litigation funders may still find work product protection applicable. See Common Interest Extension Of Work Product Protection To Litigation Funding, § III.H, infra.

D. INSURANCE COMPANIES AND THE COMMON INTEREST DOCTRINE

The vast majority of insurance disputes that are litigated in federal court are there based on diversity jurisdiction. As a result, the courts generally apply state law to issues of attorney-client privilege pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 501. See Choice of Law: Identifying The Applicable Law, § VII.A, infra. There is, therefore, very limited federal common law regarding attorney-client privilege in the insurance context. In the area of insurance, it is important to know what states' laws may apply before communicating with a policyholder, insurer, or reinsurer. For example, a policyholder in Michigan, which does not generally protect communications between policyholders and insurers, may need to be careful about corresponding with its insurer in Illinois, which does generally protect such communications. Whether a communication is discoverable may depend on whether the discovery request emanates from a court in Michigan or one in Illinois. See generally Urban Outfitters, Inc. v. DPIC Cos., 203 F.R.D. 376 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (court in Illinois confronted conflict between Michigan and Illinois law of privilege, but did not decide issue because privilege, to the extent it existed, had been waived).

Whether the attorney-client privilege will protect a communication between and among policyholders, insurers, reinsurers, and brokers often depends upon whether the common interest doctrine applies to the situation presented. The question, therefore, is often whether the interests of the parties to the communication are sufficiently aligned for the doctrine to apply.

1. Protection of Insurer/Insured Communications from Third Parties

Where an insured communicates with its insurer for the purpose of establishing a defense, several courts have held that an insured's communication with its insurer remains privileged, at least where the communication is made for the specific purpose of obtaining legal advice or the provision of counsel. For example, in Linde Thomson Langworthy Kohn & Van Dyke, P.C. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 5 F.3d 1508, 1515 (D.C. Cir. 1993), the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia held:

An insured may communicate with its insurer for a variety of reasons, many of which have little to do with the pursuit of legal representation or the procurement of legal advice. Certainly, where the insured communicates with the insurer for the express purpose of seeking legal advice with respect to a concrete claim, or for the purpose of aiding an insurer-provided attorney in preparing a specific legal case, the law would exalt form over substance if it were to deny application of the attorney-client privilege.

Ark. 2006). Insured's recorded statement to insurer on the night of accident, for which insured was clearly at fault and which resulted in the death of two people, was "a step in the process of obtaining legal representation pursuant to the insurance contract" and therefore protected by the attorney-client privilege; summary of same and subsequent insurer investigator's report, including notes from witness interviews, were protected work product prepared in anticipation of litigation.

Goh v. CRE Acquisition, Inc., No. 02 C 4838, 2004 WL 765238, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 6, 2004). "To assert a privilege for a communication between an insured and an insurer [under Illinois law], one must establish: (1) the insured's identity; (2) the insurance carrier's identity; (3) the insurance carrier's duty to defend the insured; and (4) that a communication was made between insured and an agent of the insurance carrier.”) (internal citation omitted).

Am. Special Risk Ins. Co. v. Greyhound Dial Corp., No. 90 Civ. 2066 (RPP), 1995 WL 442151 (S.D.N.Y. July 24, 1995). Because the disclosure of the facts required to show the insured’s potential liability may be necessary to obtain that representation, such communications should be deemed in “pursuit of legal representation” and therefore privileged.

But see:

Camacho v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 287 F.R.D. 688, 693-94 (N.D. Ga. 2012). Communications between an insurer and joint outside defense counsel, hired to represent the insured, are not privileged in a subsequent bad faith action.

Cont’l Cas. Co. v. St. Paul Surplus Lines Ins. Co., 265 F.R.D. 510, 526-27 (E.D. Cal. 2010). Under California law, when a conflict of interest arises between the insured and insurer, the insurer must hire independent counsel for the insured, known as Cumis counsel; communications among a non-defending insurer, its insured, and the insured’s Cumis counsel were not privileged.

Other courts have rejected the proposition that the interests of the insured and insurer are sufficiently aligned for the privilege to be maintained. See SR Int’l Bus. Ins. Co. v. World Trade Ctr. Props. LLC, No. 01 CIV. 9291 (JSM), 2002 WL 1334821, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. June 19, 2002) (rejecting claim of common interest privilege between World Trade Center lessees and insurance brokers invoked against insurers for lack of identity of interest); Cigna Ins. Co. v. Cooper Tires & Rubber, Inc., No. 3:99CV7397, 2001 WL 640703, at *1 (N.D. Ohio May 24, 2001) (insured and insurance broker do not share common-interest privilege); Go Med. Indus. Pty, Ltd. v. C.R. Bard, Inc., No. 3:95 MC 522, 1998 WL 1632525, at *3 (D. Conn. Aug. 14, 1998), rev’d in part on other grounds, 250 F.3d 763 (Fed. Cir. 2000) (“An insurer’s contractual obligation to pay its insured’s litigation expenses does not, by itself, create a common interest between the insurer and the insured that is sufficient to warrant application of the common interest rule of the attorney client privilege.”).

Some courts have rejected the extension of a privilege to insurer/insured communications on the additional ground that such communications are made for a business, and not a legal, purpose. See Calabro v. Stone, 225 F.R.D. 96, 98 (E.D.N.Y. 2004) (insured’s recorded message giving notice of claim was not made for purposes of obtaining legal advice); Bovis Lend Lease, LMB, Inc. v. Seasons Contracting Corp., No. 00 Civ. 9212, 2002 WL 31729693 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 4, 2002) (communications between insured and insurer were either for business purposes or not prepared in anticipation of litigation); Aiena v. Olsen, 194 F.R.D. 134 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding that defendants failed to establish that the advocacy of their position to the insurer was intended either to obtain legal advice or to convey information regarding the claims for the use of potential future defense counsel); In re Imperial Corp. of Am., 167 F.R.D. 447, 452 (S.D. Cal. 1995) (“The letters were written for the purpose of apprising American Casualty of the status of the case, not for seeking or imparting legal advice.”); In re Pfizer Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 90 Civ. 1260, 1993 WL 561125, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 23, 1993) (“Pfizer’s communications are for the purpose of seeking insurance coverage, not legal advice, from its carriers. As such, they do not fall within the scope of the attorney-client privilege.”).

2. The Insurer’s Access to the Insured’s Privileged Communications

In Waste Management, Inc. v. International Surplus Lines Insurance Co., 579 N.E.2d 322, 328 (Ill. 1991), the Illinois Supreme Court upheld an order in a coverage dispute compelling an insured to produce its attorney’s files from the underlying action. The court based its decision on the existence of a policy cooperation clause requiring the insured to turn over such documentation, and on the common interest doctrine.

Similarly, in Independent Petrochemical Corp. v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 654 F. Supp. 1334 (D.D.C. 1986), the court found that a coverage dispute did not obviate the common interest between the insurer and insured. There, the court held:

[W]hile those documents may be privileged from discovery by party opponents in the underlying claims, they cannot be privileged from carriers obligated to shoulder the burden of defending against those claims. . . . The documents were generated in anticipation of minimizing something of common interest to both parties in this suit: exposure to liability from tort claimants.

Id. at 1365; see also Vicor Corp. v. Vigilant Ins. Co., 674 F.3d 1, 18-19 (1st Cir. 2012) (applying Massachusetts law) (an insurer could discover privileged documents from its insured where they were co-clients of defense counsel in the underlying lawsuit); Coregis Ins. Co. v. Lewis, Johs, Avallone, Aviles & Kaufman, LLP, No. 01 CV 3844 (SJ), 2006 WL 2135782, at *15-16 (E.D.N.Y. July 28, 2006) (common interest doctrine permitted insurer to use an otherwise privileged report from insured’s attorney to deny coverage); Dendema v. Denbur, Inc., No. 00-C-4438, 2002 WL 370219, at *1 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 8, 2002) (holding insurer and insured had a common interest in defending the third-party lawsuit “despite the coverage dispute that developed, so documents created during the lawsuit were not privileged between the parties”); EDO Corp. v. Newark Ins. Co., 145 F.R.D. 18, 24 (D. Conn. 1992) (compelling disclosure of insured’s communications because insured could not “demonstrate that its attorneys prepared these documents in anticipation of a lawsuit with the . . . insurers”); Metro Wastewater Reclamation Dist. v. U.S. Fire Ins. Co., 142 F.R.D. 471 (D. Colo. 1992) (rejecting insured’s claim of privilege and relying upon common interest doctrine to require insured to produce documents arising from settlement with third party where insurer had refused coverage); Truck Ins. Exch. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 66 F.R.D. 129, 132-33 (E.D. Pa. 1975) (“It thus seems clear that, in relation to counsel retained to defend the claim, the insurance company and the policy-holder are in privity. Counsel represents both, and, at least in the situation where the policy-holder does not have separate representation, there can be no privilege on the part of the company to require the lawyer to withhold information from his other client, the policy-holder.”); In re Envntl. Pres. Ass’n, Adv. No. 10-00751, 2011 WL 2893089 (Bankr. D. Md. July 15, 2011) (pursuant to the common interest doctrine, counsel hired by insurer was required to produce its file to the insurer, even though counsel did not defend the insured in all aspects of the legal proceeding).

Numerous courts have rejected this approach, however, citing a lack of common interest between the parties. See CAMICO Mut. Ins. Co. v. Heffler, Radetich & Saitta, LLP, No. 11-4753, 2013 WL 315716, at *3-6 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 28, 2013) (merely paying defense counsel's fees does not create a joint attorney-client relationship with an insurer and an insured where there are no other indications that such a relationship exists); First Pac. Networks, Inc. v. Atl. Mut. Ins. Co., 163 F.R.D. 574 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (insurer's reservation of rights injected tension into insurer-insured relationship, entitling insured to withhold communications with attorney); N. River Ins. Co. v. Columbia Cas. Co., No. 90 Civ. 2518, 1995 WL 5792, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 5, 1995) ("The insurer may have the same 'desire' as the insured that the insured not be found liable for damages in an underlying action, but this does not qualify as an identical legal interest."); Int'l Ins. Co. v. Newmount Mining Corp., 800 F. Supp. 1195 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (insurer's desire for successful defense of underlying action an insufficient common interest to warrant invasion of attorney-client relationship); Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 660 N.E.2d 765, 769 (Ohio Ct. C.P. 1993) (rejecting the application of the common-interest doctrine, because, since this was an embittered dispute over whether coverage applies, the parties could not be more at odds, rendering any reference to a common interest "somewhat laughable").

Other courts have rejected the proposition that cooperation clauses could require the production of privileged materials. Remington Arms Co. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 142 F.R.D. 408 (D. Del. 1992) (concluding that a cooperation clause did not imply a duty to produce documents otherwise protected by the attorney-client privilege – the insurer did not seek the documents to cooperate on underlying litigation but to succeed in the coverage suit with the insured); Bituminous Cas. Corp. v. Tonka Corp., 140 F.R.D. 381 (D. Minn. 1992) (absent a showing that the parties intended waiver, cooperation clause did not contractually waive privilege); see also Rockwell Int'l Corp. v. Super. Court, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 153 (Cal. Ct. App. 1994) (rejecting Waste Management's rule that a cooperation clause imposes a broad duty of cooperation that requires an insured to disclose communications with defense counsel in an underlying action); E. Air Lines, Inc. v. U.S. Aviation Underwriters, Inc., 716 So.2d 340 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1998) (cooperation clause applies only when the insured and insurer are in a fiduciary relationship; where the fiduciary relationship exists, the court may compel production of documents as between the two parties; where it does not exist and the parties are in an adversarial position, the attorney-client privilege is not waived); Wisconsin v. Hydrite Chem. Co., 582 N.W.2d 411 (Wis. Ct. App. 1998) (cooperation clause does not supersede the attorney-client privilege); . See also Am. Re-Ins. Co. v. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Co., 40 A.D.3d 486 (N.Y. App. Div. 2007) (court rejected reinsurer's affirmative use of common interest doctrine to compel insurer/cedent to produce privileged documents).

3. Privilege Issues Arising Between Insurers and Reinsurers

Insurers have invoked the common interest privilege to shield disclosures made to reinsurers from discovery by insureds. Several courts have found that the insurer-reinsurer relationship involves a common interest sufficient to preserve the privilege.

See:

Am. Safety Cas. Ins. Co. v. City of Waukegan, No. 07 C 1990, 2011 WL 180561, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 19, 2011). An insurance company sharing emails regarding potential settlement with a reinsurance broker who served as the company's contact with its reinsurers did not waive the privilege.

Emp'r Reins. Corp. v. Laurier Indem. Co., No. 8:03CV1650T26MSS, 2006 WL 532113 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 3, 2006). Communications between insurer and reinsurer protected by common interest doctrine, unless their interests actually, rather than hypothetically, diverge.

Minn. Sch. Bds. Ass'n Ins. Trust v. Emp'rs Ins. Co., 183 F.R.D. 627 (N.D. Ill. 1999). No waiver of privilege where insurer provided documents to reinsurer intending and expecting confidentiality and protection from common adversaries.

Great Am. Surplus Lines, Inc. v. Ace Oil Co., 120 F.R.D. 533 (E.D. Cal. 1988). Disclosure of documents by insurer to reinsurer did not constitute waiver of privilege because the reinsurer, which had a financial stake in the outcome of the underlying litigation, had a "need to know" the information.

Durham Indus., Inc. v. N. River Ins. Co., No. 79 Civ. 1705, 1980 WL 112701 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 21, 1980). Privileged information disclosed by insurer to reinsurer not discoverable by policyholder in coverage dispute over surety bond. The common interest privilege applies. "Here, where the reinsurers bear a percentage of liability on the bond, their interest is clearly identical to that of the [defendant insurer]."

Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co. v. Stauffer Chem. Co., Nos. 701223, 701224, 1991 WL 230742 (Conn. Super. Ct. Nov. 4, 1991). Disclosure of privileged documents by an insurer to its reinsurer did not waive the privilege. The interests of the insurer and reinsurer were "inextricably linked by the reinsurance treaty" that imposed an obligation on the reinsurer to bear a 7.5% share of any liability imposed on the insurer.

But see:

Progressive Cas. Ins. Co. v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp., 2014 U.S. Dist. Lexis 140709 (N.D. Iowa Oct. 3, 2014). Communications between insurer and reinsurers not protected by work product doctrine where they were prepared in the ordinary course of business to provide case updates to reinsurers pursuant to the reinsurance agreements.

The Regence Grp. v. TIG Specialty Ins. Co., No. 07-1337-HA, 2010 WL 476646, at *2-3 (D. Or. Feb. 2, 2010). Court denied insurer's motion for protective order to withhold, in litigation with insured, privileged documents exchanged with reinsurers, where insurer engaged in two contested arbitrations with its reinsurer.

Reliance Ins. Co. v. Am. Lintex Corp., No. 00 Civ. 5568, 2001 WL 604080 (S.D.N.Y. May 31, 2001). Court rejected insurer's argument that it and the reinsurer shared a "unity of interest." While their commercial interests coincided, no evidence demonstrated that the insurer and reinsurer shared the same counsel or coordinated legal strategy in any way.

Front Royal Ins. Co. v. Gold Players, Inc., 187 F.R.D. 252 (W.D. Va. 1999). Insurer sought to shield reports sent to and received from its reinsurer regarding a claim by insured. The court rejected insurer's argument that these reports were shielded by the common interest doctrine, stating that insurer “seeks to use the common interest rule to protect documents which were created in the ordinary course of business under the contractual obligations between insurer and reinsurer.”

McLean v. Cont’l Cas. Co., No. 95 Civ. 10415 HB HBP, 1996 WL 684209, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 25, 1996). “[T]he relationship between insurer and reinsurer is simply not sufficient to give rise to the common interest privilege.”

N. River Ins. Co. v. Columbia Cas. Co., No. 90 Civ. 2518, 1995 WL 5792, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 5, 1995). “[T]he interests of the ceding insurer and the reinsurer may be antagonistic in some respects and compatible in others.”

Allendale Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bull Data Sys., Inc., 152 F.R.D. 132 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (internal citations omitted). While noting that the common interest doctrine could exist between an insurer and its reinsurers, the court held that the insurer’s and reinsurer’s interests were not identical in this case. “In general, different persons or companies have a common interest where they have an identical legal interest in a subject matter of a communication between an attorney and a client concerning legal advice. The interest must be identical, not similar, and be legal, not solely commercial.” Here, there was no consultation between the attorneys for the purpose of developing a joint defense against a litigation opponent or for the purpose of maintaining a common legal interest; the communications were normal communications between parties with a contractual obligation to keep each other informed about insurance claims.

N. River Ins. Co. v. Phil. Reins. Corp., 797 F. Supp. 363 (D.N.J. 1992). In a dispute over reinsurance coverage, reinsurer sought privileged documents that were created by primary insurer in proceedings with its insured. The court refused to compel disclosure under the common interest doctrine, finding that reinsurer had no input into the relationship between insurer and its counsel and did not control the relationship.

When an insurer communicates with its reinsurers through a broker, most courts consider the broker a communicating agent and do not find that use of the broker waived the privilege. Am. Safety Cas. Ins. Co. v. City of Waukegan, No. 07 C 1990, 2011 WL 180561 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 19, 2011); Minn. Sch. Bds. Ass’n Ins. Trust v. Emp’rs Ins. Co., 183 F.R.D. 627 (N.D. Ill. 1999); Certain Underwriters at Lloyd’s v. Fid. & Cas. Co. of N.Y., No. 89 C 0876, 1997 WL 769467 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 4, 1997); U.S. Fire Ins. Co. v. Gen. Reins. Corp., No. 88 CIV. 6457 (JFK), 1989 WL 82415 (S.D.N.Y. July 20, 1989). But see United States v. Pepper’s Steel & Alloys, Inc., Nos. 87-1306-CV, 85-0571-CV, 84-1443-CV, 86-1531-CV, 1991 WL 1302864 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 20, 1991) (transmission of privileged information from insurer through Lloyd’s-approved broker to reinsurers waived the privilege).

When an insurer provides privileged material to its reinsurer, and subsequently ends up in a dispute with the reinsurer, is the privilege waived as to the reinsurer? As discussed above, privilege over information actually shared with others in a common interest arrangement is waived when the parties become adverse, at least with respect to those previously sharing the common interest protection. See Waiver By Subsequent Litigation, § II.B.2, supra. The privilege may also be waived with respect to others when an insurer and its reinsurer become adverse. See Regence Grp. v. TIG Specialty Ins. Co., No. 07-1337-HA, 2010 WL 476646, at *2-3 (D. Or. Feb. 4, 2010) (denying insurer’s motion for protective order to withhold, in litigation with insured, privileged documents exchanged with reinsurers, where insurer subsequently engaged in two contested arbitrations with reinsurers).

However, courts will likely enforce the terms of any agreement that the insurer and reinsurer entered into regarding the use of disclosed privileged information. In AIU Insurance Co. v. TIG Insurance Co., No. 07 Civ. 7052 (SHB)(HBP), 2008 WL 5062030 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 25, 2008), the court addressed this issue. AIU had settled an underlying asbestos claim and requested reimbursement from its reinsurer TIG. In response to TIG's request for information regarding when AIU first learned of the claim, AIU sent TIG its coverage counsel's opinion regarding the claim, which disclosed that AIU had learned about the claim many years earlier. TIG then requested a claim audit, which AIU granted, but only after TIG signed a confidentiality agreement in which TIG agreed that AIU's disclosure of coverage counsel's documents would not constitute waiver of the attorney-client privilege. AIU then provided TIG access to otherwise privileged material. In subsequent litigation, TIG argued that AIU had waived the privilege as to all privileged material disclosed to TIG. The court held that AIU waived privilege regarding the coverage opinion disclosed prior to the confidentiality agreement, but not with respect to material disclosed afterwards.

III. THE WORK PRODUCT DOCTRINE

The work product doctrine, established in Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1947), can also be a valuable means of protecting confidential documents. While the work product doctrine does shield an attorney's mental impressions, opinions and legal conclusions from discovery, work product is not, like attorney-client communications, privileged. Mfg. Admin. & Mgmt. Sys., Inc. v. ICT Grp., Inc., 212 F.R.D. 110, 112 (E.D.N.Y. 2002). Rather, work product is given qualified protection from discovery as a concession to the necessities of the adversary system. As one court recently explained: "Our adversarial system of justice cannot function properly unless an attorney is given a zone of privacy within which to prepare the client's case and plan strategy, without undue interference." Davis v. Emery Air Freight Corp., 212 F.R.D. 432, 434 (D. Me. 2003) (quoting In re San Juan Dupont Plaza Hotel Fire Litig., 859 F.2d 1007, 1014 (1st Cir. 1988)); see United States v. Noble, 422 U.S. 225, 238 (1975) ("At its core, the work-product doctrine shelters the mental processes of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which he can analyze and prepare his client's case.") (quotations omitted). Courts widely echo this "zone of privacy" rationale for the work product doctrine. See:

In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 343 F.3d 658, 661-62 (3d Cir. 2003). "The work-product doctrine is governed by a uniform federal standard set forth in Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3) and shelters the mental processes of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which he can analyze and prepare his client's case."

Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 864 (D.C. Cir. 1980). "[Work product] doctrine stands in contrast to the attorney-client privilege; rather than protecting confidential communications from the client, it provides a working attorney with a 'zone of privacy' within which to think, plan, weigh facts and evidence, candidly evaluate a client's case, and prepare legal theories."

United States v. Adlman, 134 F.2d 1194, 1197 (2d Cir. 1998). The work product doctrine is intended to preserve a zone of privacy in which a lawyer can prepare and develop legal theories and strategy "with an eye toward litigation," free from unnecessary intrusion by their adversaries.

Feacher v. Intercont'l Hotels Grp., No. 3:06-CV-0877 (TJM/DEP), 2007 WL 3104329, at *4 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 22, 2007). "In order to preserve the integrity of the work product doctrine and the zone of privacy surrounding an attorney's preparation of a case on behalf of his or her client, I respectfully reject those cases which make the distinction between purely factual witness accounts and reports revealing mental impressions[.]”

Simmons, Inc. v. Bombardier, Inc., 221 F.R.D. 4 (D.D.C. 2004). “The work-product privilege is designed to ‘balance the needs of the adversarial system’ by ‘safeguarding the fruits of an attorney’s trial preparation’ while serving the general interest in ‘revealing all true and material facts relevant to the resolution of a dispute.’” (quoting In re Subpoenas Duces Tecum, 738 F.2d 1367, 1371 (D.C.Cir.1984)).

In re Gabapentin Patent Litig., 214 F.R.D. 178, 183 (D.N.J. 2003). Describing policies underlying work product doctrine, including providing an attorney privacy in which to develop client’s case.

Lifewise Master Funding v. Telebank, 206 F.R.D. 298, 304 (D. Utah 2002). “The work-product privilege protects against invading the privacy of an attorney’s course of preparation and where the privilege exists the burden is on the party seeking to invade the privilege to establish adequate reasons for production. However, the party asserting the work-product privilege has the burden of showing the applicability of the doctrine.”

Iowa Prots. & Advocacy Servs., Inc., 206 F.R.D. 630, 640 (S.D. Iowa 2002). “The work-product doctrine was designed to prevent ‘unwarranted inquiries into the files and mental impressions of an attorney,’ and recognizes that it is ‘essential that a lawyer work with a certain degree of privacy, free from unnecessary intrusion by opposing parties and their counsel.’” (quoting Simon v. G.D. Searle & Co., 816 F.2d 397, 400 (8th Cir. 1987)).

The work product doctrine is broader than the attorney-client privilege in that it protects a wider array of materials than just communications between client and attorney. See SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Pentech Pharm., Inc., No. 00 C 2855, 2001 WL 1397876, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 6, 2001); Strougo, 199 F.R.D. at 520 (citing In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 219 F.3d 175, 190 (2d Cir. 2000) (citing Hickman, 329 U.S. at 508, and United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 238 n.11 (1975))); see also Judicial Watch, Inc. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 337 F. Supp. 2d 183, 185 (D.D.C. 2004), rev’d in part on other grounds, 432 F.3d 366, 371-72 (D.C. Cir. 2005) (explaining that the work product privilege is broader than the deliberative process privilege). However, in Hickman the Supreme Court indicated that this protection is not absolute, and that discovery might be permitted if the party seeking access established adequate reasons. Hickman, 329 U.S. at 511-12. In this way, the work product doctrine “balances the interest of the system in providing lawyers with a degree of privacy free of unnecessary intrusion by opposing parties against the societal interest in ensuring that all parties obtain knowledge of the relevant facts involved in a dispute.” Emery Air Freight Corp., 212 F.R.D. at 434 (quoting San Juan Dupont Plaza Hotel Fire Litig., 859 F.2d at 1014); see also Pamida, Inc. v. E.S. Originals, 281 F.3d 726, 732 (8th Cir. 2002) (“When a party seeks a greater advantage from its control over work-product than the law must provide to maintain a healthy adversary system, the privilege should give way.”) (quoting In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 818 (D.C. Cir. 1982)).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(3) substantially codified the work product doctrine set forth in Hickman for tangible materials, Garcia v. City of El Centro, 214 F.R.D. 587, 591 (S.D. Cal. 2003); Anderson v. Hale, 202 F.R.D. 548, 554 (N.D. Ill. 2001), though the work product protection provided under Hickman is broader than that provided under Rule 26. See Stanley v. Trinchard, No. Civ.A. 02-1235, 2004 WL 1562850, at *2 (E.D. La. July 12, 2004) (“Rule 26(b)(3) only provides protection for the disclosure of tangible things. For protection for nontangible work product, Mr. Smith must look to Hickman v. Taylor . . .). Frank Betz Assocs. v. Jim Walter Homes, Inc., 226 F.R.D. 533, 534 (D.S.C. 2005) (“When applying the work product privilege to such nontangible information, the principles enunciated in Hickman apply, as opposed to Rule 26(b)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which applies only to ‘documents and tangible things.’”) (quoting United States v. 266 Tonawana Trail, 95 F.3d 422, 428 n.10 (6th Cir. 1996)); see also The Intangible Work Product Doctrine, § III.A.1, infra. In relevant part, Rule 26(b)(3) provides:

(A) Documents and Tangible Things. Ordinarily, a party may not discover documents and tangible things that are prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial by or for another party or its representative (including the other party’s attorney, consultant, surety, indemnitor, insurer, or agent). But, subject to Rule 26(b)(4), those materials may be discovered if:

- (i) they are otherwise discoverable under Rule 26(b)(1); and
- (ii) the party shows that it has substantial need for the materials to prepare its case and cannot, without undue hardship, obtain their substantial equivalent by other means.

(B) Protection Against Disclosure. If the court orders discovery of those materials, it must protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of a party’s attorney or other representative concerning the litigation.

(C) Previous Statement. Any party or other person may, on request and without the required showing, obtain the person’s own previous statement about the action or its subject matter. If the request is refused, the person may move for a court order, and Rule 37(a)(5) applies to the award of expenses. A previous statement is either:

- (i) a written statement that the person has signed or otherwise adopted or approved; or
- (ii) a contemporaneous stenographic, mechanical, electrical, or other recording – or a transcription of it – that recites substantially verbatim the person’s oral statement.

FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3).

Interpreting Rule 26(b)(3), courts have generally distilled the applicability of the work product doctrine into a three-part test. To qualify for the protections of the work product doctrine, courts hold that items must be: (1) documents or tangible things; (2) prepared by or for a party (i.e., by or for a party or a party’s representative); and (3) prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial. Aktiebolag v. Andrx Pharm., Inc., 208 F.R.D. 92, 104 (S.D.N.Y. 2002); Anderson, 202 F.R.D. at 554. Although, if read literally, Rule 26(b)(3) applies only to tangible things, courts widely recognize that the work product doctrine encompasses intangible information as well.

See:

In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 343 F.3d 658, 662-63 (3d Cir. 2003). It is “clear” from Hickman that work product protection extends to both tangible and intangible work product.

Lawrence v. Suffolk Cty., 2022 WL 855380, *2 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 23, 2022). “Hickman privileges intangible items, including an attorney’s mental impressions.”

Stanley v. Trinchard, No. Civ.A. 02-1235, 2004 WL 1562850, at 2 (E.D. La. July 12, 2004). Rule 26(b)(3) provides protection only for disclosure of tangible things. Protection of intangible work product follows from Hickman v. Taylor.

Work product also may include material prepared by non-attorneys so long as it was prepared in anticipation of litigation. See Work Product Must Be Prepared By Or For A Party Or By Or For Its Representative, § III.A.2, infra. See also The Intangible Work Product Doctrine, § III.A.1, infra.

Work product protection is not absolute. Courts may require the disclosure of materials that would otherwise meet the criteria for work product protection, if the moving party can demonstrate: (1) substantial need of the materials, and (2) that a substantial equivalent cannot be obtained without undue hardship. In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 343 F.3d 658, 663 (3d Cir. 2003); see Ordinary & Opinion Work Product, § III.B, infra; Scope of Work Product Protection, § III.D, infra. However, courts are required under Rule 26(b)(3) “to protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, and opinions, or legal theories [referred to as ‘core’ or ‘opinion’ work product] of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation.” FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3).

A. DEFINING WORK PRODUCT

1. The Intangible Work Product Doctrine

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(3), as drafted, work product is composed of “documents and tangible things.” Taken literally, Rule 26(b)(3) would not apply to information in an unwritten form. 6 JAMES WM. MOORE ET AL., MOORE’S FEDERAL PRACTICE ¶ 26.70 (2019). Thus, courts must look back to Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1947), for guidance when dealing with work product protection of intangible things (such as attorney recollections or other unrecorded information). See id. (because of its wording, Rule 26(b)(3) leaves the area of unrecorded work product unchanged and subject to Hickman). Federal Rule of Evidence 502 specifically includes intangible work product. FED. R. EVID. 502(g)(2) (“‘work product protection’ means the protection that applicable law provides for tangible material (or its intangible equivalent) prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial”).

Under Hickman, work product encompasses unrecorded and intangible forms of information. There, the Court held that attempts to secure “personal recollections” prepared by counsel without any necessity or justification were prohibited. 329 U.S. at 510.

Despite being grounded on different precedents, the protections afforded tangible and intangible materials are essentially the same in most cases. The Third Circuit has held that “[i]t is clear” from Hickman that work product protection extends to both tangible and intangible work product. In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 343 F.3d 658, 662 (3d. Cir. 2003); see also U.S. Info. Sys., Inc. v. Int’l Bhd. of Elec. Workers Local Union No. 3, No. 00Civ.4763(RMB)(JCF), 2002 WL 31296430, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 11, 2002) (holding that work product doctrine was informed by case law beyond Rule 26(b)(3) and applied to intangible things such as conversations).

See:

Frank Betz Assocs. v. Jim Walter Homes, Inc., 226 F.R.D. 533, 534 (D.S.C. 2005). The amount of a company’s litigation reserve was protected by the work product doctrine because it reflected counsel’s mental impressions.

Banks v. Office of Senate Sergeant-at-Arms, 222 F.R.D. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 2004). Deposition questions directed to an agency employee would be improper if the answer would tend to disclose the agency’s attorney’s intangible work product (counsel’s mental impressions, conclusions, opinions or legal theories).

U.S. Info. Sys., Inc. v. Int’l Bhd. of Elec. Workers Local Union No. 3, No. 00Civ.4763(RMB)(JCF), 2002 WL 31296430, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 11, 2002). Oral communications between plaintiffs’ counsel and employee of litigation support vendor that reflect the thought processes of counsel were protected work product: “The fortuity of whether an attorney’s thought processes have been memorialized should not determine whether they are laid bare to his or her adversary.”

One common type of intangible work product is unrecorded recollections of attorneys. Some commentators have noted that unrecorded work product is really oral opinion work product. See Jeff A. Anderson et al., The Work Product Doctrine, 68 CORNELL L. REV. 760, 842-43 (1983). Such oral materials or recollections necessarily include the mental impressions of the attorney. Id. at 839. When an attorney is asked about her recollection of an interview, the attorney will only recount those items which she analyzed and deemed significant enough to remember. Thus, when recounted, the underlying information takes on aspects of opinion work product as it is strained through the attorney’s mental processes, perceptions, and evaluations. Id. As a result, unrecorded information may more easily qualify as opinion work product and therefore gain extra protection. Apparently recognizing this, a few courts have included such material within the category of opinion work product. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Nov. 8, 1979, 622 F.2d 933, 935 (6th Cir. 1980) (defining work product as “the tangible and intangible material which reflects an attorney’s efforts at investigating and preparing a case, including one’s pattern of investigation, assembling of information, determination of the relevant facts, preparation of legal theories, planning of strategy, and recording of mental impressions”). See also United States v. One Tract of Real Prop., 95 F.3d 422, 428 (6th Cir. 1996) (the broader work-product doctrine outlined in Hickman protects reflections and recollections of an attorney that have never been written down); Special Circumstances – Rule 30(b)(6) Depositions And Depositions Of Counsel, § V.B, infra; Selection Of Documents As Opinion Work Product, § III.B.1.a, infra.

2. Work Product Must Be Prepared By or For a Party or By or For Its Representative.

Although often referred to as the “attorney work product” doctrine, that is a misleading misnomer. Work product protection extends to any materials prepared in anticipation of litigation by or for a party.

See:

In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 343 F.3d 658, 662-63 (3d Cir. 2003). Work product protection “extends beyond materials prepared by an attorney to include materials prepared by an attorney’s agents and consultants.”

United Coal Cos. v. Powell Constr. Co., 839 F.2d 958, 966 (3d Cir. 1988). Heightened protection for opinion work product applies to the “mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories” of a party or its agent.

United States v. AT&T, 642 F.2d 1285 (D.C. Cir. 1980). The work product protection developed in Hickman encompasses nonparty work product.

In re Payment Card Interchange Fee and Merchant Discount Antitrust Litig., No. 05-MD-1720 (MKB), 2018 WL 1162552, at *5-6 (E.D.N.Y. Feb. 26, 2018). Non-attorney’s materials were protected by the work product doctrine because they were created for litigation.

In re LDK Solar Securities Litigation, No. C07-5182-WHA (BZ), 2010 WL 114009, at 1 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 7, 2010). Rule 26(b)(3) provides protection to documents prepared by a party’s employee, even where the documents were not prepared at an attorney’s request or for an attorney’s use.

Angel Learning, Inc. v. Houghton Mifflin Harcourt Pub. Co., No. 1:08-cv-01259-LJM-JMS, 2010 WL 1579666, at *1 (S.D. Ind. Apr. 19, 2010). The work product doctrine applies to documents prepared by a party in anticipation of litigation, even where counsel is not directly involved in preparing the documents.

Protected work product only includes materials prepared in anticipation of litigation. See Work Product Must Be Prepared In Anticipation Of Imminent Litigation, § III.A.3, infra. As a practical matter, demonstrating that material prepared by a non-lawyer was prepared in anticipation of litigation may be more difficult. However, in a case involving agents of an attorney, the Supreme Court explained the importance of protecting the work product of such agents:

At its core, the work-product doctrine shelters the mental processes of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which he can analyze and prepare his client’s case. But the doctrine is an intensely practical one, grounded in the realities of litigation in our adversary system. One of those realities is that attorneys often must rely on the assistance of investigators and other agents in the compilation of materials in preparation for trial. It is therefore necessary that the doctrine protect material prepared by agents for the attorney as well as those prepared by the attorney himself.

United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 238-39 (1975).

Some courts strictly apply Rule 26(b)(3)'s use of the term "party" to preclude non-parties from asserting work product protection. "[D]ocuments prepared by one who is not a party to the present suit are wholly unprotected by Rule 26(b)(3) even though the person may be a party to a closely related lawsuit in which he will be disadvantaged if he must disclose in the present suit." Ramsey v. NYP Holdings, Inc., No. 00 Civ.3478(VM)(MHD), 2002 WL 1402055, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. June 27, 2002) (noting "[t]his conclusion has been adhered to by the Supreme Court in dictum, by at least one circuit court and by numerous district courts") (citations omitted). See also In re Cal. Aeroflex, 219 F.R.D. 66, 68-69 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (communications between non-parties are not protected even if they are initiated or requested by a party or a party's counsel); Klein v. Holem, No. 02 C 50281, 2002 WL 31956039, at *3 (N.D. Ill. West2019) (criticizing this interpretation and suggesting a court could issue a protective order to provide protection anyway).

Some courts have noted that the court's ability to preclude or limit discovery on a showing of "good cause" may blunt the potential harshness of this interpretation. Ramsey v. NYP Holdings, Inc., No. 00 Civ.3478(VM)(MHD), 2002 WL 1402055, at *6. See also In re Student Fin. Corp., No. 02-11620-JBR, 2006 WL 3484387 (E.D. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(c) provides that a "court may, for good cause, issue an order to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense." Rule 45(c)(3), which permits a court to quash or modify a subpoena that subjects a person to undue burden, may also be used. See Asarco, LLC v. Ams. Mining Corp., No. MS 07-6289-EJL-MHW, 2007 WL 3504774 (D. Idaho Nov. 15, 2007) (granting protective order on the basis of the work product doctrine even though the party seeking protection was not a party to the litigation).

A plaintiff who creates work-product material before hiring an attorney is still permitted to take advantage of the work-product doctrine. Bahrami v. Maxie Price Chevrolet-Oldsmobile, Inc., No. 1:11-CV-4483-SCJ-AJB, 2013 WL 3800093, at *6 (N.D. Ga. July 19, 2013) (secret records of conversations made by plaintiff, a non-lawyer, were protected work product created in anticipation of litigation). Similarly, a bankruptcy trustee may assert work product protection for documents prepared by the debtor and a creditors' committee before the debtors' plan was confirmed, although debtor and committee no longer exist, because the trustee is the successor-in-interest and succeeds to their right to assert the work product doctrine. Osherow v. Vann (In re Hardwood P-G, Inc.), 403 B.R. 445, 464-65 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2009).

The work product doctrine does not differ when applied to in-house rather than outside counsel. See Shelton v. Am. Motors Corp., 805 F.2d 1323, 1328 (8th Cir. 1986).

3. Work Product Must Be Prepared in Anticipation of Imminent Litigation.

It is important to note that the attorney-client privilege protects communications between a client and a lawyer relating to all kinds of legal services, while the work product doctrine protects only litigation-related materials.

But see:

Adair v. EOT Prod. Co., 294 F.R.D. 1, 5-6 (W.D. Va. 2013). To qualify as "litigation," an administrative hearing must be adversarial (i.e., involve a claim prosecuted by one party against another or claims made by multiple parties with opposing claims to a particular interest. Hearings before the Virginia Gas and Oil Board were not adversarial in nature and work product protection did not apply to documents prepared for the hearings.

“The decision whether documents were prepared in anticipation of litigation varies depending on the nature of the claim and the type of information sought and, therefore, turns on the facts of each case.” Abdallah, 2000 WL 33249254, at *4. The determination of whether a document has been prepared in anticipation of litigation often depends upon both the imminence of the anticipated litigation and the motivation behind the preparation to the material to be shielded from discovery. United States ex rel. Fago v. M & T Mortg. Corp., 238 F.R.D. 3, 7 (D.D.C. 2006) (attorney’s interview notes made after service of qui tam complaint and during investigation into allegations of complaint were protected work product where it was clear that interviews and notes of interviews would not have occurred but for the present litigation), overruled on other grounds by Schmidt v. Solis, 272 F.R.D. 1, 2-3 (D.D.C. 2010); Wultz v. Bank of China Ltd., 979 F. Supp. 2d 479, 488 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (noting that the Second Circuit has interpreted the “in anticipation of litigation” requirement for work product protection broadly; documents should therefore be deemed prepared in anticipation of litigation if the document can fairly be said to have been prepared or obtained because of the prospect of litigation depending on the facts and circumstances of the case); Robinson v. Tex. Auto. Dealers Ass’n, 214 F.R.D. 432, 442 n.6 (E.D. Tex. 2003) (noting that this factor has both a temporal and motivating factor), vacated on other grounds, No. Civ. A. 5:97-CV-273, 2003 WL 21909777, at *1 (E.D. Tex July 28, 2003).

a. Required Imminence of Litigation

To establish that a document was prepared in anticipation of litigation, a party must demonstrate that the threat of litigation was impending. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3)(A); Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1947). Courts perform a case-by-case analysis to determine if the anticipated litigation has the requisite level of imminence. A general fear of ever-present litigation in the future will not meet the anticipation requirement. In re Gabapentin Patent Litig., 214 F.R.D. 178, 183 (D.N.J. 2003) (“In general, though, a party must show more than a remote prospect, an inchoate possibility, or a likely chance of litigation.”). Bare assertions in contracts indicating the possibility of litigation will not automatically entitle contemporaneous documents to work product protection. See Kingsway Fin. Servs., Inc. v. PricewaterhouseCoopers, No. 03Civ.5560(RMB)(HBP), 2007 WL 473726, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 14, 2007) (boilerplate contract choice of law clauses are “ubiquitous in modern transactions” and therefore not indicative of the imminence of litigation). Instead, there must be some particularized suspicion that litigation is likely. Often courts will describe the immediacy of litigation requirement in terms of whether an articulable claim existed at the time the material to be protected was prepared.

See:

In re Sealed Case, 146 F.3d 881, 884 (D.C. Cir. 1998). In order for work product protection to apply, an attorney must have “had a subjective belief that litigation was a real possibility, and that belief must have been objectively reasonable.” Documents prepared prior to the materialization of specific claim were protected because they were prepared “in anticipation of possible litigation.”

Martin v. Bally’s Park Place Hotel & Casino, 983 F.2d 1252 (3d Cir. 1993). After employee contacted OSHA with health problems, counsel for Bally’s ordered expert to conduct a test on the emissions of a dishwasher. Later, Bally's claimed work product protection for this report. Court agreed that the report had been in anticipation of litigation despite the fact that OSHA had mentioned closing the file if the emissions were corrected. Court declared that OSHA had not been unequivocal that it was possible to avoid the litigation.

Binks Mfg. Co. v. Nat'l Presto Indus., Inc., 709 F.2d 1109, 1119 (7th Cir. 1983). There must be more than a remote prospect of future litigation for work product protection to apply. Work product immunity requires at least some articulable claim likely to lead to litigation and a document which was prepared because this litigation was fairly foreseeable.

Carter v. Texas Roadhouse Holdings LLC, Case No. 6:17-CV-00052, 2021 WL 1603701, at *2 (W.D. La. Apr. 23, 2021). "[C]ourts routinely find claims adjuster notes are subject to disclosure absent specific evidence that notes were specifically to aid in future litigation."

Pemberton v. Republic Servs., Inc., 308 F.R.D. 195, 202 (E.D. Mo. 2015). Work product protection applies to public relations materials "created in an effort to foster a public environment that was less likely to lead to further litigation."

Geller v. N. Shore Long Island Jewish Health Sys., No. 10-170(ADS)(ETB), 2011 WL 5507572, at *2-4 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 9, 2011). Work product protection applies to materials created during the course of an internal investigation conducted by a compliance officer after counsel was hired in response to letter threatening litigation unless defendants settled within five days of receipt of letter.

Raritan Bay Fed. Credit Union v. CUMIS Ins. Soc'y, Inc., No. 09-1512 (FLW), 2010 WL 4292175, at *12 (D.N.J. Oct. 21, 2010). The reasonable anticipation test requires a party to show an identifiable and specific claim of impending litigation at the time materials were prepared.

Lopes v. Vieira, 719 F. Supp. 2d 1199 (E.D. Cal. June 23, 2010). Documents prepared in response to an administrative investigation were protected work product, and were not prepared for a business purpose since the securities offering took place a year earlier.

King v. CVS Pharmacy, Inc., No. 1:09-CV-209, 2010 WL 1643256 (E.D. Tenn. Apr. 21, 2010). Holding that an insurer's claims adjuster's files created prior to the adjuster's contact with the claimant's attorney were not protected work product.

Med. Protective Co. v. Bubenik, No. 4:06CV01639 ERW, 2007 WL 3026939, at *4 (E.D. Mo. Oct. 15, 2007). Recognizing the difficulty of determining when litigation becomes imminent, the court applied a case-by-case analysis. While the retention of outside counsel by the insurer was not dispositive, in this case it indicated "the beginning of an adversary relationship between the parties."

Minebea v. Papst, 229 F.R.D. 1 (D.D.C. 2005). Parties were not 'anticipating litigation' where a lawsuit had not been filed and the parties instead entered into a tolling agreement in a serious, good faith effort to negotiate a patent license.

Celmer v. Marriot Corp., No. Civ.A. 03-CV-5229, 2004 WL 1822763, at *3 (E.D. Pa. July 15, 2004). Holding report prepared by loss prevention officer whose primary role was to gather facts following accident was not protected work product because litigation was not anticipated at time of the creation of the report.

Hertzberg v. Veneman, 273 F. Supp. 2d 67, 75 (D.D.C. 2003) (citing Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 865 (D.C. Cir. 1980)). "While litigation need not be imminent or certain in order to satisfy the anticipation-of-litigation prong of the test, this circuit has held that 'at the very least some articulable claim, likely to lead to litigation, must have arisen,' such that litigation was 'fairly foreseeable at the time' the materials were prepared."

SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Pentech Pharm., Inc., No. 00 C 2855, 2001 WL 1397876, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 6, 2001) (internal citations and quotations omitted; second alteration in original). “[T]o be subject to work product immunity, documents must have been created in response to ‘a substantial and significant threat’ of litigation, which can be shown by ‘objective facts establishing an identifiable resolve to litigate.’ Documents are not work-product simply because ‘litigation [is] in the air’ or ‘there is a remote possibility of some future litigation.’”

Heyman v. Beatrice Co., No. 89 C 7381, 1992 WL 97232, at *3 (N.D. Ill. May 1, 1992). “[T]he prospect of litigation must be identifiable because of specific claims that have already arisen.” A mere contingency of litigation will not give rise to work product protection. Thus, documents that were prepared to analyze or preclude future litigation not regarding existing claims were not protected work product.

Miller v. Pancucci, 141 F.R.D. 292 (C.D. Cal. 1992). Police department documents prepared in the ordinary course of an internal affairs investigation in response to citizen complaint were not prepared in anticipation of specific litigation and therefore were not protected work product.

James Julian, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 93 F.R.D. 138, 143 (D. Del. 1982). Party not required to know who will sue it or the theory of recovery, but the prospect of litigation must be “sufficiently strong.”

Litigation related to a future event may be sufficiently “anticipated” to satisfy the requirements of the work product doctrine even though no litigation then existed. See United States v. Adlman, 134 F.3d 1194, 1197-98 (2d Cir. 1998) (memorandum regarding potential tax litigation arising out of a proposed merger may be protected); see also Deseret Mgmt. Corp. v. United States, 76 Fed. Cl. 88, 94 (Fed. Cl. 2007) (IRS audit reports were protected work product where, due to the size of the corporation and significance of the business transaction, both parties “knew or should have known that the auditing could lead to litigation”). In In re Sealed Case, 146 F.3d 881, 887 (D.C. Cir. 1998), the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia held that documents prepared prior to the transaction that formed the basis for the claim were protected work product. The court reasoned that the work product privilege “turns not on the presence or absence of a specific claim, but rather on whether, under ‘all of the relevant circumstances,’ the lawyer prepared the materials in anticipation of litigation.” Id. at 884-85. Under this standard, the court found that an attorney must have “had a subjective belief that the litigation was a real possibility, and that belief must have been objectively reasonable” in order for work product protection to apply. Id. at 884; see also Judicial Watch, Inc. v. C.F.P.B., No. 1:12-cv-00931 (EGS), 2014 WL 1245303, at *7 (D.D.C. Mar. 27, 2014) (document prepared because of the prospect of litigation may be protected even if the individual does not have a specific claim in mind, provided there exists “some articulable claim that is likely to lead to litigation”). But see United States v. Microsoft Corp., Case No. C15-120RSM, 2020 WL 263577, at *3 (W.D. Wash. Jan. 17, 2020) (document prepared by tax consultant not protected where company anticipated litigation only because it decided to implement consultant’s business advice).

b. Preparation of Documents Must Be Motivated by Litigation

In establishing the “anticipation of litigation” prong of work product protection, a party must demonstrate that use in litigation was the motivation underlying the preparation of the document subject to a claim of work product protection. The party asserting the work product doctrine carries the burden of proving that the writings or documents were prepared for litigation purposes. See Wyoming v. U.S. Dep’t of Agric., 239 F. Supp. 2d 1219, 1231 (D. Wyo. 2002), appeal dismissed and vacated as moot, 414 F.3d 1207 (10th Cir. 2005). Courts find that, without more, merely citing a purpose of avoiding future litigation is an insufficient basis on which to assert work product protection, as such would “represent an insurmountable barrier to normal discovery and could subsume all compliance activities by a company as protected from discovery.” In re Grand Jury Proceedings, No. M-11-189, 2001 WL 1167497, at *15 (S.D.N.Y Oct. 3, 2001) (quotations and citations omitted). “Though the work product doctrine may protect documents that were prepared for one’s defense in a court of law, it does not protect documents that were prepared for one’s defense in the court of public opinion.” Burke v. Lakin Law Firm, PC, No. 07-CV-0076-MJR, 2008 WL 117838, at *3 (S.D. Ill. 2008) (communications with a public relations firm hired at the direction of counsel to minimize the effects of negative publicity stemming from litigation were not protected by the work product doctrine).

Regardless of the particular degree of litigation-related motivation that courts may require, virtually all courts hold that materials that are “assembled in the ordinary course of business, or pursuant to public requirements unrelated to litigation” are not protected. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3) (1970 Amendment) advisory committee’s note.

See:

In re Grand Jury Subpoenas dated Mar. 19, 2002 & Aug. 2, 2002, 318 F.3d 379, 384-85 (2d Cir. 2003). Work product protection did “not extend to documents in an attorney’s possession that were prepared by a third party in the ordinary course of business and that would have been created in essentially similar form irrespective of any litigation anticipated by counsel.”

United States v. Frederick, 182 F.3d 496, 501 (7th Cir. 1999). Document prepared by attorney for use in tax preparation and for use in litigation not protected.

May 28, 2014). Surveillance video that captured plaintiff’s slip and fall was not work product because it was created during the ordinary course of business; preservation of the video did not transform it into protected work product.

Myer v. Nitetrain Coach Co., No. C06-804C, 2007 WL 686357 (W.D. Wash. Mar. 2, 2007). Insurer’s post-accident videotape discussing the design of a collapsed bed frame was not work product, as insurer’s routine duty to investigate accidents meant the tape was prepared in the ordinary course of business.

SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Pentech Pharm., Inc., No. 00 C 2855, 2001 WL 1397876, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 6, 2001). “The threshold determination of work product generally is ‘whether, in light of the nature of the document and the factual situation in the particular case, the document can fairly be said to have been prepared for or obtained because of the prospect of litigation.’ Therefore, documents that were prepared for other reasons, such as documents created in the ordinary course of business, cannot be withheld as work product.” (emphasis in original).

But see:

United States v. Adlman, 134 F.3d 1194, 1204 (2d Cir. 1998). Documents prepared to inform a business decision were protected if the documents would not have been prepared but for anticipated litigation arising out of the business decision.

Fitzpatrick v. Am. Int’l Grp., Inc., No. 10 Civ. 142(MHD), 2011 WL 335672, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 28, 2011). Profit calculation documents created by KPMG were protected work product because KPMG was hired in anticipation of litigation and, absent the litigation threat by plaintiff, the defendant would have performed calculations in-house.

Attorney billing records are an example of an ordinary business record that may nevertheless be protected by the work product doctrine. Cardenas v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., No. Civ. 99-1422 (JRT/FLN, 99-1422(JRT/FLN), 2003 WL 21302957, at *3 (D. Minn. May 16, 2003) (attorney billing records containing narrative descriptions of conversations between clients and attorneys, the subjects of legal research or internal legal memoranda, and activities undertaken on the client’s behalf prepared in anticipation of litigation are protected by attorney-client privilege and work product protection). Courts have held that “[d]ocuments prepared . . . pursuant to regulatory requirements are not classified as attorney work-product.” Syngenta Crop Prot., Inc. v. U.S. Env’tl. Prot. Agency, No. 1:02CV0334, 2002 WL 31778791, at *5 (M.D.N.C. Nov. 5, 2002), rev’d in part on other grounds by 2006 WL 6654882 (M.D.N.C. Mar. 30, 2006); but see Lindon v. Kakavand, Civil Action No. 5:13-026-DCR, 2014 WL 4063821, at *2-3 (E.D. Ky. Aug. 15, 2014) (rejecting plaintiff’s argument that report of outside consultant hired to investigate an allegedly negligent medical procedure did not qualify as work product because hospital licensure rules, administrative regulations, and health care accreditation standards require such investigation and causal analysis; plaintiff failed to identify regulation that required an incident investigation report and the retention letter indicated defendant’s subjective belief that litigation was a distinct possibility); Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. v. United States, 69 Fed. Cl. 784, 808 (Fed. Cl. 2006) (reviewing in detail the various tests for the work product doctrine and holding that the adversarial aspects of proceedings before the state public utility commission and nuclear regulatory commission constituted litigation for purposes of work product doctrine).

Pre-existing documents not prepared in anticipation of litigation may not be immunized merely by transmitting them to an attorney in response to the prospect of litigation. See Brown v. Hart, Schaffner & Marx, 96 F.R.D. 64, 68 (N.D. Ill. 1982). Similarly, the mere “fact that general counsel may be involved in oversight does not make it self-evident that the documents prepared were prepared in anticipation of litigation.” Guardsmark, Inc. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 206 F.R.D. 202, 210 (W.D. Tenn. 2002) (citing Sandberg v. Va. Bankshares, Inc., 979 F.2d 332, 356 (4th Cir. 1992)). But see Triple Five of Minn., Inc. v. Simon, 212 F.R.D. 523, 528 (D. Minn. 2002) (documents produced by in-house counsel were privileged where defendants had turned over hundreds of documents related to in-house counsel’s “business” function and the 10 year history of litigation or threatened litigation made it likely that documents were prepared in anticipation of litigation). However, counsel’s selection and compilation of pre-existing documents may constitute opinion work product. See Selection Of Documents As Opinion Work Product, § III.B.1.a, infra.

For purposes of applying the work product doctrine, courts differ with respect to the degree of motivation that a party must show to establish that a document was prepared in anticipation of litigation. Some courts, including the Second, Third, Fourth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and D.C. Circuits agree that “if in light of the nature of the document and the factual situation in the particular case, the document can fairly be said to have been prepared or obtained because of the prospect of litigation it is eligible for protection by the work-product privilege.” Resolution Trust Corp. v. Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 200 F.R.D. 183, 189 (W.D.N.Y. 2001) (internal quotations omitted) (emphasis in original).

Baxter Healthcare Corp., 438 F.3d 763, 767-69 (7th Cir. 2006). Work product doctrine protected notes written by in-house counsel during meeting with plaintiff’s supervisors, even if the supervisors were not anticipating litigation, because the meeting notes were used by counsel to determine the company’s “legal vulnerabilities.”

Other courts, most notably the Fifth Circuit, have adopted the more stringent “primary motivating” factor test. See United States v. Davis, 636 F.2d 1028, 1040 (5th Cir. 1981); see also Garcia v. City of El Centro, 214 F.R.D. 587, 592 (S.D. Cal. 2003) (noting circuit split on when documents are prepared in litigation for purposes of the work product doctrine, finding no Ninth Circuit authority rejecting “primary motivating purpose” and “substantial probability” approach, and choosing to analyze particular factual elements of instant case) (citing Simon v. G.D. Searle & Co., 816 F.2d 397, 401 (8th Cir. 1987)). Each approach is discussed below.

(1) Primary Motivating Factor Test

Some courts have concluded that preparation for litigation must be the primary motivating factor underlying the creation of a document in order to invoke work product protection. See McMahon v. E. S.S. Lines, Inc., 129 F.R.D. 197, 199 (S.D. Fla. 1989). The Fifth Circuit has been the leading circuit following this approach. S. Scrap Material Co. v. Fleming, No. Civ.A. 01-2554, 2003 WL 21474516, at *5 (E.D. La. June 18, 2003) (citing In re Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Co., 214 F.3d 586, 592 n.19 (5th Cir. 2000)). Under this test, the Fifth Circuit recognized that:

It is admittedly difficult to reduce to a neat formula the relationship between the preparation of a document and possible litigation necessary to trigger the protection of the work-product doctrine. We conclude that litigation need not necessarily be imminent, as some courts have suggested, as long as the primary motivating purpose behind the creation of the document was to aid in possible future litigation.

June 18, 2003) (same). “Factors that courts rely on to determine the primary motivation for the creation of a document include the retention of counsel, his involvement in the generation of the document and whether it was routine practice to prepare that type of document or whether the document was instead prepared in response to a particular circumstance.” S. Scrap Material Co., 2003 WL 21474516, at *6-7 (internal quotations omitted).

United States v. Gulf Oil Corp., 760 F.2d 292, 296-97 (Temp. Emer. Ct. App. 1985). Document does not get work product protection unless the primary motivating purpose behind its creation was to assist in impending litigation.

United States v. Davis, 636 F.2d 1028, 1040 (5th Cir. 1981). The test is whether the primary motivating factor behind the creation of the document was to prepare for pending or impending litigation.

In re Dominion Dental Servs. USA v. Data Breach Litig., 429 F.Supp.3d 190, 194 (E.D. Va. 2019). Where there is a dual purpose, to merit protection, the litigation must be the “driving force.” Report produced by a cyber security firm following a data breach was for business purposes given extensive evidence in the record confirming that the report was used for a range of non-litigation purposes.

Cantu v. TitleMax, Inc., No. 14-CV-628 RP, 2015 WL 5944258, at *3-5 (W.D. Tex. Oct. 9, 2015). Work product privilege did not protect letter from attorney to third-party accounting firm assessing financial risk to company posed by pending litigation, because the primary motivation for the letter was to “back up a figure on a financial balance sheet,” not to prepare a specific case for trial or negotiation.

Foret v. Transocean Offshore, Inc., No. 09-4567, 2010 WL 2732332, at *5 (E.D. La. July 6, 2010). Investigation was not primarily motivated by litigation when Transocean’s policy manual required that all accidents be investigated.

SEC v. Microtune, Inc., 258 F.R.D. 310, 319 (N.D. Tex. 2009). Court applied primary motivation test, finding that internal investigation materials generated by outside counsel were not protected because the materials would have been prepared regardless of the prospects of litigation.

Cline v. Advanced Med. Optics, Inc., No. 2:08-CV-62 (TJW), 2009 WL 585507, at *4 (E.D. Tex. Mar. 6, 2009). Primary purpose of the investigation was anticipation of litigation and, therefore, the protection applied even though defendant had mixed business and legal purposes for conducting the investigation.

Douga v. D & Boat Rentals, Inc., No. 04-1642, 2007 WL 1428678, at *4 (W.D. La. May 10, 2007). The court found that a post-accident insurance investigation was not primarily motivated by litigation, but noted facts and cases, such as a serious accident after which litigation would “inevitably” result, under which such investigations have been afforded protection under that standard.

Gator Marshbuggy Excavator L.L.C. v. M/V Rambler, No. Civ.A. 03-3220, 2004 WL 1822843, at *3 (E.D. La. Aug. 12, 2004). Documents created primarily in anticipation of litigation as part of accident investigation were protected work product. Notwithstanding that affidavit supporting the claim of privilege was conclusory, other indicia of anticipation of litigation existed, including the hiring of counsel and notations in interview notes regarding the credibility of the potential witness.

Nesse v. Pitmann, 206 F.R.D. 325, 331-32 (D.D.C. 2002). Although a law firm partner’s notes were taken out of some generalized concern over future litigation, the “primary purpose” was not trial preparation or anticipation of litigation, and thus zone of privacy concerns were not implicated and work product doctrine was inapplicable.

In assessing whether preparation for litigation was the primary motivating factor, some courts have found that the timing of the preparation of the document is a factor to be considered. See, e.g., Playtex, Inc. v. Columbia Cas. Co., No. C.A. 88C-MR-233-1-CV, 1989 WL 5197, at *3 (Del. Super. Ct. Jan. 5, 1989). Many of these cases involve the issue of whether insurance investigations following an accident are for business purposes or in anticipation of litigation and therefore privileged.

Compare:

Janicker v. George Washington Univ., 94 F.R.D. 648, 650-51 (D.D.C. 1982). Document prepared immediately after a disaster was prepared for business purposes rather than for litigation that might result from the disaster.

APL Corp. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 91 F.R.D. 10, 21 (D. Md. 1980). Routine investigations into indemnity claims are not carried out in anticipation of litigation but instead as part of normal business practices of an insurance company.

With:

Carver v. Allstate Ins. Co., 94 F.R.D. 131, 133-35 (S.D. Ga. 1982). Information gathered by the fire loss investigator of an insurance company was protected work product since the activity had shifted from mere claim evaluation to a strong anticipation of litigation.

See also:

In re Prof'l's Direct Ins. Co., 578 F.3d 432 (6th Cir. 2009). Court denied writ of mandamus where magistrate judge, applying “because of litigation” test, held that documents created for dual purpose of analyzing coverage and preparing for litigation may not be protected. Magistrate judge ordered production of claim file materials, including emails between the insurer and its outside counsel, and correspondence between the insurer and its reinsurers regarding coverage decision.

(2) “Because Of” Test

A majority of courts have adopted the less stringent “because of” test for determining whether materials were prepared in anticipation of litigation. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 357 F.3d 900, 908-09 (9th Cir. 2004); Maine v. U.S. Dep’t of the Interior, 298 F.3d 60, 69 (1st Cir. 2002); United States v. Adlman, 134 F.3d 1194, (2d Cir. 1998); Nat’l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Murray Sheet Metal Co., 967 F.2d 980, 984 (4th Cir. 1992); Binks Mfg. Co. v. Nat’l Presto Indus., Inc., 709 F.2d 1109, 1118-19 (7th Cir. 1983); Simon v. G.D. Searle & Co., 816 F.2d 397, 401 (8th Cir. 1987). Senate of P.R. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 823 F.2d 574, 586 n.42 (D.C. Cir. 1987); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 604 F.2d 798, 803 (3d Cir. 1979). Under this approach, often attributed to the Wright & Miller treatise on civil procedure, courts will find the work product doctrine applicable if, in light of the nature of the document and the factual situation in the particular case, the document “can fairly be said to have been prepared or obtained because of the prospect of litigation.” 8 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 2024 (3d ed. West 2019) (emphasis added). In application, courts have noted that the import of this approach is that the work product doctrine will apply even if there is a dual purpose for the creation of the materials to be protected. See, e.g., United States v. Roxworthy, 457 F.3d 590, 599 (6th Cir. 2006) (reversing district court’s order granting IRS summons and remanding with instructions to grant defendant’s motion to quash). Additional cases adopting the “because of” approach to determining whether a document was prepared in anticipation of litigation include the following:

Nat’l Assoc. of Criminal Defense Lawyers v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice Exec. Office for United States Attorneys, 844 F.3d 246, 251-56 (D.C. Cir. 2016). Federal Criminal Discovery Blue Book, a manual created by the Department to guide federal prosecutors in the practice of discovery in criminal prosecutions, satisfied the “because of” test for determining whether it was prepared for use in litigation – and thus was protected as work product – even though it was not prepared in anticipation of litigating any specific claim or case.

United States v. Richey, 632 F.3d 559, 567-68 (9th Cir. 2011). With no evidence that the appraisal work file would have been prepared differently in the absence of prospective litigation, the work file could not be said to have been created because of litigation.

United States v. Deloitte LLP, 610 F.3d 129, 138-39 (D.C. Cir. 2010). An auditor-created document determining appropriate litigation reserves was created “because of” litigation, even if created in the course of an audit.

Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist., 600 F.3d 612 (7th Cir. 2010). Factual investigation materials prepared by outside counsel of the school board were protected by the work product doctrine since the investigation was conducted “because of” litigation against the school district, with which the school board anticipated being involved.

In re Prof’ls Direct Ins. Co., 578 F.3d 432, 440 (6th Cir. 2009). Applying the “because of” test, the court held that documents created for the dual purpose of analyzing coverage and to prepare for litigation may not be protected and affirmed the order to disclose.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 357 F.3d 900, 908-09 (9th Cir. 2004). Adopting the “because of” test in analyzing the “in anticipation of litigation” element of the work product doctrine. Documents prepared for a “clear, readily separable business purpose” should not be given protection, but dual purpose documents may be privileged if they were created in the first instance for the purpose of rendering legal advice and do not have a readily separable purpose unrelated to the provision of legal advice.

PepsiCo, Inc. v. Baird, Kurtz & Dobson LLP, 305 F.3d 813, 817 (8th Cir. 2002). “In order to protect work-product, the party seeking protection must show the materials were prepared in anticipation of litigation, i.e., because of the prospect of litigation.”

United States v. Adlman, 134 F.3d 1194, 1202 (2d Cir. 1998). Documents prepared to inform a business decision regarding a proposed merger were protected. The test is whether “in light of the nature of the document and the factual situation in the particular case, the document can fairly be said to have been prepared or obtained because of the prospect of litigation.”

Regents of Univ. of Minnesota v. United States, 340 F.R.D. 293, 313 (D. Minn. 2012). “There is no requirement that the work be done ‘solely in anticipation of litigation,’ rather [w]here the work product of the attorney is intertwined between prospective litigation and non-litigation business purposes, the work product doctrine should properly attach.”

Tri-State Generation & Transmission Ass’n, Inc. v. Mitsubishi Int’l Corp., No. CV-14-08115-PCT-NVM, 2016 WL 3854455, at *2-4 (D. Ariz. July 15, 2016). Application of the “because of” standard requires consideration of the totality of the circumstances in order to determine whether the document would have been created in a substantially similar form “but for” the prospect of litigation. Plaintiffs failed to show that root cause report prepared after electric generator failure would not have been created in substantially similar form but for the prospect of litigation.

Assured Guar. Mun. Corp. v. UBS Real Estate Sec. Inc., Nos. 12 Civ. 1579(HB)(JCF), 12 Civ. 7322(HB)(JCF), 2013 WL 1195545, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 25, 2013). Documents were outside the scope of work product protection. The documents would have been created absent any threat of litigation; their preparation was required as part of the ordinary course of business. Party failed to demonstrate that the work was created because of litigation.

DeWitt v. Walgreen Co., No. 4:11-cv-00263-BLW, 2012 WL 3837764, at *5 (D. Idaho Sept. 4, 2012). Preliminary drafts of an “Immunizer Policy” were discoverable because Walgreens failed to show more than a remote possibility of litigation at the time the policy was drafted. Additionally, Walgreens failed to show that policy was drafted because of the prospect of litigation.

Gruenbaum v. Werner Enters., Inc., 270 F.R.D. 298, 304 (S.D. Ohio 2010). The fact that information created because of litigation may also serve other purposes does not deprive that information of its character as work product.

Lewis v. Wells Fargo & Co., 266 F.R.D. 433, 440-41 (N.D. Cal. 2010). Internal audits were not created “because of” litigation since they would have been created in substantially similar form even if no litigation was anticipated.

Vacco v. Harrah’s Operating Co., No. 1:07-CV-0663 (TJM/DEP), 2008 WL 4793719, at *6-7 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 29, 2008). Applying “because of” test, court held that audit letters prepared by counsel at the request of a company's auditors are protected by the work product doctrine and disclosure of pre-existing work product by the company to its auditors does not waive otherwise applicable work product protections.

In re Cardinal Health, Inc. Sec. Litig., No. C2 04 575 ALM, 2007 WL 495150, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Jan 26, 2007). Investigation and presentation materials of outside law firm hired by a corporation's audit committee to determine compliance with accounting laws was held to be protected work product where firm was hired after government regulators expressed a concern about the company's practices.

Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. WH-TV Broad. Corp., No. 01 C 4366, 2003 WL 21911066, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 7, 2003) (quoting Allendale, 145 F.R.D. at 87). "Because litigation may be anticipated when almost any incident occurs, 'a substantial and significant threat of litigation is required before a discovery opponent's anticipation will be considered a reasonable and justifiable motivation for production of a document.'"

In re Gabapentin Patent Litig., 214 F.R.D. 178, 184 (D.N.J. 2003). Interpreting "because of" test as whether the material was produced because of the prospect of litigation and for no other purpose.

Cobell v. Norton, 212 F.R.D. 24, 31 (D.D.C. 2002). "The D.C. Circuit has never required that documents must be shown to have been prepared solely or primarily in anticipation of litigation. Rather, this circuit is in accord with the vast majority of circuits which have held that 'the testing question is whether, in light of the nature of the document and the factual situation in the particular case, the document can fairly be said to have been prepared or obtained because of the prospect of litigation.'"

Mission Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Lilly, 112 F.R.D. 160, 164 (D. Minn. 1986). If preparation for litigation was any part of the motivation for producing a report, then the report is work product.

(3) "For Use in Litigation" Test

The First Circuit has adopted an even narrower, and controversial, "for use in litigation" test. United States v. Textron, Inc., 577 F.3d 21 (1st Cir. 2009) (en banc). In Textron, the court held that tax accrual workpapers, prepared in consultation with the company's attorneys, which analyzed various tax positions asserted by the company, assessed the likelihood that the positions would prevail in the event of an IRS audit, and established contingent tax reserve liabilities for each position, were not protected by the work product doctrine because they were not prepared for use in litigation. Id. at 32. Textron subsequently petitioned the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari.

In Textron's petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court, the company argued that the First Circuit adopted "an unprecedentedly narrow interpretation" of the work product doctrine. Petition for Writ of Certiorari, Textron v. United States, No. 09-750, 2009 WL 5115221, at *11 (Dec. 24, 2009). Textron argued that the First Circuit's approach threatens to chill counsel's willingness to provide candid analysis of potential litigation for fear that a court may deem the documents not protected where the documents also serve a business purpose. Id. at *22, 29. The petition noted that nine other appellate courts have enunciated "inconsistent (but uniformly broader) views of the privilege's scope." Id. Numerous organizations, including the American Bar Association (“ABA”) and the Association of Corporate Counsel filed amicus curiae briefs urging the court to grant the petition and clarify the boundaries of the work product doctrine.

In its amicus brief, the ABA stated that the “uncertain environment adversely affects the ability of attorneys to provide their clients with responsible legal counsel,” ABA Amicus Brief, Textron Inc. v. United States, No. 09-750, 2010 WL 342156, at *4 (Jan. 27, 2010), and that “the circuit split has placed attorneys in the untenable position of deciding whether to create work product when it may be privileged in one jurisdiction but not in another.” Id. at *6. The ABA asked the court to overturn the First Circuit’s ruling and to “clarify that the scope of the attorney work product privilege is limited to materials prepared solely ‘for use in litigation’ . . . but also encompasses materials that are prepared to serve both a litigation and a business purpose.” Id. (internal citations omitted).

Despite these arguments in support of granting the writ, on May 24, 2010, the United States Supreme Court declined to review the First Circuit’s en banc ruling on work product in United States v. Textron, 577 F.3d 21 (1st Cir. 2009).

c. Using Previously Prepared Documents in Subsequent Litigation

When documents have been prepared in anticipation of litigation, but not in anticipation of the litigation in which work product protection is asserted, many courts have held that the documents should be treated as work product. See, e.g., Frontier Ref. Inc. v. Gorman-Rupp Co., 136 F.3d 695, 703-05 (10th Cir. 1998); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 43 F.3d 966, 971 (5th Cir. 1994); In re Murphy, 560 F.2d 326, 334-35 (8th Cir. 1977); United States v. Leggett & Platt, Inc., 542 F.2d 655, 659-60 (6th Cir. 1976); Duplan Corp. v. Moulinage et Retorderie de Chavanoz, 487 F.2d 480, 483-84 (4th Cir. 1973); Eagle-Picher Indus. Inc. v. United States, 11 Cl. Ct. 452, 457 (Cl. Ct. 1987). Put another way: “The work product privilege extends beyond the termination of litigation.” Pamida, Inc. v. E.S. Originals, Inc., 281 F.3d 726, 731 (8th Cir. 2002) (citing In re Murphy, 560 F.2d at 334); Aktiebolag v. Andrx Pharm., Inc., 208 F.R.D. 92, 104 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (“Generally, work product immunity continues to protect documents even when the litigation is completed.”). “However, ‘[t]o the extent that the need for protection of work-product does decrease after the end of a suit, that fact might in some cases lower the threshold for overcoming the work-product barrier.’” Aktiebolag, 208 F.R.D. at 104 (quoting FTC v. Grolier, Inc., 462 U.S. 19, 31 (1983) (Brennan, J., concurring)). Thus, the initial preparation of the document must have been in anticipation of the initial litigation, but whether the subsequent litigation was anticipated is irrelevant. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 136 cmt. j (Proposed Final Draft No. 1, 1996). Citing dicta from the Supreme Court, another court explained: “Rule 26 does not indicate that work product protection is confined to materials specifically prepared for the litigation in which they are sought. Instead, work product remains protected even after the termination of the litigation for which it was prepared.” In re Grand Jury (00-2H), 211 F. Supp. 2d 555, 560 (M.D. Penn. 2001) (citing FTC v. Grolier, Inc., 462 U.S. 19, 25 (1983)).

Compare:

Hobley v. Burge, 433 F.3d 946, 950 (7th Cir. 2006). Non-party law firm that represented defendant in previous, unrelated matter was in possession of documents that were responsive to document requests served on the defendant. The Seventh Circuit held that the law firm had an independent right to assert the work product protection and that the right could only be waived by its client (i.e., the defendant). The first firm's failure to provide a privilege log did not waive its protection because its duty to assert the protection was not triggered until the plaintiff directly subpoenaed the law firm for the documents.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 43 F.3d 966, 971 (5th Cir. 1994). Documents prepared for an earlier litigation remained protected for purposes of a subsequent grand jury investigation.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Nov. 8, 1979, 622 F.2d 933, 935 (6th Cir. 1980). Documents prepared for an earlier grand jury investigation were protected in a second grand jury investigation of the same matter.

Jumper v. Yellow Corp., 176 F.R.D. 282, 286 (N.D. Ill. 1997). Work product protection applied to documents prepared in preparation of a grievance proceeding directly related to the subsequent arbitration proceeding in which production of the documents was requested.

Liberty Envtl. Sys., Inc. v. Cnty. of Westchester, No. 94CIV.7431(WK)(MHD), 1997 WL 471053, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 18, 1997). "The fact that a document was prepared in anticipation of one litigation does not preclude the application of the work-product rule in another litigation." Documents prepared in anticipation of a prior environmental law enforcement proceeding remained protected in a subsequent suit arising out of one party's effort to comply with a consent decree that the parties entered into at the conclusion of the prior proceeding.

High Plains Corp. v. Summit Res. Mgmt., Inc., No. 96-1105-FGT, 1997 WL 109659, at *2 (D. Kan. Feb. 12, 1997). "The work product rule protects materials prepared for any litigation or trial so long as they were prepared by or for a party to the subsequent litigation."

Some courts have permitted protection in subsequent litigation but only if the subsequent case is related to the case for which the work product was created. B. ORDINARY AND OPINION WORK PRODUCT

Courts divide work product into two general types: opinion work product (sometimes referred to as “core” work product) and ordinary work product. Both types of work product are addressed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(3). As one court explained:

Following the contours of the Hickman decision, Rule 26 protects attorney work-product by commanding that a party may obtain discovery of documents and tangible things prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial. However, discovery is allowed, “only upon a showing [of] . . . substantial need of the materials in preparation of the party’s case and that the party is unable without undue hardship to obtain the substantial equivalent of the materials by other means.” This first sentence of the provision refers to “ordinary” work-product. The second sentence of the provision further requires that the court “protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinion, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation.” Courts often refer to this provision as “core” work-product.

Mfg. Admin. & Mgmt. Sys., Inc. v. ICT Grp., Inc., 212 F.R.D. 110, 113 (E.D.N.Y. 2002) (citations omitted). In some instances, courts recognize that a particular document may reflect a mix of ordinary and opinion work product perhaps constituting a third type of work product.

In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 211 F.R.D. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 2002). Each type of work product is discussed below.

1. Opinion Work Product

Opinion work product is defined as material prepared by an attorney that contains “mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of [an] attorney.” See FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3)(B) (requiring courts to “protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of a party’s attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation”). More specifically, opinion work product consists of the attorney’s interpretation of legal theories and the application of the facts to those theories, rather than the bare facts or legal theories alone. See In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 211 F.R.D. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 2002) (“Opinion work-product contains the opinions, judgments, and thought processes of counsel and receives almost absolute protection from discovery.”) (quotations omitted).

Opinion work product encompasses not only the attorney’s mental impressions, but also the mental processes of persons assisting in trial preparation such as paralegals, investigators, consultants, or law office personnel. See FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3) advisory committee’s note (mentioning protection of mental impressions and subjective evaluations of investigators and claim-agents); In re Cendant Corp. Securities Litigation, 343 F.3d 658, 667 (3d Cir. 2003) (litigation consultant’s advice was opinion work product); Brasfield & Gorrie, LLC v. Hirschfeld Steel Group LP, 2:20-cv-00984-LSC, 2021 WL 5449203, at *4 (N.D. Ala. Nov. 22, 2021) (opinion work product of non-legal consultant is protected); In re Payment Card Interchange Fee and Merchant Discount Antitrust Litig., No. 05-MD-1720 (MKB), 2018 WL 1162552, at *11 (E.D.N.Y. Feb. 26, 2018) (non-attorney’s materials were protected opinion work product); Va. Elec. & Power Co. v. Sun Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 68 F.R.D. 397, 402 (E.D. Va. 1975) (impressions and opinions of person hired by an attorney are part of the attorney’s work product). Opinion work product receives heightened protection and is discoverable, if at all, only upon a showing of extraordinary need.

Opinion work product includes, among other things, memoranda that contain analysis of law or fact, evaluations of trial strategy, perceived strengths and weaknesses in a case, intended lines of proof, cross-examination plans, and the inferences drawn by the lawyer. See Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 339-402 (1981). Courts emphasize that the determining consideration is whether disclosure of such documents will reveal “the thought process the Supreme Court in Hickman held to be inviolate.” Raytheon Aircraft Co. v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng’rs, 183 F. Supp. 2d 1280, 1291 (D. Kan. 2001).

a. Selection Of Documents as Opinion Work Product

Most courts recognize that an attorney's compilation of particular documents reflects her mental processes. Thus, courts sometimes treat such compilations or distillations as opinion work product, even if such compilations are composed of non-work product materials. See In re Allen, 106 F.3d 582, 608 (4th Cir. 1997); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 87 cmt. f (2000). However, other courts find the "selection and compilation" exception to the normal rule that third-party documents are not protected by the work product doctrine to be a narrow one, requiring "the party asserting the privilege [to] show a real, rather than speculative, concern that counsel's thought processes in relation to pending or anticipated litigation will be exposed through disclosure of the compiled documents." In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Mar. 19, 2002 & Aug. 2, 2002, 318 F.3d 379, 385 (2d Cir. 2003) (citation omitted). Courts sometimes apply a two-part test to determine whether an attorney's selection of documents is protected by the work product doctrine. Hambarian v. Comm'r of Internal Rev., 118 T.C. 565, 570 (2002). Under that test, "a court should first determine that (1) disclosure of the documents would create a real, nonspeculative danger of revealing the lawyer's thoughts, and (2) the lawyer had justifiable expectation that such mental impressions revealed by the materials would remain private." Id. at 570.

Courts may be less likely to protect the selection and compilation of documents where the volume of documents is large. In SEC v. Collins & Aikman Corp., 256 F.R.D. 403 (S.D.N.Y. 2009), the defendant requested 54 categories of documents from the SEC. In response, the SEC produced 1.7 million documents (10.6 million pages) from 36 separate databases that had been collected from numerous parties during the SEC's investigation. Id. at 406. Although the defendant requested that the SEC identify to which request each document was responsive, and although SEC attorneys and others had already organized the electronic documents into 175 folders correlating to the factual contentions in the SEC's complaint, the SEC refused to provide that information. Id. at 408. The court noted that, in the Second Circuit, while the selection and compilation of documents can fall within the protection of the work product doctrine, that protection is “narrow,” and aimed only at preventing requests with “the precise goal of learning what the opposing attorney’s thinking or strategy may be.” Id. Here, the SEC’s organization was not opinion work product because the documents were organized by facts alleged in the complaint, and not by legal theory or strategy. Id. at 410. Moreover, even if the compilation had been opinion work product, defendant had demonstrated substantial need and undue hardship that justified discovery of any SEC work product. Id. Although defendant could do keyword searches, “the inaccuracy of such searches is by now relatively well known.” Id. at 411. Further, a “page-by-page manual review of ten million pages of records is strikingly expensive in both monetary and human terms and constitutes ‘undue hardship’ by any definition.” Id.; see also Miller v. Holzmann, 238 F.R.D. 30, 32 (D.D.C. 2006) (The “extreme number of documents at issue in the case . . . made it virtually impossible to imagine that the party seeking the index would be able to glean any litigation strategy from production of the index itself”) (quoting Washington Bancorporation v. Said, 145 F.R.D. 274 (D.D.C. 1992)).

In re Conner Bonds Litig., No. 88-1-H, 1989 WL 67334 (E.D.N.C. Feb. 7, 1989). United States ex rel. Bagley v. TRW, Inc., 212 F.R.D. 554, 564 (C.D. Cal. 2003). If work product doctrine properly applies to attorney’s selection of documents, then doctrine also protects attorney’s narrative description of facts, when prepared in anticipation of litigation.

Barrett Indus. Trucks, Inc., v. Old Republic Ins. Co., 129 F.R.D. 515, 518-19 (N.D. Ill. 1990). Work product doctrine prevents defendant from asking plaintiff’s consultant what questions his attorney had asked him or the topic to which the majority of his attorney’s questions were directed. Court noted that a party can ask about any facts conveyed to the consultant and the origin of those facts.

b. Legal Theories by Themselves are Not Opinion Work Product.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(3) is somewhat misleading when it uses the term “legal theories,” because the work product doctrine does not protect pure legal theories. Legal theories are freely discoverable and do not constitute work product. See FED. R. CIV. P. 33(b) (allowing discovery of legal theories through interrogatories); FED. R. CIV. P. 36(a) (permitting discovery of legal theories through a request for admission). Instead, opinion work product is comprised of the lawyer’s interpretation, strategy, and perceptions of legal theories. Opinion work product includes legal theories only when such theories are entwined with the attorney’s strategies, impressions, or his application of the facts. See Note, The Work Product Doctrine, 68 CORNELL L. REV. 760, 842-43 (1983).

2. Ordinary Work Product

In practice, courts usually define ordinary work product in the negative: Ordinary work product is all attorney-originated materials that are not opinion work product (and therefore do not contain the mental impressions, conclusions, or opinions of the attorney). See In re Doe, 662 F.2d 1073, 1076 n.2 (4th Cir. 1981) (ordinary work product consists of those documents prepared by an attorney that do not contain mental impressions, conclusions or opinions of the attorney); Iowa Prots. & Advocacy Servs., Inc., 206 F.R.D. 630, 640 (S.D. Iowa 2001) (“The rule establishes a qualified immunity for ordinary work product that does not contain the mental impressions, conclusions or opinions of the attorney.”). Other courts note that “[o]rdinary work-product generally consists of primary information, such as verbatim witness testimony or objective data collected by or for a party or a party’s representative.” *Robinson v. a. Underlying Facts by Themselves are Not Protected.

As with legal theories in the case of opinion work product, the work product doctrine does not protect the bare facts underlying a case, but instead protects only the attorney's interpretation of those facts. See Note, The Work Product Doctrine, 68 CORNELL L. REV. 760, 842-43 (1983). Thus, while the work product doctrine will generally protect a document prepared by an attorney, it does not protect the underlying facts that are contained in the document. See Hickman, 329 U.S. at 511-13; Resolution Trust Corp. v. Dabney, 73 F.3d 262, 266 (10th Cir. 1995); Infosystems, Inc. v. Ceridian Corp., 197 F.R.D. 303, 306-07 (E.D. Mich. 2000); 8 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 2023 (3d ed. West 2019). Courts will permit a party to question a witness on information contained within a protected document reasoning that "where an attorney is 'incisive enough to recognize and question' an opposing party on facts contained in protected documents, 'the fear that opposing counsel's work product would be revealed would thus become groundless.'" Koch Materials Co. v. Shore Slurry Seal, Inc., 208 F.R.D. 109, 121-22 (D.N.J. 2002) (internal citation omitted).

Identities of defendant's two former employees interviewed by plaintiff were discoverable where disclosure would provide "little, if any, insight" into opposing counsel's trial strategy and plaintiff had not provided defendant with a list of potential witnesses as required by Rule 26(b)(1). The court noted the distinction between the identities of witnesses having discoverable information, which are not work product, and the identities of persons interviewed by counsel, which are.

S. Scrap Material Co. v. Fleming, No. Civ.A. 01-2554, 2003 WL 21474516, at *5 (E.D. La. June 18, 2003). Surveillance video, to the extent that it was at all substantive evidence, should be disclosed along with any unannotated documents that contain raw data or other purely factual matters.

Garcia v. City of El Centro, 214 F.R.D. 587, 591 (S.D. Cal. 2003). "However, because the work-product doctrine is intended only to guard against the divulging of attorney's strategies and legal impressions, it does not protect facts concerning the creation of work-product or fact contained within the work-product. Only when a party seeking discovery attempts to ascertain facts, which inherently reveal the attorney's mental impression, does the work-product protection extend to the underlying facts."

In re Bank One Sec. Litig., 209 F.R.D. 418, 423 (N.D. Ill. 2002). Factual information may not be withheld under the work product doctrine, but must be produced through interrogatories, depositions or other discovery.

Koch Materials Co. v. Shore Slurry Seal, Inc., 208 F.R.D. 109, 121-22 (D.N.J. 2002). Information in spreadsheets gathered at attorney's request was not protected by work product doctrine.

Guardsmark, Inc. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 206 F.R.D. 202, 207 (W.D. Tenn. 2002). The "work product" doctrine does not protect facts concerning the creation of work product or facts contained within the work product.

In re Theragenics Corp. Sec. Litig., 205 F.R.D. 631, 634 (N.D. Ga. 2002). "Numerous courts since Hickman v. Taylor . . . have recognized that names and addresses of witnesses interviewed by counsel who have knowledge of the facts alleged in the complaint are not protected from disclosure."

But see:

US Bank Nat'l Ass'n v. PHL Variable Ins. Co., Nos. 12 Civ. 6811(CM)(JCF), 13 Civ. 1580(CM)(JCF), 2013 WL 5495542, at *8-10 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 3, 2013). The identities of individuals the bank interviewed as part of its investigation were protected as work product. The court reasoned that the identities of interviewed individuals could provide insight into counsel strategy; however, information about those who ordered and conducted the interviews, those who were present but not interviewed, and the dates of the interviews, were not protected work product.

3. Mixed Opinion & Ordinary Work Product

Courts recognize that when a document contains both fact and opinion work product, appropriate classification of the document for purposes of applying the work product doctrine is difficult. See In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 211 F.R.D. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 2002). When ordinary work product and opinions are mixed, courts may order the opinions or mental impressions redacted, thus rendering the remaining portion ordinary work product. See In re Martin Marietta Corp., 856 F.2d 619, 626 (4th Cir. 1988); Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 738 F.2d 587, 595 (3d Cir. 1984) (“Where the same document contains both facts and legal theories of attorney, adversary party can discover the facts. If facts and impressions are intertwined the document can be redacted.”); Chevron Corp. v. Weinberg Grp., 286 F.R.D. 95, 99-100 (D.D.C. 2012) (the proper procedure is to produce portions of the documents that are fact work product and redact those that are opinion work product, submitting a description of the excised material that complied with Rule 26 by explaining why the redacted portion qualifies for protection); Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Atl. Gas Light Co., 248 F.R.D. 663 (N.D. Ga. Feb. 19, 2008) (ultimately barring discovery of opinion work product contained in insurer’s claim file and permitting redaction of opinion work product prior to production, but requiring production of fact work product in light of proof of substantial need and undue burden once the underlying insurance coverage dispute was resolved). Alternatively, courts may examine the document in camera to determine if it should be disclosed. See Washington Bancorp. v. Said, 145 F.R.D. 274 (D.D.C. 1992).

C. ASSERTING WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION

The party asserting work product protection has the burden to show that the application is consistent with the purposes underlying the protection. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Mar. 19, 2002, 318 F.3d 379, 384 (2d Cir. 2003). The invoking party has the burden of proving all the required elements: that (1) the document or tangible thing (2) was prepared by or for a party’s representative (3) in anticipation of litigation. See Ferko v. Nat’l Ass’n for Stock Car Auto Racing, Inc., 218 F.R.D. 125, 135 (E.D. Tex. 2003); Garcia v. City of El Centro, 214 F.R.D. 587, 591 (S.D. Cal. 2003); Triple Five of Minn., Inc. v. Simon, 212 F.R.D. 523, 528 (D. Minn. 2002); Yurick v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 201 F.R.D. 465, 472 (D. Ariz. 2001); Compagnie Francaise d’Assurance Pour le Commerce Exterieur v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 105 F.R.D. 16, 41 (S.D.N.Y. 1984). When these elements are established, the burden shifts to the opposing side to show that substantial need and undue hardship exists. Hodges, Grant & Kaufmann v. U.S. Gov’t, 768 F.2d 719, 721 (5th Cir. 1985); Garcia v. City of El Centro, 214 F.R.D. 587, 591; Ferko, 218 F.R.D. at 135; RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 90 (2000). In resolving work product challenges, courts should examine the materials themselves rather than relying on descriptions provided by a party from whom discovery is sought. See Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Murray Sheet Metal Co., 967 F.2d 980, 985 (4th Cir. 1992).

A party invoking work product protection often meets its burden by producing a privilege log. See § I(E)(1)(a), supra. A party may also meet its burden by submitting affidavits or declarations. See Luca v. Wyndham Worldwide Corp., No. 2:16-cv-00746, 2019 WL 528701, at *2 (W.D. Pa. Feb. 11, 2019) (although email chain comprised of 108 email communications did not include attorneys, declaration submitted by chief commercial officer that the email communications reflected work product performed at the direction of counsel for the purpose of providing legal advice satisfied company's burden to demonstrate a legal purpose).

Work product protection may be asserted by the attorney independently of the client. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 43 F.3d 966, 971 (5th Cir. 1994) (“In contrast to the attorney-client privilege, the work product privilege belongs to both the client and the attorney, either one of whom may assert it.”); In re Sealed Case, 29 F.3d 715, 718 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (same); In re Doe, 662 F.2d 1073, 1079 (4th Cir. 1981) (same; Maplewood Partners, L.P. v. Indian Harbor Ins. Co., 295 F.R.D. 550, 618 (S.D. Fla. 2013) (the attorney and client may assert work product immunity, and others can waive that immunity). The attorney has an independent interest in privacy. Hobley v. Burge, 433 F.3d 946, 949 (7th Cir. 2006). See also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 90 cmt. c (2000). If the attorney's assertion of the doctrine could harm the client's interests, however, the client's interests may take precedence. Id. See also SEC v. McNaul, 271 F.R.D. 661, 667 (D. Kan. 2010) (law firm could not assert independent interest in work product, even opinion work product, over the interest of its client).

D. SCOPE OF WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION

Unlike the absolute protection afforded by the attorney-client privilege, the work product doctrine provides only qualified protection. Moreover, courts do provide greater protection to opinion work product than to ordinary work product. See Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 399-402 (1981); Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 511-13 (1947); In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Dec. 19, 1978, 599 F.2d 504, 512-13 (2d Cir. 1979). Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(3)(B) reflects the distinction between the protection that courts afford ordinary work product and opinion work product. Under Rule 26(b)(3), a court can order disclosure of work product if the party requesting it has (1) substantial need of the materials and (2) cannot obtain the substantial equivalent without undue hardship. See In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 211 F.R.D. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 2002). However, under the same rule, courts must “protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of a party's attorney or other representative concerning the litigation.” FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3)(A)(ii). Thus, courts treat the protection afforded opinion work product as nearly absolute while permitting discovery of ordinary work product upon a showing of substantial need and hardship. See In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 343 F.3d 658, 663 (3d Cir. 2003) (“Rule 26(b)(3) establishes two tiers of protections: first, work prepared in anticipation of litigation by an attorney or his agent is discoverable only upon a showing of need and hardship; second, ‘core’ or ‘opinion’ work product that encompasses the mental impressions, conclusions, opinion, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation is generally afforded near absolute protection from discovery.”)

(internal quotations omitted). The scope of protection afforded each type of work product is discussed in turn below.

1. Protection of Ordinary Work Product

Ordinary work product, which does not reveal the mental impressions of the attorney, is discoverable upon a showing of “substantial need” and “undue hardship.” FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3); Hodges, Grant & Kaufmann v. U.S. Gov’t, 768 F.2d 719, 721 (5th Cir. 1985); AT&T Corp. v. Microsoft Corp., No. 02-0164 MHP (JL), 2003 WL 21212614, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 18, 2003); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 88 (2000). The party seeking the production bears the burden of showing that “substantial need” and “undue hardship” warrant discovery of work product. In re Grand Jury (OO-2H), 211 F. Supp. 2d 555, 559 (M.D. Penn. 2001). But see Condon v. Petacque, 90 F.R.D. 53, 54-55 (N.D. Ill. 1981) (noting that the burden of showing substantial need is lessened the farther the material is from the attorney’s mental processes and impressions). To prove substantial need and undue hardship, courts require a party seeking production to show why the desired materials are relevant and that prejudice will result from the non-disclosure of those materials. See Loctite Corp. v. Fel-Pro, Inc., 667 F.2d 577, 582 (7th Cir. 1981); Nat’l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. AARPO, Inc., No. 97 Civ. 1438(JSM), 1998 WL 823611 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 25, 1998) (court refused to order disclosure of work product because party seeking disclosure failed to show that his ability to prepare for trial would be adversely affected by non-disclosure). Each part of the required showing, “substantial need” and “undue hardship,” is discussed below.

a. “Substantial Need”

Courts explain that “substantial need” consists “of the relative importance of the information in the documents to the party’s case and the ability to obtain that information by other means.” Stampley v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 23 F. App’x 467, 471 (6th Cir. 2001) (citing Suggs v. Whitaker, 152 F.R.D. 501, 507 (M.D.N.C. 1993)). Relevancy alone is insufficient to establish “substantial need.” Mandanés v. Madanés, 199 F.R.D. 135, 150 (S.D.N.Y. 2001). However, “substantial need” exists where the work product material is central to the substantive claims in litigation. Id.; SEC v. Sells, No. 11-cv-04941 CW (NC), 2013 WL 450844, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 4, 2013) (substantial need was shown where SEC had thwarted inquiry into factual information it had provided to its witnesses and defendant could not replicate the information through deposition); United States v. ISS Marine Servs., Inc., 905 F. Supp. 2d 121, 139 (D.D.C. 2012) (the government established a substantial need for an audit report relating to what the company knew and when they knew it based on the overlapping temporal nature of the request and the fact that the report appeared to be the only evidence of when the company became aware of the overpayments at issue). Courts are less likely to find that there is “substantial need” when information is available through other means. See AT&T Corp. v. Microsoft Corp., No. 02-0164 MHP (JL), 2003 WL 21212614, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 18, 2003) (“If the party seeking production could elicit the same information through deposition, then the need for the documents is diminished, unless there is undue hardship.”); Stampley, 23 F. App’x at 471 (affirming lower court decision that, because plaintiff had the opportunity to take the deposition of investigator that prepared insurance investigation report, there was no substantial need for work product).

Some courts find that substantial need exists with respect to contemporaneous statements made immediately following an accident. See Coogan v. Cornet Transp. Co., 199 F.R.D. 166, 167-68 (D. Md. 2001). Quoting the Fourth Circuit, the court in Coogan explained: “Statements of either the parties or witnesses taken immediately after the accident and involving a material issue in an action arising out of that accident, constitute ‘unique catalysts in the search for truth’ in the judicial process; and where the party seeking the discovery was disabled from making his own investigation at the time, there is sufficient showing under the amended Rule to warrant discovery.” Id. at 176 (quoting Nat’l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Murray Sheet Metal Co., 967 F.2d 980, 985 (4th Cir. 1992)); see also Zoller v. Conoco, Inc., 137 F.R.D. 9, 9-10 (W.D. La. 1991) (work product doctrine does not protect photographs taken as part of a defendant’s investigation of an accident when the scene had subsequently changed and no other substantial equivalent was available); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 88 cmt. b (2000).

Compare:

In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated July 6, 2005, 510 F.3d 180 (2d Cir. 2007). Recordings made surreptitiously by appellant, a mortgage broker who was the subject of a grand jury investigation, of his conversations with another target of the investigation (“Broker”) constituted fact work product but the government showed a substantial need for them. The court agreed with the district court that, even though the government could interview Broker about the contents of the recordings, the government’s need for the recordings was substantial, because it was unlikely that Broker would provide the same insight into the transactions at issue during a criminal investigation as he had during private conversations with an associate when he did not know they were being recorded.

United States v. Cameron-Ehlen Group, Inc., Case No. 13-cv-3003, 2019 WL 1453063, at *6 (D. Minn. April 2, 2019). Defendants demonstrated substantial need and inability to otherwise obtain information without undue burden where documents were solely within the government’s possession.

United States ex rel. Spletzer v. Allied Wired & Cable, Inc., No. 09-4744, 2015 WL 7014620, at *2-4 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 12, 2015). Qui tam relator’s statement, submitted to the government pursuant to requirements of the False Claims Act, is protected work product because defendants failed to show substantial need for relator statement where factual discovery was not complete and deposition of plaintiff/relator was still pending.

In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig., MDL Docket No. 1479, 2011 WL 253434, at *18 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011). Substantial need existed when, by defendant’s own admission, “the only source to probe to reconcile their off-label use denials with their public actions and criminal guilty plea is counsel’s work product” since none of the defendant’s employees could provide an explanation.

Asten v. City of Boulder, No. 08-cv-00845-PAB-MEH, 2010 WL 2612673 (D. Colo. June 29, 2010). Defendant had substantial need for tape recorded interview of witness when, during the deposition, the witness admitted to having poor memory.

Walker v. Cnty. of Contra Costa, 227 F.R.D. 529, 533-34 (N.D. Cal. 2005). employee showed substantial need for investigative report into hiring process where employee asserted a claim for discrimination in hiring and where the report was not prepared by counsel (and therefore did not constitute opinion work product).

Anchodo v. Anderson, Crenshaw, & Assocs., L.L.C., 256 F.R.D. 661, 673 (D.N.M. 2009). Anchodo did not show a substantial need for legal research conducted in anticipation of the suit because the research would have, at most, marginal relevance to a bona fide error defense.

SEC v. Stanard, No. 06 Civ. 7736(GEL), 2007 WL 1834709 (S.D.N.Y. June 26, 2007). Suspicion that witness would perjure himself on cross-examination did not create substantial need for government agent's original interview notes.

Gargano v. Metro-N., 222 F.R.D. 38, 41 (D. Conn. 2004). Noting that substantial need test could be met when witness could not recall facts at the time of deposition, but declining to find substantial need after unexplained delay of two years in taking deposition.

Dec. 11, 2012). The possibility of use for impeachment alone does not meet the standard of substantial need required to overcome the attorney work product protection.

b. "Undue Hardship"

In seeking to establish undue hardship, a party should be prepared to make a particularized showing that all other avenues of obtaining the sought after material have been exhausted. See Davis v. Emery Air Freight Corp., 212 F.R.D. 432, 436-37 (D. Me. 2003) (finding party's showing insufficient where only one deposition was taken). "As a general rule, inconvenience and expense do not constitute undue hardship." Stampley v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 23 F. App'x 467, 471 (6th Cir. 2001).

Courts commonly find undue hardship exists where a witness is unavailable to testify. See AT&T Corp. v. Microsoft Corp., No. 02-0164, 2003 WL 21212614, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 18, 2003) ("Undue hardship is demonstrable if witnesses are unavailable or cannot recall the events in question."); Madanes v. Madanes, 199 F.R.D. 135, 150 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (holding undue hardship exists where witnesses refuse to answer questions in deposition and testimony contains inconsistencies); see generally RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 88 cmt. b (2000); 6 J. MOORE ET AL., MOORE'S FEDERAL PRACTICE ¶ 26.70[5] (2019); 8 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 2025 (3d ed. West 2019). Courts consider a variety of ways in which materials may be unavailable, including:

- Where a witness is unavailable (similar to the Federal Rule of Evidence 804(a) standard). See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Investigation, 599 F.2d 1224, 1231 (3d Cir. 1979) (hardship shown due to deceased employee); A.F.L. Falck, S.P.A. v. E.A. Karay Co., 131 F.R.D. 46, 49-50 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (hardship shown because witness in Greece); Panter v. Marshall Field & Co., 80 F.R.D. 718, 725 (N.D. Ill. 1978) (death of witness was sufficient to allow production of work product).
- Where the materials concern statements made contemporaneously with an event and a witness cannot provide a similar account at later time. See McDougall v. Dunn, 468 F.2d 468, 474-76 (4th Cir. 1972); Stout v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 90 F.R.D. 160, 161-62 (S.D. Ohio 1981).

Where the passage of time has dulled the witness's memory. Maguffey v. Marquette Transportation Co., LLC, Case No. 5:20-CV-00185-TBR-LLK, 2022 WL 1091593, at *3-4 (W.D. Ky. Apr. 12, 2022) (mere passage of time is enough to constitute the substantial need required to compel production of protected work product; where witnesses conceded that, due to the lapse of time, they were unable to give an accurate account of events). In re Int'l Sys. & Controls Corp. Sec. Litig., 693 F.2d 1235, 1240 (5th Cir. 1982) (unsubstantiated assertions by party seeking discovery that witness's memory is likely faulty is insufficient); Mason v. United States Department of Justice, Civil Action No. 3:22-MC-00002-KDB, 2022 WL 737459, at *5 (W.D. N. Car. Mar. 10, 2022) (merely offering generalized statements that witnesses will likely be unable to recall details, while an entirely reasonable assumption, is insufficient to show undue hardship); "There is a split of authority among courts regarding whether the mere passage of time is enough to establish substantial need under Rule 26(b)(3)." Garcia v. City of El Centro, 214 F.R.D. 587, 595 (S.D. Cal. 2003) (citing cases). "[W]hen a party argues that substantial need exists because of the passage of time, the party seeking discovery must make a showing that the passage of time was not caused by avoidable negligence on their part." Id. at 596.

- Where materials are exclusively in the opposing party's possession. See Loctite Corp. v. Fel-Pro, Inc., 667 F.2d 577, 582 (7th Cir. 1981); United States v. ISS Marine Servs., Inc., 905 F. Supp. 2d 121, 138-39 (D.D.C. 2012) (undue hardship requirement met where all source documents underlying an audit report were in the exclusive custody and control of defendant's foreign affiliates, and therefore beyond the scope of the government's subpoena power); Metro Wastewater Reclamation Dist. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 142 F.R.D. 471, 478 (D. Colo. 1992) (information within the exclusive control of the opposing party can show hardship); Xerox Corp. v. IBM Corp., 64 F.R.D. 367, 381-82 (S.D.N.Y. 1974).
- Where the person possessing the materials has refused to respond to discovery or deposition requests. See In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 211 F.R.D. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 2002) (holding that source documents underlying Rule 30(b)(6) witness statements should be produced even though they constituted work product because statements were equivocal, documents created by conspirators had been destroyed, and witnesses were asserting their Fifth Amendment right to testify).

Often, courts treat the “substantial need” and “undue hardship” requirements as a single requirement, blurring any distinction between the two. As noted by the accompanying advisory committee notes to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(3), courts have considered a variety of factors in determining need and hardship, including the following:

- The importance of the materials to the preparation of the case. See Burlington Indus. v. Exxon Corp., 65 F.R.D. 26, 43 (D. Md. 1974).
- The difficulty in obtaining substantial equivalents of the desired materials. Portis v. City of Chi., No. 02 C 3139, 2004 WL 1535854, at *3-5 (N.D. Ill., July 7, 2004) (granting the city access to plaintiff’s database of crime data, but requiring city to contribute to cost of creating database); In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Nov. 9, 1979, 484 F. Supp. 1099, 1104-05 (S.D.N.Y. 1980) (attorney’s tape recording of relevant conversations discoverable since no alternative means of discovering equivalent information). However, courts find that the additional expense or inconvenience created by duplicative discovery or investigation does not ordinarily constitute undue hardship. See, e.g., Carver v. Allstate Ins. Co., 94 F.R.D. 131, 136 (S.D. Ga. 1982). Nevertheless, courts may find that undue hardship exists if the expenditure of cost and effort is substantially disproportionate to the amount at stake in the litigation and to the value of the desired information to the inquiring party. See In re Int’l Sys. & Controls Corp. Sec. Litig., 693 F.2d 1235, 1241 (5th Cir. 1982) (cost of discovery is a factor to consider for undue hardship); SEC v. Collins & Aikman Corp., 256 F.R.D. 403, 411 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (finding discovery of SEC’s work product was justified because “a page-by-page manual review of ten million pages of records is strikingly expensive in both monetary and human terms and constitutes ‘undue hardship’ by any definition”); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 88 cmt. b (2000).
- The uses to which the desired materials will be put.
- The availability of alternative means of obtaining the desired information if discovery is denied. See In re Int’l Sys. & Controls Corp. Sec. Litig., 693 F.2d 1235, 1240 (5th Cir. 1982); Osherow v. Vann (In re Hardwood P-G, Inc.), 403 B.R. 445, 465 (W.D. Tex. 2009) (having to “dig through 300 boxes of documents” to get the evidence by other means “may be odious” but “is not, however, onerous” and would not justify compelling production); EEOC v. Carrols Corp., 215 F.R.D. 46 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (finding that no substantial need existed requiring the production of hundreds of witness questionnaires where EEOC offered to provide summaries of likely testimony); In re Grand Jury (OO-2H), 211 F. Supp. 2d 555, 561 (M.D. Penn. 2001) (rejecting government claim of substantial need for attorney’s interview notes of party, where government could have interviewed party itself); Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. AARPO, Inc., No. 97 Civ. 1438, 1998 WL 823611 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 25, 1998) (transcripts of witness interviews conducted by opposing counsel that were protected work product should not be disclosed because party seeking disclosure had the opportunity to depose same witnesses); Burlington Indus. v. Exxon Corp., 65 F.R.D. 26, 43 (D. Md. 1974).

2. Protection of Opinion Work Product

Unlike ordinary work product, courts hold that opinion work product is discoverable, if at all, only upon a showing of extraordinary need. See Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 401-02 (1981) (“[a]s Rule 26 and Hickman make clear, such work product cannot be disclosed simply on a showing of substantial need and inability to obtain the equivalent without undue hardship”; instead, a “far stronger showing of necessity and unavailability” must be made); S. Scrap Material Co. v. Fleming, No. Civ.A. 01-2554, 2003 WL 21474516, at *7 (E.D. La. June 18, 2003) (“Indeed, opposing counsel may rarely, if ever use discovery mechanisms to obtain the research, analysis of legal theories, mental impressions, and notes of an attorney acting on behalf of his client in anticipation of litigation.”); Resolution Trust Corp. v. Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 200 F.R.D. 183, 190 (W.D.N.Y. 2001) (noting that, according to interpretations by the Supreme Court, opinion work product is accorded a higher standard of protection than ordinary work product). Circuits have split on the extent of protection afforded to opinion work product, with some applying absolute protection and others permitting discovery where a heightened standard is met. See Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Ass’n, 199 F.R.D. 677, 684-85 (N.D. Okla. 2001) (recognizing Circuit split).

Some courts have adopted the view that opinion work product is absolutely privileged, and not discoverable under any circumstances. See 8 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 2026 (3d ed. West 2019).

Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Murray Sheet Metal Co., 967 F.2d 980, 983-84 (4th Cir. 1992). Court held that if work product contains opinions or theories, then discovery is prohibited. However, if only part of the document contains opinion work product, then court can order production of a redacted copy.

Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 738 F.2d 587 (3d Cir. 1984). Court concluded that the provisions of FRCP 26(b)(3) outweighed the expert disclosure provisions of FRCP 26(b)(4) and therefore gave absolute protection to core opinion work product provided to expert witnesses. Court also found that, where opinion work product is intertwined with facts, the document can be redacted to allow production.

Garcia v. City of El Centro, 214 F.R.D. 587, 591 (S.D. Cal. 2003). “Opinion work-product, containing an attorney’s mental impressions or legal strategies, enjoys nearly absolute immunity and can be discovered only in very rare circumstances.”

Aktiebolag v. Andrx Pharm., Inc., 208 F.R.D. 92, 104 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). “As to [opinion work-product] documents, a far greater showing is required to pierce the doctrine’s protection, and there is some authority that the protection afforded such opinion work-product may be absolute.”

Eagle Compressors, Inc. v. HEC Liquidating Corp., 206 F.R.D. 474, 478 (N.D. Ill. 2002). “[O]pinion work-product is protected even when undue hardship exists and therefore, is for “all intents and purposes absolute.”

In re Grand Jury (OO-2H), 211 F. Supp. 2d 555, 561 (M.D. Penn. 2001). Documents containing mental impressions of attorney afforded “virtually absolute protection.”

SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Pentech Pharm., Inc., No. 00 C 2855, 2001 WL 1397876, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 6, 2001). “[I]f the work product involves the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation,” the immunity from production is “for all intents and purposes absolute, whether or not the party seeking discovery has demonstrated a substantial need” (internal quotations omitted).

Shipes v. BIC Corp., 154 F.R.D. 301, 305 (M.D. Ga. 1994). “It is questionable whether any showing justifies disclosure of an attorney’s mental impressions.”

APL Corp. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 91 F.R.D. 10, 14 (D. Md. 1980). Opinion work product is given absolute protection.

Other courts, however, find that opinion work product is subject only to a qualified protection. In Upjohn, the Supreme Court stopped short of ruling that opinion work product is always protected. Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 399-402 (1981). Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26 states that courts that order discovery of work product materials “must protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of a party’s attorney or other representative concerning the litigation.” FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3)(B). Many courts, however, refer to a standard of “extraordinary need or special circumstances” that must be met to justify disclosure of opinion work product. See Upjohn, 449 U.S. at 399-402; In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 343 F.3d 658, 664 (3d Cir. 2003). These courts, however, have not defined the situations that may present the rare circumstance that subjects opinion work product to discovery. As a practical matter, therefore, there may be little difference between the two approaches.

See:

In re United States, 321 F. App’x 953, 958 (Fed. Cir. 2009). Noting that the Supreme Court in Upjohn expressly declined to decide whether opinion work product could ever be produced and holding that substantial need and undue hardship standards are not sufficient to overcome the protection given to opinion work product.

Holmgren v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 976 F.2d 573, 577 (9th Cir. 1992). Opinion work product protected even though not absolutely privileged. Instead, court must consider the facts on a case-by-case basis.

Sporck v. Peil, 759 F.2d 312, 316 (3d Cir. 1985). Opinion work product accorded “almost absolute protection from discovery because any slight factual content that such items may have is generally outweighed by the adversary system’s interest in maintaining the privacy of an attorney’s thought processes and in ensuring that each side relies on its own wit in preparing their respective cases.” Under the facts of the case, court found that the opinion work product was protected.

In re Int’l Sys. & Controls Corp. Sec. Litig., 693 F.2d 1235, 1240 (5th Cir. 1982). Opinion work product entitled to “almost absolute protection.” Under the facts of the case, court found that the opinion work product was protected.

In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 809-10 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Opinion work product can be discovered only upon “extraordinary justification.” Under the facts of the case, court found that the opinion work product was protected.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Nov. 8, 1979, 622 F.2d 933, 935-36 (6th Cir. 1980). Opinion work product may be disclosed in rare and extraordinary circumstances. Under the facts of the case, court found that the opinion work product was protected.

SEC v. Sentinel Mgmt. Grp., Inc., No. 07 C 4684, 2010 WL 4977220 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 2, 2010). SEC was required to produce its opinion work product – summaries of its pre-trial witness interviews – where the witnesses who provided information to the SEC were no longer available to be deposed due to their invocation of the Fifth Amendment.

Eagle-Picher Indus., Inc. v. United States, 11 Cl. Ct. 452, 457 (Cl. Ct. 1987). Discovery of opinion work product “is allowed sparingly.” Under the facts of the case, court found that the opinion work product was protected.

Moe v. Sys. Transp., Inc., 270 F.R.D. 613 (D. Mont. 2010). The court allowed discovery of opinion work product in bad faith insurance litigation.

Torres v. Goddard, No. CV 06-2482-PHX-SMM, 2010 WL 3023272 (D. Ariz. July 30, 2010). Opinion work product may be discovered and admitted only when mental impressions are at issue in a case and the need for the material is compelling.

Andrews v. St. Paul Re-Ins. Co. Ltd., No. 00-CV-0283K(J), 2000 WL 1760638, at *2 (N.D. Okla. Nov. 29, 2000). Noting the distinction between opinion and ordinary work product, and imposing a heavier burden for showing a need for opinion work product.

AIA Holdings, S.A. v. Lehman Bros., Inc., No. 97Civ.4978(LMN)(HBP), 2000 WL 1639417, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 1, 2000). Where defendants deposed co-defendant in Lebanese prison, and at plaintiffs’ deposition three years later co-defendant was unable to recall the events in question, unavailability of discovery of the forgotten facts was not sufficient to compel disclosure of opinion work product consisting of defendant-attorney’s notes from the earlier deposition. Though declining to adopt the “essential element” test endorsed by Moore’s Federal Practice, the court held that a higher showing must be made beyond the “broad standard of relevance applicable in discovery.”

United States v. Jacques Dessange, Inc., No. S2 99 CR 1182 DLC, 2000 WL 310345 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 27, 2000). Criminal defense counsel’s opinion work product, here counsel’s notes of client’s interviews with government, will be given heightened protection because the work product doctrine is particularly vital in assuring the proper functioning of the criminal justice system. Although co-defendant had an interest in the contents of the notes, that interest did not justify disclosure.

Harris v. United States, No. 97 Civ. 1904(CSH), 1998 WL 26187, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 26, 1998). Production of opinion work product was warranted in habeas corpus proceeding where petitioner sought the production of opinion work product generated in connection with his prosecution to support a collateral attack on his convictions.

3. Protection of Mixed Opinion and Ordinary Work Product

If an item contains both ordinary and opinion work product, then the court can order redaction of the opinion work product before the document is produced. E.g., Nat’l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Murray Sheet Metal Co., 967 F.2d 980, 985 (4th Cir. 1992); Chevron Corp. v. Weinberg Grp., 286 F.R.D. 95, 99-100 (D.D.C. 2012) (the proper procedure is to produce portions of the documents that are fact work product and redact those that are opinion work product, submitting a description of the excised material that complies with Rule 26 by explaining why the redacted portion qualifies for protection); Trout v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., No. 06-cv-00236-EWN-MEH, 2006 WL 2683731, at *3 (D. Colo. Sept. 19, 2006) (“If any work product is intermingled with documents reflecting the [non-privileged information], the documents may be carefully redacted.”). But see Bingham v. Baycare Health Sys., No. 8:14-cv-73-T-23JSS, 2016 WL 1546504, at *6-7 (M.D. Fla. Apr. 15, 2016) (finding redaction of opinion work product inappropriate where “facts are interwoven with analysis and opinion” and where “selection of certain facts” reflects “insight and impressions of the case”).

E. WAIVER OF WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION

1. Consent, Disclaimer and Defective Assertion

Either an attorney or a client can relinquish work product protection. Protection is most clearly relinquished through consent, which acts as a waiver of the doctrine and leaves the underlying communications unprotected. See generally United States v. Caldwell, 7 F.4th 191, 207 (4th Cir. 2021) (attorney or client may forfeit work product protection by freely and voluntarily disclosing the contents of otherwise protected work product to someone with interests adverse to the client); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 91 cmt. b (2000).

Occasionally, an attorney voluntarily waives work product protection and subsequently attempts to reassert it. In such cases, the client will be estopped from invoking work product protection if an adversary has detrimentally relied on the disclosure or if the interests of justice and fairness otherwise require waiver. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 220 F.3d 406, 409 (5th Cir. 2000) (in-house counsel lacked standing to assert the work product privilege once the corporation disclosed documents sought by the government); Pamida, Inc. v. E.S. Original, Inc., 281 F.3d 726, 732 (8th Cir. 2002) (“With respect to the issue of implied waiver, the Court must not only look at whether [the party] intended to waive the privilege, but also whether the interests [of] fairness and consistency mandate a finding of waiver.”); In re Subpoenas Duces Tecum, 738 F.2d 1367, 1375 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (addressing generally the issues of fairness in disclosure); Navajo Nation v. Peabody Holding Co, Inc., 209 F. Supp. 2d 269, 286-87 (D.D.C. 2002) (following In re Subpoenas discussing unfairness of selectively asserting work product privilege); Bank of Am., N.A. v. Terra Nova Ins. Co., 212 F.R.D. 166, 172 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (noting that fairness, in part, dictates that disclosure to government waives work product privilege to other adversaries).

Although an attorney may not be able to assert the work product protection once the client has waived the privilege, some courts have indicated that an attorney may assert the protection even after it is abandoned by the client. In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 809 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (suggesting that “[t]o the extent that [the client’s and attorney’s] interest do not conflict, attorneys should be entitled to claim privilege even if their clients have relinquished their claims”). In particular, courts have suggested the attorney might have standing to assert the protection as to opinion work product. See, e.g., Catino v. Travelers Ins. Co., 136 F.R.D. 534, 539 (D. Mass. 1991) (“[I]f the client waives the [work product] protection, the attorney’s standing should be limited to objecting only to disclosure of those types of items which would destroy the inviolate nature of the attorney's thought process as to all aspects of the case.”).

Waiver can also occur when the client fails to effectively assert the work product doctrine. For example, a client's failure to object properly in response to a discovery request may waive the protection of the doctrine. See Asserting Work Product Protection, § III.C, supra; RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 91(3) (2000).

2. Selective Disclosure to Third Parties and Adversaries

Unlike the attorney-client privilege, selective disclosure of work product to some, but not to others, is permitted. See 8 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 2024 (3d ed. West 2019). Because the work product doctrine protects trial preparation materials, only disclosures that show an indifference to protecting strategy will result in waiver. See In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 809 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (“[B]ecause [the work product doctrine] looks to the vitality of the adversary system rather than simply seeking to preserve confidentiality, the work product privilege is not automatically waived by any disclosure to a third party.”); U.S. ex rel. Purcell v. MWI Corp., 209 F.R.D. 21, 25 (D.D.C. 2002) (“[A] party does not automatically waive the work product privilege by disclosure to a third party.”); Medinol Ltd. v. Bos. Scientific Corp., 214 F.R.D. 113, 114 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (“Unlike the attorney-client privilege . . . work product protection is not necessarily waived by disclosures to third persons.”); Chubb Integrated Sys., Ltd. v. Nat’l Bank of Wash., 103 F.R.D. 52, 63 (D.D.C. 1984); Varel v. Banc One Capital Partners, Inc., No. CA3:93-CV-1614-R, 1997 WL 86457, at *3 (N.D. Tex. Feb. 25, 1997) (“In light of the distinctive purpose underlying the work product doctrine, a general subject-matter waiver of work product immunity is warranted only when the facts relevant to a narrow issue are in dispute and have been disclosed in such a way that it would be unfair to deny the other party access to other facts relevant to the same subject matter.”). Such indifference is most often demonstrated when a lawyer discloses material knowing that it is likely to be seen by an adversary. In re Subpoenas Duces Tecum, 738 F.2d 1367 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (work product protection lost when materials provided to adversary); Meoli v. Am. Med. Serv., 287 B.R. 808, 817 (S.D. Cal. 2003) (“Voluntary disclosure of attorney work product to an adversary in the litigation defeats the policy underlying the privilege.”); Shulton, Inc. v. Optel Corp., No. 85-2925, 1987 WL 19491 (D.N.J. Nov. 4, 1987); 6 J. MOORE ET AL., MOORE’S FEDERAL PRACTICE ¶ 26.47[5] (2019); 8 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 2024 (3d ed. West 2019) (disclosure to third persons does not waive work product protection unless “it has substantially increased the opportunities for potential adversaries to obtain the information”).

Thus, waiver will occur when a party discloses material in circumstances under which there is significant likelihood that an adversary or potential adversary will obtain it. United States v. Sanmina Corp., 968 F.3d 1108, 1121 (9th Cir. 2020) (disclosure of work product to a third party does not waive the protection unless such disclosure is made to an adversary in litigation or has substantially increased the opportunities for potential adversaries to obtain the information); United States v. Stewart, 287 F. Supp. 2d 461, 468 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (“Most courts that have analyzed the question whether a party has waived work product protection over documents by disclosing them to third parties have found waiver only when the disclosures substantially increased the opportunities for potential adversaries to obtain the information.”) (internal quotations omitted); Constr. Indust. Servs. Corp. v. Hanover Ins. Co., 206 F.R.D. 43, 49 (E.D.N.Y. 2001) (“[P]rotection is waived only if such disclosure substantially increases the opportunity for potential adversaries to obtain the information.”) (internal quotations omitted). Mere disclosure to a witness does not necessarily waive protection as this activity is consistent with the work product doctrine by allowing the attorney to prepare for litigation. See, e.g., In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 818 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (selective disclosure is not inimical to the theory underlying the work product doctrine); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Dec. 18, 1981, 561 F. Supp. 1247, 1257 (E.D.N.Y. 1982).

S.E.C. v. Herrera, 324 F.R.D. 258, 264 (S.D. Fla. 2017). Work product protection waived where lawyers conducting internal investigation voluntarily gave oral summaries of work product notes and memoranda to SEC.

Dresser-Rand Co. v. Shuttle & Koerting Acquisition Co., 242 F. Supp. 3d 576, 579 (S.D. Tex. 2017). Work product protection waived where company voluntarily disclosed expert report to government to encourage criminal prosecution of former employees.

United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co., Ltd., 315 F.R.D. 103, 113-15 (D.D.C. 2016). Claimant in asset forfeiture action asserted work product privilege over a request for private letter ruling (“PLR Request”) he had filed with the Internal Revenue Service (“IRS”). The court held that claimant waived work product protection for his PLR Request, since the IRS was claimant’s potential future adversary.

In re Chevron Corp., 633 F.3d 153, 165-166 (3d Cir. 2011). Work product protection waived by disclosing work product to neutral court-appointed expert with intention that the expert would incorporate the work product into report that would disclose work product to the litigation adversary.

In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., No. 04-MD-1616-JWL, 2009 WL 2058759, at *5 (D. Kan. July 15, 2009). Plaintiffs’ disclosure of work product to some adversaries waived work product protection as to all other adversaries.

Goodrich Corp. v. EPA, 593 F. Supp. 2d 184, 191-93 (D.D.C. 2009). Defendant EPA waived work product protection because it failed to “exercise the kind of ‘zealous stewardship’ of attorney work product that the law demands” when it shared work product with a state regional board, which in turn disclosed it to the plaintiff.

In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 249 F.R.D. 457, 465-66 (S.D.N.Y. 2008). Disclosures made by company to the United States Attorney’s Office and SEC regarding share allocation during an initial public offering resulted in a waiver of work product privilege despite confidentiality agreements. Court will not find selective waiver absent special circumstances, which did not exist here.

Simmons, Inc. v. Bombardier, Inc., 221 F.R.D. 4, 8 (D.D.C. 2004). “The work product privilege may be waived by the voluntary release of materials otherwise protected by it. Generally, the privilege is waived only for materials relevant to a particular, narrow subject matter, when it would be unfair to deny the other party an opportunity to discover other facts relevant to that subject matter” (quotations and citations omitted).

With:

Anderson v. Seaworld Parks and Entertainment, Inc. 329 F.R.D. 628, 635 (N.D. Cal. 2019) (disclosure of pre-existing work product to public relations consultant hired by counsel did not waive work product protections; narrowly tailored redactions to protect work product allowed by the court.

RKF Retail Holdings, LLC v. Tropicana Las Vegas, Inc., No. 2:14-cv-01232, 2017 WL 2292818, at *6 (D. Nev. May 25, 2017). Litigation-related communications exchanged during an acquisition between plaintiff and defendant constituted work product even though the communications were primarily business-related and were disclosed during the acquisition. However, disclosing documents to a buyer did not waive the work product doctrine because the disclosure did not substantially increase the opportunity for potential adversaries to obtain the information.

Brown v. NCL (Bahamas), Ltd., 155 F. Supp. 3d 1335, 1337-42 (S.D. Fla. 2015). Cruise ship operator did not waive work product protection with respect to passenger-drafted witness statement when it disclosed statement to port police, given that disclosure was made to aid police investigation and there was nothing in the record to suggest an adversarial relationship between operator and police.

Miller UK Ltd v. Caterpillar, Inc., No. 10 C 3770, 2014 WL 67340, at *16-18 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 6, 2014). Disclosure of work product to potential third-party litigation funders with whom plaintiff had entered into written or oral confidentiality agreements did not substantially increase the likelihood that plaintiff's adversaries would come into possession of the materials. Accordingly, these disclosure did not constitute waiver.

Skynet Elec Co. v. Flextronics Int'l, Ltd., No. C 12-06317 WHA, 2013 WL 6623874, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 16, 2013). Observing that if a document otherwise protected by work-product immunity is disclosed to others with an actual intention, or reasonable probability, that an opposing party may see the document, the party who made the disclosure cannot subsequently claim work-product immunity. However, in this case, plaintiff's disclosure of work product to its patent agent located in Taiwan did not make it substantially more likely that defendants would discover it. Among other things, Taiwanese patent agents are bound by law from disclosing their clients' confidential work product.

Bryan Corp. v. Chemwerth, Inc., 296 F.R.D. 31, 39-40 (D. Mass. 2013). Disclosure of documents to buyer's consultant did not increase the opportunity that privileged documents would fall into the hands of the buyer's adversaries. Thus, work product protection over documents was not waived.

Williams & Connolly LLP v. SEC, 729 F. Supp. 2d 202, 210-12 (D.D.C. 2010). The SEC did not waive protection by providing handwritten notes of SEC lawyers to the Department of Justice, even though the DOJ was later required to produce the notes under FRCP 16.

Plew v. Limited Brands, Inc., No. 08 Civ 3741(LTS)(MHD), 2009 WL 1119414, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 23, 2009). Emails between defendants and third party supplier were protected by work product doctrine because the third party's interests were aligned with the defendants.

SEC v. Schroeder, No. C07-03798 JW (HRL), 2009 WL 1125579, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 7, 2009). Draft interview memoranda prepared by outside counsel during an internal investigation remained protected by the work product doctrine even though the final versions of the memoranda had been disclosed to the SEC and the defendant. Simply disclosing a final product to the public or third party does not destroy the underlying privilege attaching to drafts of the final product.

E.B. v. N.Y.C. Bd. of Educ., No. CV 2002-5118(CPS)(MDG), 2007 WL 2874862, at *6 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 27, 2007). Questionnaires and responses disclosed between the Department of Education's Office of Legal Services and the Department of Education's Office of Youth Development and School-Community Services did not waive work product privilege when the offices shared a common interest, rather than an adversarial relationship, and when the disclosure did not increase the risk that adversaries would obtain the documents.

In re Vecco Instruments, Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 05-MD-1695(CM)(GAY), 2007 WL 210110 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 25, 2007). Defendants did not waive work product protection when they issued a press release and wrote a letter to the SEC briefly summarizing the findings of their internal investigation without quoting, referencing, or paraphrasing any of the documents at issue.

Bagley v. TRW, Inc., 212 F.R.D. 554, 561-562 (C.D. Cal. 2003). In a qui tam action, "relator's written disclosure to the government pursuant to [31 U.S.C. §] 3730(b)(2) does not operate as a waiver of work product" protection.

United States v. Stewart, 287 F. Supp. 2d 461, 469 (S.D.N.Y. 2003). Martha Stewart did not waive work product protection by forwarding her daughter an email composed in response to her attorneys' request for factual information. By forwarding the email to a family member, Stewart did not substantially increase the risk of disclosure to an adversary.

Hatco Corp. v. W.R. Grace & Co., No. 89-1031, 1991 WL 83126 (D.N.J. May 10, 1991). Client distributed legal memoranda prepared by six law firms to several insurance companies that were not clients of the law firms. Court found that this waived the attorney-client privilege for the memoranda. However, work product protection remained so long as the memoranda were not disclosed to an adversary.

3. Disclosure to Auditors

Although disclosure of attorney-client privileged communications to outside auditors waives the attorney-client privilege under federal common law, many courts have held that work product protection is preserved. The D.C. Circuit, the first Circuit to address this issue, held in United States v. Deloitte, 610 F.3d 129, 139 (D.C. Cir. 2010), that disclosure of pre-existing work product to an auditor did not result in waiver. The court explained that the “tension” between an auditor and a corporation that arises from the auditor’s need to scrutinize and investigate a corporation’s books and records is not the equivalent of an adversarial relationship contemplated by the work product doctrine. Accordingly, the auditor was not a “conduit” as applied under the doctrine, and the company had a reasonable expectation of confidentiality when it disclosed pre-existing work product to its auditor.

The majority of district court decisions addressing this issue have held that disclosure of pre-existing work product to auditors does not waive work product protection.

See:

Vacco v. Harrah’s Operating Co., No. 1:07-CV-0663 (TJM/DEP), 2008 WL 4793719, at *6-7 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 29, 2008). Audit letters prepared by counsel at the request of auditors were protected by the work product doctrine, and disclosure of pre-existing work product to auditors did not waive otherwise applicable work product protections.

SEC v. Roberts, 254 F.R.D. 371, 380-82 (N.D. Cal. 2008). Adopting the approach applied in Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. v. Allegheny Energy, Inc., 229 F.R.D. 441, 445-49 (S.D.N.Y. 2004), the court found that information exchanged between attorneys and auditors did not waive work product protection.

Regions Fin. Corp. v. United States, No. 2:06-CV-00895-RDP, 2008 WL 2139008, at *8 (N.D. Ala. May 8, 2008). Disclosure of attorney work product to a company’s auditor did not waive the documents’ work product protection. While protection may be waived if documents are made available to an adversary or to a third party that could serve as a conduit to an adversary, the court found that there was “simply no conceivable scenario” under which the company’s auditor would file a lawsuit against the company based on the documents’ contents, particularly when a confidentiality agreement between the company and the auditor required the auditor to maintain the confidentiality of the documents.

Int’l Design Concepts, Inc. v. Saks Inc., No. 05 Civ. 4754(PKC), 2006 WL 1564684, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 6, 2006). Adopting the approach applied in Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. v. Allegheny Energy, Inc., 229 F.R.D. 441, 445-49 (S.D.N.Y. 2004), the court held that outside auditors are not adversaries of their clients but rather share an interest in detecting corporate fraud.

Lawrence E. Jaffe Pension Plan v. Household Int’l, Inc., 237 F.R.D. 176, 183 (N.D. Ill. 2006). Audit letters, litigation database, and loss reserve information were all subject to work product protection despite disclosure to outside auditors.

Frank Betz Assocs. v. Jim Walter Homes, Inc., 226 F.R.D. 533, 534 (D.S.C. 2005). Amount of litigation reserve disclosed to auditors was unlikely to reach a potential adversary, so disclosure did not waive work product protection.

Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. v. Allegheny Energy, Inc., 229 F.R.D. 441, 445-49 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). Auditor's relationship with its client was not adversarial in same sense as relationship between litigation adversaries. A company and its auditor are or should be united to "prevent, detect, and root out corporate fraud," and courts should encourage this cooperation.

Sherman v. Ryan, 911 N.E.2d 378, 400-02 (Ill. App. Ct. 2009). Work product protection was not waived despite disclosure to outside auditors and financial advisors. The court both found federal precedent persuasive and reasoned that the Illinois accountant-client privilege statute evinced the legislature's acknowledgment of the confidentiality of the accountant-client relationship.

United States v. Adlman, 134 F.3d 1194, 1200 (2d Cir. 1998). Concluding, in dicta, that work product doctrine would protect a memorandum prepared by a company's attorneys at an independent auditor's request "estimating the likelihood of success in litigation and to assist in estimating what should be reserved for litigation losses."

In United States v. Hatfield, No. 06-CR-0550 (JS), 2010 WL 183522 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 8, 2010), however, the court held that disclosure of protected work product to an independent auditor waived the work product protection. The court reasoned that although a public auditor's interests are not necessarily adversarial to its client, at a minimum they do not share common litigation objectives, and the auditor's interests are always potentially adverse: "because [the auditor's] interests allied with the truth while [the defendant's] legal interests aligned with whatever was best for [the defendant], [the auditor] was always potentially adverse to him, as the possibility always existed that its investigation would reveal that he acted fraudulently or negligently." Id. at *3.

In re Raytheon Sec. Litig., 218 F.R.D. 354, 360-61 (D. Mass. 2003). Observing that waiver of work product protection by disclosure to third parties exists where disclosure "substantially increased the opportunities for potential adversaries to obtain the information" and requesting further briefing on whether disclosure to independent auditors would be likely to result in further disclosure.

Medinol, Ltd. v. Bos. Scientific Corp., 214 F.R.D. 113, 115 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). Minutes and other materials of defendant's Special Litigation Committee disclosed to defendant's outside auditor were not protected by the work product doctrine.

4. Extent of Waiver

Generally, disclosure of work product will result only in the waiver of work product protection for the particular materials disclosed and not for all related materials involving the same subject matter. See FED. R. EVID. 502(a); Bramlette v. Hyundai Motor Co., No. 91 C 3635, 1993 WL 338980 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 1, 1993) (disclosure of five reports from internal investigation did not waive work product protection for seven related reports that were kept confidential); In Re Air Crash Disaster, 133 F.R.D. 515, 527 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (drafts underlying disclosed report still protected under work product doctrine); United States v.

Willis, 565 F. Supp. 1186, 1220 n. 64 (S.D. Iowa 1983); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 91 cmt. c (2000) 8 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 2024 (3d ed. West 2019) (suggesting that disclosure of some materials to an adversary does not waive protection over underlying notes and memoranda on the same subject matter).

In the context of implied waiver, the Ninth Circuit has cautioned that “the scope of [a party’s] waiver must be ‘closely tailored . . . to the needs of the opposing party’ and limited to what is necessary to rectify any unfair advantage gained by [the party] from its conduct.” United States v. Sanmina Corp., 968 F.3d 1107, 1124 (9th Cir. 2020) (quoting Bittaker v. Woodford, 331 F.3d 715, 720 (9th Cir. 2003)).

Federal Rule of Evidence 502(a) provides that a voluntary disclosure of privileged information in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency will result in subject matter waiver only if the protected document is voluntarily disclosed and “fairness requires” that the undisclosed and disclosed documents be considered together. FED. R. EVID. 502(a). The Explanatory Note to Rule 502(a) explains that subject matter waiver should be the exception, not the rule: “Subject matter waiver is limited to situations in which a party intentionally puts protected information into the litigation in a selective, misleading and unfair manner.” FED. R. EVID. 502(a) advisory committee’s note. The advisory committee cited In re United Mine Workers of America Employee Benefit Plans Litigation, 159 F.R.D. 307, 312 (D.D.C. 1994), as an example of the proper scope of waiver. In re United Mine Workers limited the waiver of the work product privilege to documents actually disclosed. 159 F.R.D. at 312. The court found that waiver was only proper where there is a deliberate disclosure intended to gain tactical advantage. Id. Practitioners looking for guidance on when undisclosed privileged information “ought in fairness” be disclosed can look to decisions interpreting Rule 106, which the Explanatory Note identifies as the source of this language. “Under both [FRE 502(a) and 106], a party that makes a selective, misleading presentation that is unfair to the adversary opens itself to a more complete and accurate presentation.” FED. R. EVID. 502(a) advisory committee’s note. See Chick-Fil-A v. ExxonMobil Corp., No. 08-61422-CIV, 2009 WL 3763032, at *7 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 10, 2009) (applying FRE 502(a) to find that defendant’s voluntary disclosure of otherwise protected work product resulted in subject matter waiver with respect to ordinary work product).

Graff v. Haverhill North Coke Co., No. 1:09-cv-670, 2012 WL 5495514, at *16-17 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 13, 2012). The court observed that it would have been unfair to withhold documents underlying the disclosed audit, and found that subject matter waiver was warranted.

Gruss v. Zwirn, No. 09 civ. 6441(PGG)(MHD), 2013 WL 3481350, at *12-13 (S.D.N.Y. July 10, 2013), order to clarify denied, 296 F.R.D. 224 (S.D.N.Y. 2013). Voluntary disclosure to the government of PowerPoint presentation setting forth summaries of 21 witness interviews waived protection as to factual portions of all underlying attorney interview notes and summaries.

McGrath v. Nassau Cnty. Health Care Corp., 204 F.R.D. 240, 248 (E.D.N.Y. 2001). Where defendant asserted its prompt investigation of an employee's EEOC complaint as an affirmative defense, plaintiff was entitled to full discovery of information even though an attorney conducted the investigation.

Hernandez v. Tanninen, 604 F.3d 1095, 1100-01 (9th Cir. 2010). Reversing the district court's finding of blanket waiver, the Ninth Circuit held that plaintiff's disclosure of notes of his attorney's communications with the defendant constituted waiver only as to that subject.

B.M.I. Interior Yacht Refinishing, Inc. v. M/Y Claire, No. 13-62676-CIV-WILLIAMS/SIMONTON, 2015 WL 4316929, at *5-7 (S.D. Fla. July 15, 2015). Applying FRE 502(a)(3), partial oral disclosure of non-testifying expert's report did not waive work product protection as to the remainder of the report or other materials concerning the same subject matter as the report.

Freedman v. Weatherford Int'l Ltd., No. 12 Civ. 2121(LAK)(JCF), 2014 WL 3767034, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. July 25, 2014). Defendant's disclosure of internal investigation materials to the SEC did not result in subject matter waiver where there was no indication defendant sought to use the disclosure to its advantage in litigation.

Stoner v. N.Y.C. Ballet Co., No. 99 Civ. 0196 BSJMHD, 2003 WL 749893, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 5, 2003). Finding that party seeking discovery of otherwise privileged material failed to show that this was a case where its adversary unfairly disclosed only a portion of a protected document.

Court rejected counsel's assertion, made in a declaration to the court, that the entirety of counsel's investigation interview notes and summaries were opinion work product. "[A]ttorney representations regarding the content of allegedly privileged materials do not preclude a court from conducting an in camera review of such materials. . . . Chambers v. Allstate Ins. Co., 206 F.R.D. 579, 589 (S.D. W. Va. 2002). "There is subject matter waiver when a party discloses non-opinion work product to an adversary, but there is no subject matter waiver of opinion work product."

Static Control Components, Inc. v. Darkprint Imaging, 201 F.R.D. 431, 435 (M.D.N.C. 2001). Where party used tape recording of interview, waiver extended to non-opinion work product. However, the court did not require production of attorney notes containing opinion work product.

5. Selective Waiver: Reporting to Government Agencies

When litigants voluntarily disclose documents or communications to federal agencies, those materials may lose work product protection and be subject to discovery by other parties, including private litigants. Corporations have argued that such voluntary disclosures to government agencies are solely for the benefit of the public agency's review, and not for purposes of private civil litigation. These companies have argued that limited disclosures should constitute no more than a "selective" waiver. See Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Republic of the Phil., 951 F.2d 1414, 1423 n.7 (3d Cir. 1991). The selective waiver concept allows a party to disclose a document to the government but retain work product protection against other litigants. Diversified Indus., Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596, 611 (8th Cir. 1977) (en banc).

Most Circuits, however, have rejected the selective waiver doctrine with respect to work product protection as well as attorney-client privilege. See In re Pac. Pictures Corp., 679 F.3d 1121, 1128 (9th Cir. 2012) (en banc) (broadly rejecting selective waiver doctrine); In re Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp. Billing Practices Litig., 293 F.3d 289, 306 (6th Cir. 2002) ("Many of the reasons for disallowing selective waiver in the attorney-client privilege context also apply to the work product doctrine."); In re Qwest Commc'ns Int'l Inc., 450 F.3d 1179, 1196 (10th Cir. 2006), (2006) (in a matter of first impression, defendant corporation's production of privileged materials to federal agencies in the course of agencies' investigation constituted waiver of privilege as to third-party civil litigants, regardless of written confidentiality agreements between the corporation, the SEC, and the DOJ pursuant to which the corporation agreed to a limited release of the privileged documents); Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Republic of the Phil., 951 F.2d 1414 (3d Cir. 1991) (disclosure of work product during government's investigation of corporation fully waived any attorney-client or work product protection, even with respect to third parties in civil litigation); In re Subpoenas Duces Tecum, 738 F.2d 1367, 1369 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (rejecting idea of "limited" (selective) waiver); Permian Corp. v. United States, 665 F.2d 1214, 1220 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (same); In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 249 F.R.D. 457, 465 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (issuing an opinion broadly critical of selective waiver and holding that "there is a strong presumption against a finding of selective waiver, and it should not be permitted absent special circumstances").

A party waives work product protection by disclosing information to an adversary, or under circumstances that substantially increase the likelihood that the potential adversary could obtain the information. Thus, work product have done so based on the rationale that the government is an adversary or potential adversary. See, e.g., In re Qwest Commc'ns Int'l Inc., 450 F.3d 1179, 1196 (10th Cir. 2006) ("Qwest disclosed to adversaries under agreements which did not realistically control further dissemination."); In re Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp. Billing Practices Litig., 293 F.3d 289, 305-06 (6th Cir. 2002) ("When a party discloses materials to a government agency investigating allegations against it, it uses those materials to forestall prosecution (if the charges are unfounded) or to obtain lenient treatment (in the case of well-founded allegations). These objectives, however rational, are foreign to the objectives underlying the work-product doctrine.”); United States v. Mass. Inst. of Tech., 129 F.3d 681, 687 (1st Cir. 1997) (government audit agency reviewing party’s expense submissions submitted in response to an IRS summons was a potential adversary); In re Steinhardt Partners L.P., 9 F.3d 230 (2d Cir. 1993) (voluntary submission to the SEC waived work product protection in a later civil class action suit because the submission constituted a voluntary disclosure to an adversary; the court rejected the selective waiver concept since cooperation with the SEC was not likely to be affected in future cases but declined to lay down a per se rule of waiver in all cases, holding instead that analysis should be done on a case-by-case basis); Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Republic of Philippines, 951 F.2d 1414, 1429-29 (3d Cir. 1991) (DOJ and SEC considered company’s adversaries where company was the target of investigations by those agencies); In re Martin Marietta Corp., 856 F.2d 619, 625 (4th Cir. 1988) (U.S. Attorney and Department of Defense were adversaries where disclosures were made in a direct attempt to settle active controversies); In re Subpoena Duces Tecum, 738 F.2d 1367, 1372 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (adversarial relationship existed where disclosure was made to convince SEC not to pursue formal investigation or enforcement).

Where the disclosing party and the government share a common interest, however, courts may find that there has been no waiver. See, e.g., Castle v. Sangamo Weston, Inc., 744 F.2d 1464, 1466 (11th Cir. 1984) (turning over materials to EEOC attorneys did not result in waiver of work product protection since at that time private plaintiffs’ attorneys and counsel for EEOC were engaged in the preparation of a joint trial); U.S. v. American Tel. and Tel. Co., 642 F.2d 1285, 1298-1301 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (no waiver of work product where disclosing party and the government were proceeding against defendant on overlapping antitrust issues and shared common interests in developing legal theories and analyses with respect to their claims); E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., Inc., Civil Action No. 3:09cv58, 2010 WL 1489966, at *8 (E.D. Va. Apr. 13, 2010) (work product protection was not waived by disclosure to the government where the government was investigating defendant, and plaintiff and the government shared a common interest in preventing trade secret theft); GAF Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 85 F.R.D. 46, 52 (S.D.N.Y. 1979), abrogated on other grounds by In re Steinhardt Partners, L.P., 9 F.3d 230 (2d Cir. 1993) (disclosure of work product documents to government in voluntary cooperation with government investigation of defendant’s activities did not waive work product protection for those documents in disclosing party’s subsequent private litigation against defendant).

Some courts have been more willing to apply the selective waiver doctrine where the party has entered into a confidentiality agreement with the government. See, e.g., Police & Fire Ret. Sys. of the City of Detroit v. SafeNet, Inc., No. 06 Civ. 5797(PAC), 2010 WL 935317 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2010) (defendant SafeNet did not waive work product protection when, pursuant to a confidentiality agreement, it produced privileged material to the SEC and the U.S. Attorney’s Office in the course of a government investigation); In re Natural Gas Commodity Litig., No. 03 Civ. 6186VMAJP, 2005 WL 1457666 (S.D.N.Y. June 21, 2005) (no waiver of work product protection where disclosing party entered into confidentiality agreement with the government); Maruzen Co., Ltd. v. HSBC USA, Inc., No. 00 CIV 1079(RO), 2002 WL 1628782, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. July 23, 2002) (denying motion to compel production of documents previously produced to a government agency because party had entered into a confidentiality agreement with that government agency). Although Federal Rule of Evidence 502 does not change the substantive law relating to selective waiver, see FED. R. 6. Inadvertent Disclosure

Before the enactment of Federal Rule of Evidence 502 in September 2008, inadvertent disclosure of work product was analyzed in much the same manner as inadvertent disclosure under the attorney-client privilege. Most courts applied a case-by-case analysis to determine the reasonableness of the precautions taken to protect against disclosure and the actions taken to recover the disclosed communication. Inadvertent disclosure of opinion work product often resulted in only a limited waiver, leaving materials on the same subject matter protected.

Compare:

Gundacker v. Unisys Corp., 151 F.3d 842, 844-45 (8th Cir. 1998). Inadvertent production of document detailing internal corporate investigation by counsel did not constitute waiver.

United States v. Rigas, 281 F. Supp. 2d 733, 738 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (internal quotations omitted). Surveying various approaches to inadvertent disclosure and concluding: "Generally, courts in this District will not find waiver by inadvertent disclosure unless the producing party's actions were so careless as to suggest that it was not concerned with the protection of the asserted privilege."

Emp'rs Reinsurance Corp. v. Clarendon Nat'l Ins. Co., 213 F.R.D. 422, 428 (D. Kan. 2003). Applying a five factor test in determining whether inadvertent release of protected work product waived privilege.

W. Fuels Ass'n v. Burlington N. R.R. Co., 102 F.R.D. 201, 204-05 (D. Wyo. 1984). Inadvertent disclosure during expedited discovery process does not waive work product protection.

Culnane v. Johnson's of N.H., Inc., No. 13-1-05 Bncv, 2008 WL 4281975 (Super. Ct. Vt. May 19, 2008). Under the modern approach to inadvertent waiver, defendants waived neither work product privilege nor attorney-client privilege by including communications among defendants, its attorneys, and its investigators in an expert witness's file that was inadvertently sent to plaintiffs.

United States*, 308 F.3d 1220, 1223 (Fed. Cir. 2002). Voluntary disclosure of work product to an adversary constitutes waiver even though disclosure may have been inadvertent.

Victor Stanley, Inc. v. Creative Pipe, Inc., 250 F.R.D. 251, 258-59, 268 (D. Md. 2008). Defendants waived work product protection with respect to 165 privileged electronic documents that they voluntarily but inadvertently disclosed to plaintiffs after using an inadequate keyword search and an insufficient manual review of nontext-searchable documents to separate privileged documents from non-privileged documents.

Cont'l Cas. Co. v. Under Armour, Inc., 537 F. Supp. 2d 761, 772-74 (D. Md. 2008). Insurer waived work product protection where claims adjuster, on four separate occasions, posted protected documents to a website that was accessible to an independent broker who provided the documents to the insured. However, the court did not find subject matter waiver.

.JSMS Rural LP v. GMG Capital Partners III, LP, No. 04 Civ. 8591 SAS MHD, 2006 WL 1520087, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2006). Party seeking to retrieve privileged documents after opponent used them as exhibits in depositions delayed too long in seeking the court's assistance, thereby waiving privilege.

Federal Rule of Evidence 502, effective September 19, 2008, now controls in cases of inadvertent waiver. The new Rule 502(b) provides:

- (b) Inadvertent disclosure.--When made in a Federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency, the disclosure does not operate as a waiver in a Federal or State proceeding if:
 - (1) the disclosure is inadvertent;

- (2) the holder of the privilege or protection took reasonable steps to prevent disclosure; and
- (3) the holder promptly took reasonable steps to rectify the error, including (if applicable) following Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(5)(B).

FED. R. EVID. 502(b). Rule 502(a) also states that disclosures will not result in a broad subject matter waiver unless “(1) the waiver is intentional; (2) the disclosed and undisclosed communications or information concern the same subject matter; and (3) they ought in fairness to be considered together.” FED. R. EVID. 502(a). Rule 502’s procedure for determining whether disclosure was inadvertent applies to all proceedings that commenced after September 19, 2008, its date of enactment. As for proceedings pending on the date of enactment, Rule 502 applies “insofar as is just and practicable.” Act of Sept. 19, 2008, Pub. L. No. 110-322 § 1(c) (122 Stat. 3538).

Under FRE 502(b), there is no waiver of the work product protection where the holder of the privilege took reasonable steps to prevent disclosure and promptly took reasonable steps to rectify the error. Here, work product protection was not waived because plaintiff immediately asserted privilege after inadvertently turning over the document and requested the document’s return within two hours of having been alerted of the disclosure to defendants.

K & S Assocs., Inc. v. Am. Ass’n of Physicists in Med., No. 3:09-01108, 2011 WL 249361 (M.D. Tenn. Jan. 26, 2011). Inadvertently disclosing the substance of a memorandum in discovery did not waive work product protection for the memorandum.

Rajala v. McGuire Woods, LLP, No. 08-2638-CM-DJW, 2010 WL 2949582 (D. Kan. July 22, 2010). Federal Rule of Evidence 502 was enacted to address the conflict among courts regarding the effect of inadvertent disclosures and validates certain clawback agreements.

Coburn Grp., LLC v. Whitecap Advisors LLC, 640 F. Supp. 2d 1032, 1039-41 (N.D. Ill. 2009). Work product protection not waived by inadvertent production under FRE 502: “In light of the large number of documents to be reviewed, Whitecap’s use of experienced paralegals who were given specific direction and supervision by a lawyer who is lead counsel in the case was not unreasonable.”

Heriot v. Byrne, 257 F.R.D. 645 (N.D. Ill. 2009). Court found that although the extent of the disclosure was broad, plaintiffs had been diligent both in initially reviewing the documents and in attempting to retrieve the documents promptly upon learning of the mistake. Under FRE 502, a party does not have to conduct a post-production review; it only has to take prompt steps to rectify an inadvertent disclosure after learning of the production error.

Rhoads Indus., Inc. v. Bldg. Materials Corp. of Am., 254 F.R.D. 216, 226-27 (E.D. Pa. 2008). Court applied Rule 502 even though case was commenced prior to its enactment and found that although the precautions to prevent inadvertent disclosure were not reasonable and the number and extent of the inadvertent disclosure of 800 privileged emails favored a finding of waiver, the overriding interest of justice favored protecting the privilege.

Jeanes-Kemp, LLC v. Johnson Controls, Inc., No. 1:09CV723-LG-RHW, 2010 WL 3522028 (S.D. Miss. Sept. 1, 2010). Judge declined to impose sanctions on an attorney for using an inadvertently produced attorney-client privileged communication as leverage to convince plaintiff to dismiss its lawsuit.

Mt. Hawley Ins. Co. v. Felman Prod., Inc., 271 F.R.D. 125 (S.D. W. Va. 2010). Waiver found where privileged documents were inadvertently produced due to an error in a keyword search by an outside vendor because the disclosing party had engaged in other discovery misconduct.

Beyond Sys., Inc. v. Kraft Foods, Inc., No. PJM-08-409, 2010 WL 1568480 (D. Md. Apr. 19, 2010). Plaintiff did not have to return a spreadsheet that defendant twice inadvertently disclosed.

Alpert v. Riley, 267 F.R.D. 202, 212 (S.D. Tex. 2010). Inadvertent disclosure of tens of thousands of files in a directory weighed in favor of finding waiver.

MVB Mortg. Corp. v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., No. 2:08-cv-771, 2010 WL 582641 (S.D. Ohio Feb. 11, 2010). All information disclosed to a testifying expert witness, even inadvertently produced privileged materials, must be provided to the opposing party.

Roe v. Saint Louis Univ., No. 4:08CV1474 JCH, 2010 WL 199948 (E.D. Mo. Jan. 14, 2010). Inadvertent disclosure resulted in waiver of work product protection when the defendant took insufficient precautions to prevent disclosure of work product and disclosure was broad.

Eden Isle Marina, Inc. v. United States, 89 Fed. Cl. 480, 520-21 (Fed. Cl. 2009). Finding government waived work product protection by inadvertent production where (1) government failed to provide the court with sufficient information to evaluate its screening procedures for preventing disclosure; (2) multiple disclosures of some of the documents suggested that government's screening procedures were inadequate; (3) government permitted witnesses to continue to testify at deposition about the privileged documents, even after lodging objections to such testimony; (4) government placed the documents at issue on its privilege log almost seven months after discovery of their disclosure, with some documents not added to the privilege log for nearly nine-and-one-half months, and others not added to the privilege log at all; and (5) government never sought a protective order from the court to limit further disclosure of the documents.

The enactment of Federal Rule of Evidence 502 was motivated in large part by the enormous expenditure of resources devoted to avoiding inadvertent disclosure in cases involving large volumes of electronic discovery. The Advisory Committee Note to Rule 502 explains that Rule 502 was enacted in response to “the widespread complaint that litigation costs necessary to protect against waiver of attorney-client privilege or work product have become prohibitive due to the concern that any disclosure (however innocent or minimal) will operate as a subject matter waiver of all protected communications or information,” a concern that “is especially troubling in cases involving electronic discovery.” FED. R. EVID. 502 advisory committee’s note. Rule 502 relieves “litigants of the burden [of] a single mistake during the discovery process” by creating “a presumption for the return of inadvertently disclosed information.” Kristine L. Roberts & Mary S. Diemer, Rule of Evidence 502: Impact of Protective Orders and Subject Matter Waiver, 34 LITIG. NEWS 8 (2008-2009).

7. “At Issue” Waiver

The work product doctrine may be deemed waived when the protected material is itself an issue in the litigation. See Ivy Hotel San Diego, LLC v. Hous. Cas. Co., No. 10cv2183-L (BGS), 2011 WL 4914941, at *6-8 (S.D. Cal. Oct. 17, 2011) (opinion work product was discoverable in part because opinions of counsel were at issue in litigation); Minn. Specialty Crops, Inc. v. Minn. Wild Hockey Club, L.P., 210 F.R.D. 673, 677 (D. Minn. 2002); Hager v. Bluefield Reg’l Med. Ctr., 170 F.R.D. 70 (D.D.C. 1997); Charlotte Motor Speedway, Inc. v. Int’l Ins. Co., 125 F.R.D. 127 (M.D.N.C. 1989); 6 J. MOORE ET AL., MOORE’S FEDERAL PRACTICE ¶ 26.70[6] (2019). This usually occurs when the client alleges reliance on the advice of counsel or otherwise puts the attorney’s advice into issue. Defenses that the attorney’s assistance was ineffective, negligent, or wrongful may also waive work product protection. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 92(1)(b) (2000). In these cases, the scope of the waiver extends only to the item disclosed, not to all related items. See Extent Of Waiver, § III.E.4, supra; see also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 92 cmt. f (2000).

A client who claims to have acted pursuant to the advice of a lawyer cannot use the work product doctrine to immunize that advice from scrutiny. Such a defense places the advice “at issue” and removes the work product protection, even with respect to opinion work product. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 92(1)(a) (2000).

A party cannot partially disclose privileged communications or affirmatively rely on privileged communications to support its claim or defense and then shield the underlying communications from scrutiny by the opposing party. Defendants waived work product protection by asserting, as an affirmative defense, both the reasonableness of their efforts to prevent and correct promptly any discriminatory behavior and the reasonableness of their policies and procedures for investigating and preventing discrimination. The court held that defendants could not assert both the privilege and the defense by selectively omitting certain communications.

Angelone v. Xerox Corp., No. 09-CV-6019, 2011 WL 4473534, at *2-3 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2011). The court noted that "the clear majority view is that when a . . . defendant affirmatively invokes a . . . defense that is premised, in whole in or part, on the results of an internal investigation, the defendant waives the attorney-client privilege and work product protections for not only the report itself, but for all documents, witness interviews, notes and memoranda created as part of and in furtherance of the investigation." Accordingly, the court ordered the defendant to produce "any document or communication considered, prepared, reviewed, or relied on . . . in creating or issuing" the investigation report.

Unless communicated to the client, such materials are not probative of intent and not discoverable.*

In the context of patent infringement litigation, courts have adopted differing approaches to deciding the scope of work product waiver where a defendant relies on an "advice of counsel" defense. See Novartis Pharm. Corp. v. Eon Labs Mfg., Inc., 206 F.R.D. 396, 397-98 (D. Del. 2002). Some courts adopt a narrow view, holding that only communications between the attorney and accused infringer are probative of the accused infringer's state of mind, and thus, that discovery is limited to such communications and excludes any inquiry into counsel's work product not communicated to the alleged infringer. Id. at 398 (citing Thorn EMI N. Am. v. Micron Tech., 837 F. Supp. 616, 622 (D. Del. 1993)). Alternatively, other courts have held that counsel's thoughts as reflected in work product are probative of what was communicated to the accused infringer and therefore permit discovery into counsel's work product, as well as any communications between counsel and the accused infringer. Id. at 398 (citing Mosel Vitelic Corp. v. Micron Tech., Inc., 162 F. Supp. 2d 307 (D. Del. 2000)). Adopting the latter broad view, the court in Novartis court held that, rather than basing discoverability on the relevance of the work product to an advice of counsel defense, courts should adopt a bright line rule that a client asserting an "advice of counsel" defense knowingly waives attorney-client privilege and work product protection such that "everything with respect to the subject matter of counsel's advice is discoverable." Id. See Patents, § VIII, infra.

At least one court has held that an attorney can put work product "at issue" by making factual assertions regarding the party's or counsel's conduct during discovery. In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig., 258 F.R.D. 280, 291-95 (D. Del. 2008) (factual assertions by Intel regarding an internal investigation of its noncompliance with document retention agreement waived Intel's work product privilege); see also Computer Network Corp. v. Spohler, 95 F.R.D. 500, 502-03 (D.D.C. 1982) (attorney-client privilege was waived where the general counsel signed an affidavit supporting the corporation's opposition to expedited discovery that asserted facts going to the merits of the case). But see Auto Alliance Int'l, Inc. v. United States, 558 F. Supp. 2d 1377, 1382 (Ct. Int'l Trade 2008) (an affidavit signed by attorney for the defendant, in support of reopening a deposition in light of new legal theories, did not put privileged materials at issue).

8. Testimonial Use

At times, work product may constitute direct and substantial evidence of a material issue in a case before a tribunal. The testimonial use of work product will usually render it unprotected and permit the discovery of undisclosed portions of materials relating to the same subject matter. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 92(2) (2000).

9. Use Of Documents by Witnesses and Experts

a. Refreshing Recollection of Fact Witnesses

Work product protection may be waived by using protected documents to refresh the recollection of a witness. The decisions in this area are balanced between the conflicting protection afforded by the work product doctrine and the requirement of Federal Rule of Evidence 612 to reveal items that a witness has used to refresh his or her recollection. Rule 612 requires a party to reveal any writing when “a witness uses a writing to refresh memory” for the purpose of testifying, FED. R. EVID. 612, either in court or depositions. Lawson v. U.S. Dep’t of Veterans Affairs, No. 97Civ.9239(AJP)(JSM), 1998 WL 312239 (S.D.N.Y. June 12, 1998). But see Omaha Pub. Power Dist. v. Foster Wheeler Corp., 109 F.R.D. 615, 616-17 (D. Neb. 1986) (questioning whether Rule 612 applies to materials used to prepare a witness for deposition testimony).

Under Federal Rule of Evidence 612, if the witness uses the communication to refresh his or her recollection or aid his or her testimony while he or she is actually testifying before a tribunal, then the privilege is waived and the court must order disclosure. FED. R. EVID. 612(a)(1); see also Chavis v. North Carolina, 637 F.2d 213, 223-24 (4th Cir. 1980) (when witness referred to work product material and used it to bolster his credibility at trial, court ordered the material produced); In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., Nos. 04-MD-1616-JWL, 09-2026-JWL, 10-2077-JWL, 2013 WL 4781035, at *1 (D. Kan. Sept. 5, 2013) (disclosure of work product to former employee to assist in deposition waived protection); S & A Painting Co., Inc. v. O.W.B. Corp., 103 F.R.D. 407, 409-10 (W.D. Pa. 1984) (work product protection was waived when witness examined and referred to a portion of attorney's handwritten notes during his deposition). However, if the witness used the communication to refresh his recollection prior to testifying, then the court has discretion regarding whether to order disclosure in the interests of justice. FED. R. EVID. 612(2). But see In re Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether Prod. Liab. Litig., No. MDL 1358 (SAS), No. M-21-88, 2012 WL 2044432, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 6, 2012) (use of protected work product to refresh memory during testimony was not per se waiver; balancing approach is appropriate under both FRE 612(a)(1) and (2)).

Before exercising its discretion, the court should determine whether the protected document was used for the primary purpose of preparing to testify or for some other reason. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 92 cmt. e (2000). Most courts require a showing that the protected documents used to prepare a witness actually impacted the witness's testimony. See Sporck v. Peil, 759 F.2d 312, 317-318 (3d Cir. 1985) (applying three-part test to find no waiver: "1) the witness must use the writing to refresh his memory; 2) the witness must use the writing for the purpose of testifying; and 3) the court must determine that production is necessary in the interests of justice"); In re Rivastigmine Patent Litig., 486 F. Supp. 2d 241, 243-44 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (applying a two-part "functional analysis" test to find no waiver: (1) a threshold showing that documents had sufficient impact on witness's testimony to trigger Rule 612; and (2) a balancing test, "considering such factors as whether production is necessary for fair cross-examination or whether the examining party is simply engaged in a 'fishing expedition'"); U.S. ex rel. Bagley v. TRW, Inc., 212 F.R.D. 554, 565 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (applying Sporck test). But see Chase v. Nova Se. Univ. Inc., No. 11-61290-CIV, 2012 WL 204173, at *2 (S.D. Fla. Jan. 24, 2012) (citations omitted) (opining that the Eleventh Circuit had not yet had the opportunity to consider the applicability of Sporck, but noting that district courts in the Circuit had crafted a narrower application based on the Sporck dissent, and holding the party seeking protection must "come forward with evidence that the disclosure of requested documents creates a real, non-speculative danger of revealing counsel's thoughts"); In re Method or Processing Ethanol Byproducts & Related Subsystems (858) Patent Litig., 280 F.R.D. 441, 445-46 (S.D. Ind. 2011) (expressing unwillingness to adopt the Sporck rationale); Audiotext Commc'ns Network, Inc. v. U.S. Telecom, Inc., 164 F.R.D. 250, 254 (D. Kan. 1996) (although a party seeking work product must show that the documents "actually influenced the witness' testimony . . . [a]ctual refreshment of recollection is immaterial").

Courts have taken a number of different approaches to determining whether work product should be disclosed in the interests of justice pursuant to Rule 612(a)(2). For example, in Sporck v. Peil, the Third Circuit held that Rule 612 does not infringe on the protection afforded work product if courts properly require the party seeking production to establish that the witness actually relied upon a particular document and that the document impacted the witness's testimony in order to obtain disclosure. 759 F.2d at 318. See also Omaha Pub. Power Dist. v. Foster Wheeler Corp., 109 F.R.D. 615, 616-17 (D. Neb. 1986) (following approach taken in Sporck). Other courts have found that the deliberate use of protected documents to prepare a witness is sufficient in and of itself to satisfy the interests of justice standard. See James Julian, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 93 F.R.D. 138, 144-46 (D. Del. 1982). Finally, some courts balance the interest of protecting work product with the interest of permitting an adverse party to obtain information necessary to conduct an effective cross-examination. See Lawson v. United States, No. 97 Civ. 9239 (AJP) (JSM), 1998 WL 312239, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. July 12, 1998).

Tattletale Portable Alarm Sys., Inc. v. Calfee, Halter, & Griswold, LLP, 276 F.R.D. 573, 576-77 (S.D. Ohio 2011). Court ordered deponent to produce a timeline prepared by his attorneys that deponent used to refresh his memory prior to deposition. Court noted that a basic time line contained compilations of dates but not attorney mental impressions, opinions, or conclusions and was only ordinary work product. However, in a later decision, Tattletale Portable Alarm Sys., Inc. v. Calfee, Halter, & Griswold, LLP, No. 2:10-cv-226, 2012 WL 2062648 (S.D. Ohio, June 7, 2012), the court, after reviewing the time line in camera, determined that the time line was work product, that the use of the time line to refresh deponent's recollection did not waive work product protection, and that the time line therefore should not have been ordered disclosed.

In re Yasmin & Yaz (Drospirenone) Mktg., Sales Practices & Relevant Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 3:09-md-02100-DRH-PMF, 2011 WL 2580764, at *1-2 (S.D. Ill. June 29, 2011). The court adopted the Sporck "zone of privacy" rationale and held that forcing the defendant to disclose a compilation of documents assembled for deposition preparation would "implicitly reveal the thought processes of the attorney who selected the documents and would allow plaintiffs to glean which documents, out of the millions already produced, opposing counsel believes are legally significant." Accordingly, the court found that "counsel's selection of documents in preparation for a client's deposition is shielded from discovery under the work-product doctrine."

Donjon Marine Co. v. Buchanan Marine, L.P., No. 3:09CV1005 (WWE), 2010 WL 2977044, at *2 (D. Conn. July 21, 2010). Plaintiff not allowed to discover a protected memorandum that a witness reviewed in preparation for his deposition. After reviewing the memorandum in camera, the court found that there was no need for defendant to produce the document where there was no information in the memorandum that was not included in the deponents testimony, there was nothing inconsistent between the memorandum and the testimony, the witness's testimony was more detailed than the memorandum, and it did not appear that the witness's review of the memorandum had a "significant impact" on the testimony.

Napolitano v. Omaha Airport Auth., No. 8:08CV299, 2009 WL 1393392, at *5 (D. Neb. May 11, 2009). Where plaintiff reviewed contemporaneous notes taken at the direction of counsel regarding the investigation that led to plaintiff's termination and refreshed his recollection prior to his deposition, the court ordered plaintiff to produce such notes. FRE 612 weighed in favor of a finding of substantial need to discover fact work product because a deposing attorney has a legitimate need to know whether a witness is testifying from personal memory or only from what he has memorialized.

Reed v. Advocate Health Care, No. 06 C 3337, 2008 WL 162760, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 17, 2008). The court adopted the Raytheon approach and reopened a deposition to allow the plaintiff to question the defendant's employee regarding which documents counsel used to refresh recollection in preparation for deposition.

Lawson v. United States, No.97Civ.9239(AJP)(JSM), 1998 WL 312239, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. June 12, 1998). Court ordered the production of work product because the application of a three-factor balancing test indicated that the disclosure of the material would be in the interests of justice.

In re Joint E. & S. Dist. Asbestos Litig., 119 F.R.D. 4, 5-6 (S.D.N.Y. 1988). The court found that an analysis of the facts of each case was necessary to determine whether the disclosure of work product would be in the interests of justice. The court identified three factors that should be considered in making the determination: (1) “whether the attorney using the work product attempted ‘to exceed limits of preparation on one hand and concealment on the other,’” (2) “whether the work product is ‘factual’ work product or ‘opinion’ work product” and (3) “whether the request [for production] constitutes a fishing expedition.”

In re Atl. Fin. Mgmt. Sec. Litig., 121 F.R.D. 141, 143-44 (D. Mass. 1988). Work product protection was waived for the excerpts of deposition transcripts reviewed by deponent to refresh his recollection.

Bloch v. Smithkline Beckman Corp., Civ. A. No. 82-510, 1987 WL 9279, at *2 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 9, 1987). Use of protected documents to refresh a witness’s recollection does not automatically waive work product protection, but such use will be evaluated on a case by case basis to ensure that a party does not make “unfair use” of the work product doctrine.

James Julian, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 93 F.R.D. 138, 144-46 (D. Del. 1982). Court ordered production of a binder of documents compiled by counsel and used to refresh the recollection of deposition witnesses, even though the binder constituted opinion work product.

While a number of courts have removed protection for ordinary work product, many courts have applied heightened protection for opinion work product that is shown to a fact witness. See 4 JACK W. WEINSTEIN ET AL., WEINSTEIN’S FEDERAL EVIDENCE ¶ 612.05[3] (Lexis 2014) (court should require showing of need before compelling disclosure of protected documents).

Shelton v. Am. Motors Corp., 805 F.2d 1323, 1329 (8th Cir. 1986). In-house attorney would not be compelled to testify, even about the existence of a document contained in a trial notebook that the attorney used to prepare to testify, because the selection and compilation of the documents would reveal her mental impressions and opinion work product.

In re Managed Care Litig., 415 F. Supp. 2d 1378, 1381 (S.D. Fla. 2006). An attorney designated by the Office of the General Counsel for the AMA for Rule 30(b)(6) deposition, who did not have personal knowledge of the underlying facts, reviewed a report from the General Counsel’s office to the Board of Trustees. The court held that Federal Rule of Evidence 612 and the accompanying advisory committee notes did not require automatic waiver of privilege where a witness reviews documents to refresh his recollection prior to a deposition. Instead, waiver determination should be left to the discretion of the court “in the interests of justice.”

Aguinaga v. John Morrell & Co., 112 F.R.D. 671, 683 (D. Kan. 1986). In denying motion to compel discovery of files reviewed by deponent prior to deposition, court held that the purpose of Federal Rule of Evidence 612 is to allow an adverse party to have access to writings which “have an impact on the testimony of the witness.” However, “[p]roper application of Rule 612 should never implicate an attorney’s selection, in preparation for a witness’ deposition, of a group of documents he believes critical to a case.”

But see:

Sporck v. Peil, 759 F.2d 312, 317-18 (3d Cir. 1985). In dictum, court interpreted Federal Rule of Evidence 612 to require the disclosure of documents that a deponent has used to refresh his memory only where opposing counsel lays a proper foundation. In such cases, counsel must first elicit specific testimony from deponent and then ask deponent which, if any, documents “informed that testimony.” Deponent will be compelled to disclose only the documents that he actually used to refresh his memory, not all opinion work product that counsel showed him in preparation for his testimony.

In re Seroquel Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 6:06-md-1769-Orl-22DAB, 2008 WL 215707, at *3, *5 (M.D. Fla. Jan. 24, 2008) (emphasis in original). The court was critical of Spork v. Peil, 759 F.2d 312 (3d Cir. 1985), but nonetheless required disclosure of documents the attorney reviewed with the witness during extensive deposition preparation. The court found no evidence of “improper witness coaching” but ordered disclosure of the documents because extensive preparation by counsel may have influenced the witness: “[T]he only documents reviewed by a twenty-year employee over the course of six days of preparation are 42 documents out of 15,835 exclusively selected by counsel”

Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. Inc. v. PepsiCo, Inc., No. Civ.A. 01-2009-KHV, 2001 WL 1478659, at *2 (D. Kan. Nov. 8, 2001). Court required identification of documents shown to witness in advance of deposition and rejected argument that selection of such documents constituted work product.

Omaha Pub. Power Dist. v. Foster Wheeler Corp., 109 F.R.D. 615, 616-17 (D. Neb. 1986). The court doubted that Federal Rule of Evidence 612 applied to deposition testimony, but applied the Spork standard requiring a party to first elicit testimony from deponent and then ask the witness to identify which documents, if any, informed that testimony.

b. Use of Documents by Experts

As discussed in this section, and in Use of Documents By Experts, § I.G.11(b), above, the 2010 amendments to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26 significantly changed the landscape of expert discovery. Rule 26 now generally closes the door on discovery of attorney-expert communications and draft expert reports. The scope of discoverable information has been modified from “data or other information” to “facts or data” in order to protect the mental impressions and opinions of counsel. See FED. R. CIV. P. 26(a)(2)(B)(ii). However, the rule retains the broad “considered” standard, which allows discovery of not only what an expert “relies on,” but all facts or data considered by the expert. Id.; see also In re Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether Prods. Liab. Litig., 293 F.R.D. 568, 574 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (work product protection related to facts was waived where expert considered materials; a party seeking production of protected documents should not have to rely on the resisting party’s representation that the documents were not considered by the expert in forming his opinion).

The revised rule resolved the prior split of authority regarding the scope of expert discovery in favor of greater protection of information disclosed to experts in three principal ways. First, language requiring the disclosure of “data or other information” in the expert report has been replaced with language requiring only the disclosure of “the facts or data” considered by the expert in forming his or her opinion, thereby clarifying that communications between counsel and experts are protected from disclosure. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(a)(2)(B)(ii). The advisory committee comments to amended Rule 26(a)(2)(B) explain that this amendment was designed specifically to alter case law that developed following the 1993 amendments to Rule 26:

This amendment is intended to alter the outcome in cases that have relied on the 1993 formulation in requiring disclosure of all attorney-expert communications and draft reports. The amendments to Rule 26(b)(4) make this change explicit by providing work product protection against discovery regarding draft reports and disclosures or attorney-expert communications. The focus of disclosure on “facts or data” is meant to limit disclosure to material of a factual nature by excluding theories or mental impressions of counsel. At the same time, the intention is that “facts or data” be interpreted broadly to require disclosure of any material considered by the expert, from whatever source, that contains factual ingredients.

FED. R. CIV. P. 26(a)(2)(B) (2010 amendments) advisory committee's note. See also Use Of Documents By Experts, § I.G.11.b, supra.

Second, the new Rule 26(b)(4)(B) protects draft expert reports:

- (B) Trial-Preparation Protection for Draft Reports or Disclosures. Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect drafts of any report or disclosure required under Rule 26(a)(2), regardless of the form in which the draft is recorded.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(B).

Third, amended Rule 26(b)(4)(C) extends work product protection to most communications between attorneys and retained experts, subject only to three exceptions:

- (C) Trial-Preparation Protection for Communications Between a Party's Attorney and Expert Witnesses. Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect communications between the party's attorney and any witness required to provide a report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), regardless of the form of the communications, except to the extent that the communications:
- (i) relate to compensation for the expert's study or testimony;
 - (ii) identify facts or data that the party's attorney provided and that the expert considered in forming the opinions to be expressed; or
 - (iii) identify assumptions that the party's attorney provided and that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed.

FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(4)(C).

The advisory committee notes to Rule 26(b)(4)(C) explain the intention of the new rule:

Rule 26(b)(4)(C) is added to provide work product protection for attorney-expert communications, regardless of the form of communications, whether oral, written, electronic, or otherwise. The addition of Rule (b)(4)(C) is designed to protect counsel's work product and ensure that lawyers may interact with retained experts without fear of exposing those communications to searching discovery. . . . Protected "communications" include those between the party's attorney and assistants of the expert witness. . . . The rule does not exclude protection under other doctrines, such as privilege or independent development of the work product doctrine.

FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(4) (2010 amendments) advisory committee's note.

Rule 26(b)(4)(C)(i) to (iii) provides for three specific exceptions in which discovery of attorney-expert communications are permissible. The advisory committee explained that discovery beyond these three narrow exceptions should be “rare.” The advisory committee notes state:

Under the amended rule, discovery regarding attorney-expert communications on subjects outside the three exceptions in Rule 26(b)(4)(C), or regarding draft expert reports or disclosures, is permitted only in limited circumstances and by court order. A party seeking such discovery must make the showing specified in Rule 26(b)(3)(A)(ii) – that the party has a substantial need for the discovery and cannot obtain the substantial equivalent without undue hardship. It will be rare for a party to be able to make such a showing given the broad disclosure and discovery otherwise allowed regarding the expert’s testimony. A party’s failure to provide required disclosure or discovery does not show the need and hardship required by Rule 26(b)(3)(A); remedies are provided by Rule 37.

FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(4) (2010 amendments) advisory committee’s note.

When proposed, the amendments sparked considerable debate among academics and practitioners. Academics who opposed the amendments expressed concern that the amendments “would further ratify the role of experts as paid, partisan advocates, rather than independent, learned observers.” Minutes of the January 13, 2009 Meeting of the Judicial Conference Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure, 2009 WL 1974427, at *13. Further, they argued that, with the adoption of the 2010 Amendments, relevant information contained in draft reports and communications with experts will be now be concealed. Id. Practitioners stated that lawyers today avoid communications with their testifying experts and discourage drafting reports, often employing two experts, one to testify and another to assess candidly. Id. at *13-14. This has become particularly burdensome, and the amended Rule will “help to reduce the costs of discovery without sacrificing any information that litigants truly need.” Id. at 12. The Advisory Committee concluded that it is “vital to the legal process for lawyers to be able to interact freely with their experts without fear of having to disclose all their conversations and drafts to their adversaries.” Id. at *13. For further discussion on the implications of the new amendments, see generally Gregory P. Joseph, 2010 Expert Witness Rule Amendments, 21 PRAC. LITIGATOR 51 (2010).

As a result of the 2010 amendments, discovery of attorney-expert communications and draft expert reports is now generally out of bounds.

See:

Republic of Ecuador v. Mackay, 742 F.3d 860, 870-71 (9th Cir. 2014). The court rejected the argument that the 2010 amendments fundamentally restructured Rule 26 such that expert materials are now presumptively privileged, noting that the “driving purpose” of the amendments was to protect opinion work product. Court stated that Rule 26(b)(4) “does not provide presumptive protection for all testifying expert materials as trial preparation materials.”

In re Republic of Ecuador, 735 F.3d 1179, 1187 (10th Cir. 2013). Amendments to Rule 26 are meant to refocus disclosure on facts and data and exclude theories or mental impressions of counsel. The amendments are also to be interpreted broadly – the Rule requires disclosure of any material considered by an expert, from whatever source, that contains factual ingredients.

Genesco, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. 3:13-0202, 2014 WL 935329, at *25 (M.D. Tenn. Mar. 10, 2014). Discovery of non-testifying consultant's report was governed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(D), which requires a showing of exceptional circumstances before a party may discover materials prepared by a non-testifying consultant.

Spirit Master Funding, LLC v. Pike Nurseries Acquisition, LLC, 287 F.R.D. 680 (N.D. Ga. 2012). The court ruled that documents containing facts that were so intertwined with the attorney's mental impressions were not discoverable, but that factual information could be discovered through interrogatories and depositions.

Fialkowski v. Perry, No. 11-5139, 2012 WL 2527020, at *3-4 (E.D. Pa. June 29, 2012). Amendments to Rule 26 allow for discovery of materials to the extent that they contain facts or data that the expert considered or assumptions that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed.

In re Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether Prods. Liab. Litig., 293 F.R.D. 568, 574, 575-77 (S.D.N.Y. 2013). The amendments clarify that facts and data considered by testifying experts are outside the scope of work product protection but that attorney theories and impressions are not discoverable. Rule 26 requires the disclosure of any material considered by a testifying expert that contains factual ingredients. In particular, when a dual consulting/testifying expert witness considers factual data prepared while forming his views regarding issues upon which he will be offering his opinions, the factual data is not privileged or protected from discovery. Court held that work product protection related to facts was waived because expert considered certain materials, but draft reports remained protected.

Ecuador v. Bjorkman, No. 11-cv-01470-WYD-MEH, 2012 WL 12755 (D. Colo. Jan. 4, 2012). Relying on amended Rule 26, defendant withheld expert materials that had been prepared in an underlying litigation. The court found that as a testifying expert in the underlying litigation, he was within the protections intended by amended Rule 26.

Sara Lee Corp. v. Kraft Foods Inc., 273 F.R.D. 416, 419-20 (N.D. Ill. 2011). "Occasionally, courts must determine which standard applies to an expert who wears 'two hats' by serving as both a non-testifying consultant and a testifying expert. Most courts have held that a single expert may serve in both roles but that the broader discovery for testifying experts applies to everything except 'materials generated or considered uniquely in the expert's role as consultant.' . . . '[A]ny ambiguity as to the role played by the expert when reviewing or generating documents should be resolved in favor of the party seeking discovery.'" In this case, the communications that plaintiff requested were subject to the protections for non-testifying consultants because "[n]one of the communications contain[ed] facts, data, or assumptions that [the expert] could have considered in assembling his expert report."

Enns Pontiac v. Flores, No. 1:07cv01043 OWW DLB, 2011 WL 2746599, at *7 (E.D. Cal. July 13, 2011). Discovery of materials used by non-testifying expert consultant must be limited to data underlying report.

Davita Healthcare Partners, Inc. v. United States, 128 Fed. Cl. 584, 590-91 (Fed. Cl. 2016). Preliminary work papers, scripts, spreadsheets, graphs, and presentations provided to counsel by expert were protected work product under Rule 26(b)(4)(B)-(C).

The amended Rule does not directly address disclosure of pre-existing work product to an expert, as opposed to attorney-expert communications. Where counsel provides pre-existing ordinary work product to a testifying expert, that is, work product that does not reveal mental opinions, impressions or legal theories, the Rule may require disclosure of the work product to the extent that it reflects "facts or data" considered by the expert. See Deal v. Louisiana ex rel. Dep't of Justice, Civil Action No. 11-743-JJB-RLB, 2013 WL 454772, at *5-6, n.8 (M.D. La. Aug. 28, 2013) (plaintiff was required under Rule 26(a)(2)(B) to produce complete unredacted tax returns provided to expert where expert testified that he "relied upon" the tax returns and documents did not contain theories or mental impressions of counsel); Fialkowski v. Perry, Civil Action No. 11-5139, 2012 WL 2527020, at *4-5 (E.D. Pa. June 29, 2012) (2010 amendments do not change the rule of waiver where an expert reviews a pre-existing privileged document that contains factual information; court held that work product protection was waived over a 39-page document prepared by plaintiff where counsel provided the document to an expert, who considered it in forming his opinions and where the document did not reflect the mental opinions or impressions of counsel). This is consistent with the advisory committee notes (i.e., that “facts or data” be interpreted “broadly to require disclosure of any material considered by the expert, from whatever source, that contains factual ingredients”), so long as theories and mental impressions of counsel are excluded from discovery.

Discovery of facts known or opinions held by non-testifying experts, however, is generally discoverable only upon a showing of “exceptional circumstances.” FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(4)(D). See, e.g., In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 343 F.3d 658, 664-65 (3d Cir. 2003) (citing Borgosian in holding that work product shown to non-testifying expert is not discoverable absent showing of extraordinary circumstances); Szulik v. State Street Bank & Trust Co., No. 12-10018-NMG, 2014 WL 3942934, at *2 (D. Mass. Aug. 11, 2014) (party could not subpoena a non-testifying expert who had been retained to provide professional consulting services and assistance in litigation for documents it had obtained from third-parties); Genesco, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. 3:13-0202, 2014 WL 935329, at *25 (M.D. Tenn. Mar. 10, 2014) (discovery of plaintiff’s non-testifying consultant’s report was governed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(D), which requires a showing of exceptional circumstances, which defendant had failed to meet).

F. EXCEPTIONS TO WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION

1. The Crime-Fraud Exception

a. Ordinary Work Product

Like the attorney-client privilege, the work product doctrine does not protect materials that were made when a client has consulted a lawyer for the purpose of furthering an illegal or fraudulent act. In re Antitrust Grand Jury, 805 F.2d 155, 162 (6th Cir. 1986); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Duces Tecum, 773 F.2d 204, 206 (8th Cir. 1985); United States v. Bell, 217 F.R.D. 335, 344 (M.D. Pa. 2003) (“The work-product doctrine does not shield from discovery work-product created in furtherance of a crime or fraud.”). In most respects, the work-product crime-fraud exception operates the same as the exception applied for the attorney-client privilege. (For a more detailed discussion, see The Crime-Fraud Exception, § I.I.1, above.)

See:

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, G.S., F.S., 609 F.3d 909, 912-13 (8th Cir. 2010). Work product protection does not apply to documents used to perpetuate a crime or fraud unless the attorney “was unaware of his client’s wrongful activities.”

In re Green Grand Jury Proceedings, 492 F.3d 976 (8th Cir. 2007). Ordinary work product not protected under crime-fraud exception even though attorney was innocent of any wrongdoing.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 102 F.3d 748, 752 (4th Cir. 1996). Crime-fraud exception applies to vitiate work product privilege.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 867 F.2d 539 (9th Cir. 1989). Court applied the crime-fraud exception to ordinary work product.

In re Doe, 662 F.2d 1073, 1078 (4th Cir. 1981). Attorney cannot invoke work product immunity to cover his own crime or fraud.

In re Special Sept. 1978 Grand Jury (II), 640 F.2d 49, 63 (7th Cir. 1980). Upon a prima facie showing of fraud, neither client nor attorney may assert work product protection for ordinary work product. A guilty client cannot assert the work product protection of her innocent attorney.

Peerless Indus., Inc. v. Crimson AV LLC, No. 11 C 1768, 2013 WL 6050006, at *3-7 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 14, 2013). Defendant took steps to deceive the plaintiff and the court regarding its use, storage, and/or disposal of a chemical, had used its attorneys to do so, and had committed fraud on the court. Documents related to this fraud were discoverable, and the trial court was not clearly erroneous in declining to undertake an in camera review of the memorandum at issue.

Tindall v. H & S Homes, LLC, 757 F. Supp. 2d 1339, 1352 (M.D. Ga. 2011) (“To warrant an in camera review, the party opposing the privilege must only make a preliminary showing ... [which] must be more than a mere allegation of fraud”).

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 220 F.R.D. 130, 142 (D. Mass 2004). Court sets forth rationale for extending work product protection to non-attorney representatives.

Lugosch v. Congel, 218 F.R.D. 41, 49 (N.D.N.Y. 2003). Recognizing application of crime-fraud exception to work product doctrine.

United States v. Regan, 281 F. Supp. 2d 795, 804 (E.D. Va. 2002). Recognizing application of crime-fraud exception to work product doctrine.

United States v. Ruhbayan, 201 F. Supp. 2d 682, 686 (E.D. Va. 2002). Crime-fraud exception applies to vitiate work product protection.

Nesse v. Pittman, 202 F.R.D. 344, 352 (D.D.C. 2001). Finding that, although the crime-fraud exception may vitiate the work product privilege, the exception was inapplicable here, where privileged materials post-dated alleged crime and were not part of any “cover-up.”

The crime-fraud exception waives protection for materials concerning ongoing or continuing crimes or frauds. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 93 (2000). However, the exception does not encompass communications concerning crimes or frauds that occurred in the past. See United States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554, 562-63 (1989); Nesse v. Pittman, 202 F.R.D. 344, 352 (D.D.C. 2001) (crime-fraud exception inapplicable where documents post-dated alleged crime, were not part of cover-up, and, thus, were not in furtherance of a future ongoing crime); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 93 cmt. b (2000). In addition, the exception can only be invoked for materials created in furtherance of the crime or fraud.

See:

In re Antitrust Grand Jury, 805 F.2d 155, 162-64 (6th Cir. 1986). When the ongoing crime or fraud involves opinion work product, there must be a showing that the otherwise protected materials were made in furtherance of the crime or fraud to remove work product protection.

United States v. Davis, 131 F.R.D. 391, 407 (S.D.N.Y.), reconsideration granted in part, 131 F.R.D. 427 (S.D.N.Y. 1990). Party seeking to invoke crime-fraud exception must show that the desired communications were made in furtherance of the alleged fraud.

A party seeking the production of work product documents based upon the crime-fraud exception has the burden to make out a prima facie case:

(1) The party must show by independent evidence that there is a reasonable basis for a good faith belief that the material involves obtaining assistance with a crime or fraud. Evidence gained from in camera inspection is not taken into account.

(2) If the first showing is made, it is within the trial judge's discretion to conduct an in camera examination of the entire communication. The judge is never required to conduct an in camera inspection.

See Zolin, 491 U.S. at 572; see also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 93 cmt. d (2000).

In addition, the person seeking to establish the crime-fraud exception must show that a reasonable relationship exists between the material sought and the crime or fraud. See Triple Five, Inc. v. Simon, 213 F.R.D. 324, 326 (D. Minn. 2002) (“[T]he exception applies only when the court determines that the client communication or attorney work product in question was itself in furtherance of the crime or fraud.”) (quoting In re Richard Roe, Inc., 68 F.3d 38, 40 (2d Cir. 1995)) (emphasis in original); Hercules, Inc. v. Exxon Corp., 434 F. Supp. 136, 155 (D. Del. 1977) (even assuming a prima facie case, if there is no connection between the documents and the fraud, then the documents remain protected work product); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 93 cmt. d (2000). Courts differ on the degree to which the work product must be related to the crime or fraud.

See:

In re Grand Jury Matter #3, 847 F.3d 157, 166 (3d Cir. 2017). Crime-fraud exception to the attorney work-product doctrine requires not only the contemplation or intention of committing a crime or fraud, but evidence that the attorney work product was used in furtherance of that alleged crime or fraud. The court explained, “the second requirement—use in furtherance—exists for the same reason that certain conspiracy statutes require proof that a defendant engaged in an overt act to further the crime. In both settings we want to make sure that we are not punishing someone for merely thinking about committing a bad act.”

Mattenson v. Baxter Healthcare Corp., 438 F.3d 763, 769 (7th Cir. 2006). Citing In re Richard Roe, 68 F.3d 38, 40 (2d Cir. 1995), for the proposition that “a party seeking to invoke the crime-fraud exception must at least demonstrate that there is probable cause to believe that a crime or fraud has been attempted or committed and that the communications were in furtherance thereof.”

Cendant Corp. v. Shelton, 246 F.R.D. 401, 406-07 (D. Conn. 2007). The privilege will not be invaded unless there is a “purposeful nexus” between the privileged material and the alleged fraud.

United States v. Windsor Capital Corp., 524 F. Supp. 2d 74, 76 (D. Mass. 2007) (quoting In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 417 F.3d 18, 23 (1st Cir.2005)). In order to pierce the work product doctrine in the First Circuit, the government must demonstrate that “there is ‘a reasonable basis to believe that the lawyer’s services were used by the client to foster a crime or fraud.’”

In re Grand Jury (OO-2H), 211 F. Supp. 2d 564, 566 (M.D. Pa. 2002). “A party seeking to compel production under the crime-fraud exception bears the burden of proving a prima facie case of a crime or fraud.”

b. Opinion Work Product

In general, the crime-fraud exception also applies to opinion work product in the same manner as ordinary work product. However, there are two major differences with respect to the prima facie showing and the attorney’s relevant knowledge.

Prima Facie Showing: First, some courts have imposed a higher burden with respect to the prima facie showing when the material involves opinion work product. The courts require more than a reasonable basis for a good-faith belief that the material was involved with a crime or fraud.

See:

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 609 F.3d 909, 915 (8th Cir. 2010). The crime-fraud exception allowed the government to discover an attorney's opinion work product where it demonstrated substantial need for the information and probable cause that the attorney was complicit in his clients' unlawful conduct.

In re John Doe Corp., 675 F.2d 482, 492 (2d Cir. 1982). Use of work product in aid of criminal scheme may be a "rare occasion" in which opinion work product is not immune.

Attorney's Knowledge Relevant: Second, unlike the attorney-client privilege, the attorney's knowledge of the crime or fraud can be relevant in determining the scope of the work product protection. Some courts have held that if the attorney is ignorant of the crime or fraud, then work product protection is waived only with respect to ordinary information furnished to the attorney and not to opinion work product. E.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 561 F.3d 408, 411 (5th Cir. 2009) (where the crime-fraud exception applies, only an innocent attorney, and not his client, may assert work product protection); In re Green Grand Jury Proceedings, 492 F.3d 976 (8th Cir. 2007) (opinion work product of attorney was not subject to disclosure where the attorney was not complicit in the client's fraud); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 401 F.3d 247, 256 (4th Cir. 2005); In re Antitrust Grand Jury, 805 F.2d 155, 164 (6th Cir. 1986); In re Special Sept. 1978 Grand Jury (II), 640 F.2d 49, 63 (7th Cir. 1980) (client lost work product protection but attorney's impressions should remain protected since the lawyer's privacy is not justifiably invaded simply because she represented a fraudulent client); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 220 F.R.D. 130, 151-52 (D. Mass. 2004) (noting the near-universal agreement that attorney's knowledge of a crime is necessary to invoke the crime-fraud exception for opinion work product); In re Nat'l Mortg. Equity Corp. Mortg. Pool Certificates Litig., 116 F.R.D. 297 (C.D. Cal. 1987) (if attorney is unaware of crime or fraud then fact work product is not protected but opinion work product remains protected); In re Int'l Sys. & Controls Corp. Sec. Litig., 91 F.R.D. 552, 559-60 (S.D. Tex. 1981) (where there is no allegation of attorney fraud, no intrusion will be allowed upon opinion work product), vacated on other grounds, 693 F.2d 1235, 1242 (5th Cir. 1982). However, other courts and the Restatement have taken a different approach, under which opinion work product is discoverable even if the attorney did not know of the fraud. E.g., In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 102 F.3d 748, 751 (4th Cir. 1996); In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 812 n.75 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (a guilty client would not have standing to assert the work product claim of his innocent attorney); In re John Doe Corp., 675 F.2d 482, 491-92 (2d Cir. 1982); In re Doe, 662 F.2d 1073, 1079 (4th Cir. 1981); RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 93 cmt. c (2000).

c. Cases Where Lawyer is Involved with Fraud but Client is Ignorant

In cases where it is the attorney who is involved with the crime or fraud and the client is innocent, then the client can assert work product protection for the materials despite the lawyer's complicity. See Moody v. IRS, 654 F.2d 795, 801 (D.C. Cir. 1981); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 604 F.2d 798, 801-02 (3d Cir. 1979). But see In re Impounded Case (Law Firm), 879 F.2d 1211, 1214 (3d Cir. 1989) (crime-fraud exception applies in case where the lawyer, rather than client, is the object of criminal investigation, but this exception is limited to materials pertinent to the charge against the lawyer); Anderson v. Hale, 202 F.R.D. 548, 558

(N.D. Ill. 2001) (attorney's unethical, surreptitious taping of a witness interview vitiated work product privilege).

2. Exception for Attorney Misconduct

Several commentators have proposed an exception to the work product doctrine for materials created through attorney misconduct. See, e.g., G. Michael Halfenger, Comment, The Attorney Misconduct Exception to the Work Product Doctrine, 58 U. CHI. L. REV. 1079 (1991). This exception would remove protection when:

- 1) an attorney violates the law or an accepted norm of professional conduct and the resulting materials are tainted with information gathered through this misconduct; or
- 2) an attorney violates the law or an accepted norm of professional conduct and
 - (a) revelation of the resulting materials would correct the asymmetry caused by misconduct,
 - (b) no other action would be an effective remedy, and
 - (c) disclosure will not adversely affect other parties.

Id. at 1091. Such an exception would extend the crime-fraud exception to include ethics violations in addition to crimes. Several courts have recognized this extension of the crime-fraud exception.

See:

Drummond Co. v. Conrad & Scherer, LLP, 885 F.3d 1324, 1337 (11th Cir. 2018). The crime-fraud exception to the work product protection may apply where counsel was engaged in a crime or fraud, but the client was not. An attorney "may not exploit work product protection when she engages in illegal activity or fraud upon the court."

Parrott v. Wilson, 707 F.2d 1262 (11th Cir. 1983). Attorney secretly tape recorded meeting between plaintiff's attorney and defense witness. Court concluded that this recording was work product but found that a clandestine recording constitutes an ethical violation and such a violation abrogates the protection of the work product doctrine.

Anderson v. Hale, 202 F.R.D. 548, 558 (N.D. Ill. 2001). Attorney's unethical, surreptitious taping of a witness interview vitiated the work product privilege.

Ward v. Maritz Inc., 156 F.R.D. 592, 598-99 (D. N.J. 1994). Plaintiff's counsel, in advising plaintiff to surreptitiously record conversations with witness, abrogated work product protection over the tapes.

Haigh v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am., 676 F. Supp. 1332, 1358-59 (E.D. Va. 1987). Client clandestinely recorded witness' conversation without his consent. While the attorneys did not instruct client to initiate or continue recording the conversations, they accepted the tapes from client and used them. Court found that counsel's acquiescence in the recording amounted to active participation and was therefore an ethical violation. As a result, the work product doctrine was vitiated for the recordings.

Party ordered to produce private investigator's report otherwise qualifying as work product because private investigator was licensed in Texas but had conducted interviews in Oklahoma, where he was not licensed, and represented to third parties that he had plaintiff's "power of attorney."

"[T]o the extent that lawyers violate their professional responsibilities, it is generally better to sanction the lawyers themselves, either in the same case or through disciplinary proceedings, than to punish their client, who may or may not have been complicit in the violation."

But see:

Bahrami v. Price Chevrolet-Oldsmobile, Inc., Civil Action No. 1:11-CV-4483-SCJ-AJB, 2013 WL 3800093, at *6-7, *9 (N.D. Ga. July 19, 2013). Secret recordings were protected work product, but the court allowed discovery of recordings, including recordings of defendants' previous statements (but only after defendants' depositions) and recordings for which defendant demonstrated substantial need and undue hardship.

Moody v. IRS, 654 F.2d 795, 801 (D.C. Cir. 1981). In broad dicta, court stated that attorney misconduct does not necessarily implicate the crime-fraud exception to breach work product protection.

Many of the cases in which courts have recognized this exception involved clandestine recordings made in violation of ABA Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility Formal Opinion 337 (1974) or related state bar association ethics opinions. In June 2001, the ABA Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility withdrew Formal Opinion 337, stating that a lawyer who electronically records a conversation without the knowledge of the other party or parties to the conversation does not necessarily violate the Model Rules of Professional Conduct. ABA Committee on Ethics & Professional Responsibility Formal Op. 422 (2001). See also Bahrami, 2013 WL 3800093, at *6-7, *9 (noting withdrawal of ABA Formal Opinion 337 by Formal Opinion 422 and finding secret recordings were protected work product).

3. Fiduciary Exception: The Garner Doctrine

As noted in Fiduciary Exception, § I.I.3, above, an exception to the attorney-client privilege has developed for actions involving an organization and the parties to whom it owes fiduciary duties. This exception has its roots in Garner v. Wolfinbarger, 430 F.2d 1093, 1102-03 (5th Cir. 1970). Garner was based on the rationale that a fiduciary relationship between the corporation and its shareholders creates a commonality of interest that precludes the corporation from asserting the attorney-client privilege against its shareholders. Courts have recognized that the policy rationale underlying the Garner exception does not readily mesh with the work product goal of protecting the adversary system. In In re International Systems & Controls Corp. Securities Litigation, 693 F.2d 1235 (5th Cir. 1982), the Fifth Circuit held that the Garner principle does not apply to the work product doctrine and refused to order the production of several binders of work product. In so holding, the court stated that Garner's mutuality of interest rationale does not apply once there is sufficient anticipation of litigation to bring the documents within the work product doctrine.

Most courts are in accord with this reasoning and have not applied the Garner exception to work product. See, e.g., Herman v. Rain Link, Inc., No. 11-1123-RDR, 2012 WL 1207232, at *9 (D. Kan. 2012) (Garner doctrine does not extend to work product); Sigma Delta, L.L.C. v. George, No. 07-5427, 2007 WL 4590097, at *2-3 (E.D. La. Dec. 20, 2007) (“once there is sufficient anticipation of litigation so as to trigger work product immunity the ‘mutuality’ upon which Garner was premised is destroyed”); Cobell v. Norton, 213 F.R.D. 1, 12 n.5 (D.D.C. 2003) (noting cases declining to extend Garner doctrine to work product); Strougo v. BEA Assocs., 199 F.R.D. 515, 524 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (“[T]he logic of Garner does not require the disclosure of material that is protected under the work product doctrine.”); Nellis v. Air Line Pilots Ass’n, 144 F.R.D. 68 (E.D. Va. 1992) (in dictum); Jicarilla Apache Nation v. United States, 88 Fed. Cl. 1, 12-13 (Fed. Cl. 2009) (the fiduciary exception does not apply to work product, which belongs to the litigator, not the litigant fiduciary). However, at least one court has applied Garner to the work product doctrine. See Donovan v. Fitzsimmons, 90 F.R.D. 583, 588 (N.D. Ill. 1981) (Garner rationale must be addressed in the work product context “lest the work-product immunity swallow up the Garner exception in its entirety”). See also Solis v. Food Emp’rs Labor Relations Ass’n, 644 F.3d 221, 232-33 (4th Cir. 2011) (in dicta, finding no basis to distinguish between the attorney-client privilege and work product protection in the application of the fiduciary exception in the ERISA context); MapleWood Partners, L.P. v. Indian Harbor Ins. Co., 295 F.R.D. 550, 615 n.255 (S.D. Fla. 2013) (in the Eleventh Circuit, the Garner doctrine does not apply to work product).

In practice, the fact that many courts do not recognize a Garner exception to the work product doctrine may make little difference because it would be easier to show hardship or burden under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(3). The Garner court identified a series of factors to show “good cause” to invoke the Garner exception. These included the “necessity of the shareholders” and the “availability from other sources.” Garner, 430 F.2d at 1104. It can be argued that these criteria of necessity and availability are the same as the “substantial need” and “undue hardship” requirements of Rule 26(b)(3). Under this reasoning, the Garner standard imposes a higher burden since it subsumes the two Rule 26(b)(3) criteria and requires other criteria in addition. As a result, for ordinary work product, the fact that the Garner exception does not apply will have little practical effect. However, in the case of opinion work product, the lack of a fiduciary exception will have the effect of protecting the mental impressions of corporate counsel from later discovery.

G. COMMON INTEREST EXTENSIONS OF WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION

As noted in Selective Disclosure To Third Parties And Adversaries, § III.E.2, above, the rationale of the work product doctrine is not necessarily compromised by the sharing of protected communications. In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 818 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Under the work product doctrine, the concern is to protect trial preparation from adversaries, not from those with similar interests. Thus, courts have recognized a broad common interest extension for work product immunity that allows attorneys to pool work product with clients and other lawyers with the same interest in a matter. See Haines v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 975 F.2d 81, 90 (3d Cir. 1992) (common interest allows clients facing a common litigation opponent to exchange privileged communications and work product without waiving protection in order to prepare a common defense); In re Doe, 662 F.2d 1073 (4th Cir. 1981); Constar Int'l, Inc. v. Cont'l Pet Tech., Inc., No. Civ. A. 99-234-JJF, 2003 WL 22769044, at *1 (D. Del. Nov. 19, 2003); Gottlieb v. Wiles, 143 F.R.D. 241 (D. Colo. 1992); Weil Ceramics & Glass, Inc. v. Work, 110 F.R.D. 500, 502 (E.D.N.Y. 1986); see also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 91 cmt. b (2000). Upon disclosure, a court will examine whether the originator and recipient of the protected information have common interests against a common adversary which would make disclosure to adversaries unlikely. The existence of a potential common interest, for example as between co-defendants in a criminal proceeding, does not compel the disclosure of privileged work product. See United States v. Jacques Dessange, Inc., No. S2 99 CR 1182, 2000 WL 310345 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 27, 2000) (co-defendant's desire to review all possible material of use to his defense did not justify compelled disclosure of defendant's attorney's notes). See Appendix A for a sample joint/common defense agreement.

MCI then filed its own antitrust action against AT&T and sought to assert work product protection (as a non-party) in the government's case to prevent AT&T from obtaining the materials that MCI had previously disclosed to the government. The D.C. Circuit held that MCI had not waived the protection by disclosing the materials to the government. The court recognized the government and MCI had a common interest against a common adversary and, therefore, no waiver had occurred from the sharing.*

In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 1616, 2013 WL 4781035, at *2-3 (D. Kan. Sept. 5, 2013). Disclosure of work product to former employee waived the joint defense protection because relevant parties lacked identical legal interests and were not engaged in joint legal strategy.

S.E.C. v. Gupta, 281 F.R.D. 169, 171-72 (S.D.N.Y. 2012). Work product protection was waived over documents reviewed during deposition preparation of company’s CEO, who served as a third-party witness, where there was a lack of common interest.

Marciano v. Atl. Med. Specialties, Inc., No. 08-CV-305-JTC, 2011 WL 294487 (W.D.N.Y. Jan. 27, 2011). When a non-party aligned himself with defendants, disclosure of emails to the non-party, who had no legal interest in the ongoing litigation, constituted a waiver; the common interest doctrine did not apply.

Samad Bros., Inc. v. Bokara Rug Co., Inc., No. 09 Civ. 5843(JFK), 2010 WL 5095356 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 13, 2010). Sharing emails with an independent third party witness waived work product protection because the third party did not share a common interest with the defendant such that they could reasonably expect that information revealed to the third party would not be disclosed to the adversary.

In re Aftermarket Filters Antitrust Litig., No. 08 C 4883, 2010 WL 4622527 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 4, 2010). Work product protection was waived as to documents disclosed by a qui tam relator to the Department of Justice and which were later provided by the relator to plaintiffs. There was no common interest between the relator, the DOJ, and the plaintiffs.

Schanfield v. Sojitz Corp. of Am., 258 F.R.D. 211, 216 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). Plaintiff could not establish that the common interest exception should apply; although he may have speculated that his former colleagues shared his interests in bringing suit against their employer, his emails with them did not provide facial support for that assumption, and there was no indication of “demonstrated cooperation in formulating a common legal strategy” between plaintiff and his colleagues.

Chubb Integrated Sys., Ltd. v. Nat’l Bank, 103 F.R.D. 52, 67 (D.D.C. 1984). Voluntary disclosure of work product to adversary in separate litigation waives the privilege with respect to adversaries in lawsuits concerning the same subject matter.

Saito v. McKesson HBOC, Inc., No. Civ.A. 18553, 2002 WL 31657622, at *4-5 (Del. Ch. Nov. 13, 2002). For the purposes of work product privilege waiver, a common interest does not exist between the SEC and the target of an SEC investigation despite the similar goal of the SEC and the company to seek out and rectify wrongdoing within the company.

The broader common interest analysis applicable to work product may protect documents disclosed to government entities even where the attorney-client privilege may not. See In re Steinhardt Partners, 9 F.3d 230, 236 (2d Cir. 1993). In declining to adopt a per se rule of waiver for documents disclosed to government entities, courts in the Second Circuit have reasoned that the existence of a common interest between government agencies and investigated companies might provide one rationale for finding waiver of work product did not apply. Id. (suggesting non-waiver agreements might act to protect documents from discovery); see also In re Cardinal Health, Inc. Sec. Litig., No. C2 04 575 ALM, 2007 WL 495150 (S.D.N.Y. Jan 26, 2007) (disclosure to DOJ of audit committee-ordered internal investigation by outside counsel did not waive work product protection because government and corporation shared a common interest in ensuring company accounting practices were clean, even absent waiver agreement). The Steinhardt court did not squarely address the issue of attorney-client privilege of the shared information, but noted in dicta that the attorney-client privilege would likely be waived by such a disclosure to the government. In re Steinhardt, 9 F.3d at 235. Where, as in the Second Circuit, a doctrine of selective waiver is not recognized, corporations may increasingly seek to rely on work product protection under a common interest theory.

H. COMMON INTEREST EXTENSION OF WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION TO LITIGATION FUNDING

Courts have generally been consistent in finding that litigation funding agreements are protected opinion work product because information concerning the theories, mental impressions, and strategies of the case were likely shared to secure the funding. See Doe v. Soc’y of Missionaries of Sacred Heart, No. 11-cv-02518, 2014 WL 1715376, at *3 (N.D. Ill. May 1, 2014) (litigation financing materials were protected as opinion work product because they contained information pertaining to the strength of plaintiff’s claims, the existence and merits of defendant’s defenses, and other observations and impressions concerning the litigation); Carlyle Inv. Mgmt. LLC v. Moonmouth Co. S.A., C.A. No. 7841-VCP, 2015 WL 778846, at *9-10 (Del. Ch. Feb. 24, 2015) (explaining that the terms of the final agreement between a claim holder and a litigation funder could reflect an analysis of the merits of the case and concluding that opinion work product protection was warranted).

That such documents likely involve a business purpose (i.e., entering into a business contract for funding) as well as a legal purpose has not deterred courts from finding work product protection, given that the documents meet the doctrine’s requirement of having been prepared in anticipation of litigation.

See:

Lambeth Magnetic Structures, LLC v. Seagate Tech. (US) Holdings, Inc., Nos. 16-538, 16-541, 2018 WL 466045, at *5-6 (W.D. Pa. Jan. 18, 2018). Denying motion to compel communications with potential litigation funders because they were made for the purpose of preparing for litigation.

Odyssey Wireless, Inc. v. Samsung Elecs. Co., Ltd, No. 3:15-cv-01738-H (RBB), 2016 WL 7665898, at *5 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 20, 2016). Litigation funding documents were protected by the work product doctrine, because “[a]lthough litigation had not yet commenced, the documents were created because litigation was expected.”

United States v. Homeward Residential, Inc., No. 4:12-CV-461, 2016 WL 1031154, at *6 (E.D. Tex. Mar. 15, 2016). On defendants’ motion to compel, finding that litigation funding information was protected work product because it was used to possibly aid in future or ongoing litigation.

Miller UK Ltd. v. Caterpillar, Inc., 17 F. Supp. 3d 711, 735 (N.D. Ill. 2014). Any documents prepared to aid in case that included counsel’s mental impressions and theory of case did not lose their work product protection because they may have also been prepared to help obtain financing.

Mondis Tech., Ltd v. LG Elecs., Inc., Nos. 2:07–CV–565–TJW–CE, 2:08–CV–478–TJW, 2011 WL 1714304, at *3 (E.D. Tex. May 4, 2011). Documents created for potential investors were protected by the work product doctrine because they were prepared with the intention of aiding future litigation.

In re Int’l Oil Trading Co., LLC, 548 B.R. 825, 836-37 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2016). Primary purpose of communications concerning party’s efforts to seek funding from third-party litigation funder was pursuit of legal services and therefore was protected under work product doctrine.

Carlyle Inv. Mgmt. LLC, C.A. No. 7841-VCP, 2015 WL 778846, at *9 (Del. Ch. Feb. 24, 2015). Despite the overlap between business and litigation purpose in the context of third-party funding documents, work product protection is appropriate because such documents are litigation documents involving lawyers’ mental impressions, theories, and strategies of the case.

But see:

Acceleration Bay LLC v. Activision Blizzard, Inc., Nos. 16-453-RGA, 16-454-RGA, 16-455-RGA, 2018 WL 798731, at *3 (D. Del. Feb. 9, 2018). Documents prepared with primary purpose of obtaining loan, as opposed to aiding in possible litigation, were not work product and did not warrant common interest privilege because plaintiff and funder did not possess identical legal interests.

Moreover, given that work product protection is only waived by disclosure to a third party when that disclosure “substantially increases the opportunities for potential adversaries to obtain the information,” courts have held that work product protection is not waived when litigation funding documents are shared with third party funders because there is an expectation of confidentiality between the parties. See Selective Disclosure To Third Parties And Adversaries, § III.E.2, supra; Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, 2016 WL 1031157, at *6 (documents remained protected under the work product doctrine although disclosed to third-party litigation funders because they have an inherent interest in maintaining the confidentiality of potential clients’ information); Morley v. Square, Inc., No. 4:10cv2243 SNLJ, 2015 WL 7273318, at *2 (E.D. Mo. Nov. 18, 2015) (plaintiffs had an expectation of confidentiality with third-party investors when it shared documents related to litigation funding and therefore did not waive work production protection).

A non-disclosure or confidentiality agreement between parties and third-party litigation funders regarding documents shared, though not necessarily required, is a strong factor against waiver. See Odyssey Wireless, Inc., 2016 WL 7665898, at *6 (finding no waiver of work product protection because disclosure to third party funders was pursuant to confidentiality agreements and an expectation of confidentiality); Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, 2016 WL 1031157, at *6 (work product protection was not waived because no documents were shared with actual or potential litigation funders before an agreement regarding non-disclosure was made); Morley, 2015 WL 7273318, at *2 (no waiver of work product protection when plaintiffs shared litigation funding documents with third parties because oral or written confidentiality statements created a reasonable expectation of confidentiality); Doe, 2014 WL 1715376, at *4 (work product protection was not waived, and recognizing the significance of litigation financing companies entering into written nondisclosure agreements); Miller UK Ltd., 17 F. Supp. 3d at 736-38 (oral confidentiality and written agreement with prospective funders demonstrated precautions taken to avoid risk of disclosure to adversarial party); Mondis Tech., Ltd., 2011 WL 1714304, at *3 (“[A]lthough these documents [litigation funding] were disclosed to third parties, the disclosures do not create a waiver because they were disclosed subject to [nondisclosure] agreements and thus did not substantially increase the likelihood that an adversary would come into possession of the materials.”).

IV. SELF-CRITICAL ANALYSIS PRIVILEGE

Corporations and businesses often conduct internal investigations for a variety of different reasons, and the results of these investigations can be damaging, inculpatory or embarrassing. Investigating parties have therefore attempted to shield these reports from discovery by outside parties and civil litigants. See Note, The Privilege of Self-Critical Analysis, 96 HARV. L. REV. 1083, 1086 (1983); see also Note, Self-Evaluative Privilege and Corporate Compliance Audits, 68 S. CAL. L. REV. 621 (1995). The attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine, discussed throughout this outline, afford the broadest protections. In order to provide additional protection, some courts have also recognized a specific limited privilege to protect institutional self-analysis from outside discovery. This privilege, usually referred to as the “self-critical analysis” privilege but sometimes called the “self-investigative” or “self-evaluative” privilege, was first recognized by the federal courts in the context of medical peer reviews in 1970. See Bredice v. Doctors Hosp., Inc., 50 F.R.D. 249 (D.D.C. 1970). Broad application of the privilege was called into question in University of Pennsylvania v. EEOC, 493 U.S. 182 (1990). In that case, without specifically addressing the self-critical analysis privilege, but admonishing against the application of broad new privileges, the United States Supreme Court held that a university’s internal peer review materials relating to tenure decisions were not privileged. However, the federal courts subsequently have gone on to discuss the privilege and, in rare cases, to apply it. Over the years, the federal courts, principally district courts, have created a confusing body of case law relating to the privilege. The privilege is defined differently depending on the jurisdiction, and some jurisdictions have cases with conflicting outcomes that are barely reconcilable.

At its most general, the purpose of the self-critical analysis privilege is to encourage organizations to conduct self-critical reviews regarding matters of importance to the public without being chilled by the possibility that the self-criticism will be discovered and used against the organization in some later proceeding. Recognizing that the privilege could create an enormous exception to the general rules of discovery, the courts have severely restricted the privilege.

A common statement of the self-critical analysis privilege is that it applies when:

- (1) the information results from a critical self-analysis undertaken by the party seeking protection;
- (2) the public has a strong interest in preserving the free flow of information sought;
- (3) the information is of the type for which flow would be curtailed if discovery were allowed; and
- (4) the document was created with the expectation that it would be kept confidential and has remained so.

See Dowling v. Am. Haw. Cruises, Inc., 971 F.2d 423 (9th Cir. 1992); see also In re Salomon, Inc. Sec. Litig., Nos. 91 Civ. 5442 & 5471, 1992 WL 350762 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 13, 1992) (applying first three factors but finding them not satisfied by the facts of the case). This articulation of the privilege applies particularly to tort cases. Tice v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 192 F.R.D. 270, 272-73 (N.D. Ill. 2000). In tort actions, the rationale for the self-critical analysis privilege is to promote public safety through voluntary and honest self-analysis. Morgan v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 182 F.R.D. 261, 265-66 (N.D. Ill. 1998).

Characterizing it as “perhaps the most cogent statement of a possible test” emerging from a line of cases decided in the Southern District of New York, one court put forth the following test:

The party resisting discovery must make a detailed and convincing showing of the harm to be anticipated from the disclosure at issue in the particular case. . . . Where a party establishes that disclosure of requested information could cause injury to it or otherwise thwart desirable social policies, the discovering party will be required to demonstrate its need for the information, and the harm it would suffer from the denial of such information would outweigh the injury that disclosure would cause the other party or the interest cited by it.

In re Nieri, No. Civ.A. M12-329, 2000 WL 60214, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 24, 2000) (quoting Trezza v. The Hartford, Inc., No. 98 Civ. 2205 (MBMKNF), 1999 WL 511673, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. July 20, 1999)).

Some have found that the self-critical analysis privilege is a qualified privilege that can be overcome upon a showing of need. See U.S. ex rel. Sanders v. Allison Engine Co., 196 F.R.D. 310, 315 (S.D. Ohio 2000) (self-critical analysis privilege is a qualified privilege and it can be overcome by showing extraordinary circumstances or special need); In re Air Crash Near Cali, Colom., 959 F. Supp. 1529, 1535-36 (S.D. Fla. 1997) (self-critical analysis privilege is qualified and may be overcome by a showing of substantial need).

Several courts require the compilation of the material to be mandated by the government (such as an EEOC report). See Zoom Imaging, L.P., v. St. Luke’s Hosp. & Health Network, 513 F. Supp. 2d 411, 416-17 (E.D. Pa. 2007) (noting that “most of the federal cases that have recognized the privilege have done so in areas where the self-critical analysis is either compulsory or part of an effort to comply with legal or regulatory requirements” and refusing to apply it to the instant case because “there is no federal medical peer review statute”); Clark v. Pa. Power & Light Co., No. 98-3017, 1999 WL 225888 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 14, 1999) (subjective portions of affirmative action plans prepared by employer pursuant to OFCCP regulations protected from production to employee by self-critical analysis privilege); Culinary Foods, Inc. v. Raychem Corp., 151 F.R.D. 297, 304 (N.D. Ill.), order clarified, 153 F.R.D. 614 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (self-investigative privilege can protect materials prepared for mandatory government reports); Webb v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 81 F.R.D. 431, 434 (E.D. Pa. 1978); Vanek v. NutraSweet Co., No. 92 C 0115, 1992 WL 133162 (N.D. Ill. June 11, 1992) (finding material not privileged); see also Tice v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 192 F.R.D. 270, 272 (N.D. Ill. 2000) (requirement of government mandate applies in context of employment discrimination case, but not in a tort case); Morgan v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 182 F.R.D. 261, 265 (N.D. Ill. 1998). But see In re Air Crash at Lexington, Ky., Aug. 27, 2006, 545 F. Supp. 2d 618, 623-24 (E.D. Ky. 2008) (rejecting application of the privilege where the analysis resulted from an effort to comply with the Fair Labor Standards Act and as a result of litigation); Lawson v. Fisher-Price, Inc., 191 F.R.D. 381 (D. Vt. 1999) (privilege not applicable where information mandated to be disclosed to government agency); In re Air Crash Near Cali, Colom., 959 F. Supp. 1529 (S.D. Fla. 1997) (declining to apply self-critical analysis privilege to voluntary pilot self-reporting documents, but applying a completely new common law privilege to protect the documents).

Most courts have held that, where the privilege applies, only the subjective portions of self-critical reports are protected by the privilege; the underlying objective data is not protected. See, e.g., Berner v. Carnival Corp., No. 08-22569-CIV, 2009 WL 982621, at *1 (S.D. Fla. Apr. 10, 2009) (declining to adopt the privilege and noting that cases adopting the privilege limit it to subjective impressions and opinions); Gardner v. Johnson, No. 08 C 50006, 2008 WL 3823713, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 13, 2008) (requiring production of police investigation report but allowing department to redact any “subjective critique of the arresting officer’s conduct or police department policies”); Goh v. CRE Acquisition, Inc., No. 02 C 4838, 2004 WL 765238, at *1 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 6, 2004) (noting that, assuming it exists, the “privilege protects only subjective evaluations, not objective data”); Freiermuth v. PPG Indus., Inc., 218 F.R.D. 694, 698 (N.D. Ala. 2003) (the self-critical analysis privilege does not apply to documents which “merely provide facts, statistics, and rankings”); Clark v. Pa. Power & Light Co., Inc., No. 98-3017, 1999 WL 225888 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 14, 1999); Shipes v. BIC Corp., 154 F.R.D. 301, 308 (M.D. Ga. 1994); Culinary Foods, Inc. v. Raychem Corp., 151 F.R.D. 297, 304 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (observing that, when adopted, the self-investigative privilege protects only subjective, evaluative materials and not objective data or reports), order clarified, 153 F.R.D. 614 (N.D. Ill. 1993); John v. Trane Co., 831 F. Supp. 855 (S.D. Fla. 1993) (employer was required to produce affirmative action plan but self-evaluative privilege protected portions containing subjective evaluations of management); In re Crazy Eddie Sec. Litig., 792 F. Supp. 197 (E.D.N.Y. 1992) (finding privilege to exist); Witten v. A.H. Smith & Co., 100 F.R.D. 446, 449 (D. Md. 1984) (finding privilege inapplicable to the facts); Resnick v. Am. Dental Ass’n, 95 F.R.D. 372, 374 (N.D. Ill. 1982) (privilege protects subjective and evaluative material prepared for mandatory government reports); Webb v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 81 F.R.D. 431, 434 (E.D. Pa. 1978).

Some courts have restricted the privilege to post-accident analyses and have held that the privilege is inapplicable to pre-accident internal safety analyses. See Dowling v. Am. Haw. Cruises, Inc., 971 F.2d 423, 427 (9th Cir. 1992) (refusing to apply the privilege to pre-accident safety reviews). See also In re Block Island Fishing, Inc., 323 F.Supp.3d 158, 162 (D. Mass. 2018) (self-critical analysis privilege applied to post-accident report prepared by tanker owner to determine root cause of collision); Hogan v. City of Easton, Civil Action No. 04-759, 2006 WL 3702637, at *8 n.8 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 12, 2006) (applying self-critical analysis privilege to post-accident police evaluation). But see Myers v. Uniroyal Chem. Co., Civ. A. No. 916716, 1992 WL 97822, at *4 (E.D. Pa. May 5, 1992) (self-critical analysis would not apply to post-accident investigation because manufacturer would have sufficient incentive to investigate to prevent future accidents even absent the privilege). Other courts have held that the privilege does not apply to government demands for documents. See, e.g., In re Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Co., 214 F.3d 586, 593 (5th Cir. 2000) (privilege does not apply where a government agency seeks pre-accident documents).

A typical analysis under the four-pronged Dowling standard, above, turns on the third element and whether the information would be subject to a chilling effect. Courts often determine that the information in a report would continue to be collected even if discoverable because other incentives would be sufficient to overcome any chilling effect. In In re Salomon, Inc. Securities Litigation, Nos. 91 Civ. 5442 & 5471, 1992 WL 350762 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 13, 1992), for example, Salomon Bros. was sued for misrepresentation of facts and concealment of treasury violations in a securities auction. Salomon had conducted internal audits of its controls and procedures for trading and had commissioned an audit by Coopers & Lybrand. When a suit was brought against it, Salomon claimed a self-critical analysis privilege for those audits. The court recognized the public's interest but concluded that discovery would not curtail management control studies and internal audits because economic efficiencies, accuracy in financial reporting, and improvement of business standards are integral to the success of a business. Thus, the court held the privilege did not apply. Id. See also Scott v. City of Peoria, No. 09-1189, 2011 WL 5078171, at *6 (C.D. Ill. Oct. 25, 2011) (refusing to apply the self-critical analysis privilege to a police investigation report because the public "has an extremely strong interest in assuring that the accusations [against police officers] are properly addressed and investigated"); Lewis v. Wells Fargo & Co., 266 F.R.D. 433, 439 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (rejecting the self-critical analysis privilege because allowing discovery of Fair Labor Standards Act audit results would not curtail such audits in the future); MacNamara v. City of New York, No. 04 Civ. 9612(KMK)(JCF), 2007 WL 755401, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 14, 2007) (refusing to apply the privilege where there would be no chilling effect because, "as a government agency, [the NYPD] has an obligation to the public to ensure that its operations are effective"); In re Winstar Commc'ns, No. 01 CV 3014(GBD), 2007 WL 4115812, at *2-3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 15, 2007) (holding that there would be no chilling effect because the auditor owes a duty to the investing public, and noting a trend that the privilege is inapplicable in securities fraud actions where an accounting firm is being sued for allegedly engaging in a massive accounting fraud); Cruz v. Coach Stores, Inc., 196 F.R.D. 228, 232 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) ("A company has an obvious economic interest in engaging in self-evaluations of employee misconduct: it hardly needs the additional protection of a shield of privilege to investigate its own employees' alleged derelictions."); Myers v. Uniroyal Chem. Co., Civ. A. No. 916716, 1992 WL 97822, at *4 (E.D. Pa. May 5, 1992) (manufacturer's interest in preventing future accidents sufficient incentive for post-accident investigation).

The self-investigative privilege has been employed most frequently to protect hospital internal review procedures, see KD ex rel. Dieffenbach v. United States, 715 F. Supp. 2d 587, 592 (D. Del. 2010); Granger v. Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp., 116 F.R.D. 507, 509 (E.D. Pa. 1987); Gillman v. United States, 53 F.R.D. 316, 318 (S.D.N.Y. 1971), and employer affirmative action reports, see Coates v. Johnson & Johnson, 756 F.2d 524 (7th Cir. 1985) (affirmative action filings protected in dicta); Sheppard v. Consol. Edison Co. of N.Y., 893 F. Supp. 6, 8 (E.D.N.Y. 1995); Penk v. Or. State Bd. of Higher Educ., 99 F.R.D. 506, 507 (D. Or. 1982); Roberts v. Nat'l Detroit Corp., 87 F.R.D. 30, 32 (E.D. Mich. 1980). But see McDougal-Wilson v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 232 F.R.D. 246, 250 (E.D.N.C. 2005) (rejecting privilege for affirmative action documents); Witten v. A.H. Smith & Co., 100 F.R.D. 446, 449-54 (D. Md. 1984) (same).

The self-investigative privilege also been invoked to protect internal corporate investigations. See FTC v. TRW, Inc., 628 F.2d 207 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (rejecting use of privilege to impair FTC); In re LTV Sec. Litig., 89 F.R.D. 595, 618-22 (N.D. Tex. 1981) (finding that privilege existed).

The privilege applies only to reports prepared after the fact for the purpose of candid self-evaluation and analysis of the cause and effect of past pollution.*

Shipes v. BIC Corp., 154 F.R.D. 301 (M.D. Ga. 1994). Applying Georgia law, the court held that the self-critical analysis privilege protected self-evaluation disclosures sent to the Consumer Products Safety Commission, but only to the extent that they reflected critical analysis of BIC products, testing, or procedures.

In re Crazy Eddie Sec. Litig., 792 F. Supp. 197 (E.D.N.Y. 1992). Court recognized that a self-investigative privilege serves the public interest by encouraging self-improvement through uninhibited self-analysis and evaluation. However, court also noted that the privilege is not absolute and applies only to the evaluation itself, not to the underlying facts on which the evaluation is based.

Granger v. Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp., 116 F.R.D. 507, 509 (E.D. Pa. 1987). Railroad claimed privilege for internal investigation documents. Court found that a self-investigative privilege applied to prevent a chilling of company's efforts at self-analysis and evaluation. Court concluded that the privilege served to protect the public by leading to safer practices.

With:

Dowling v. Am. Haw. Cruises, Inc., 971 F.2d 423 (9th Cir. 1992). Court addressed the self-investigative privilege without specifically adopting it since it concluded that, even if a self-critical analysis privilege exists, it would not apply to routine safety reviews. It reasoned that these routine reviews would not be curtailed by discovery because other incentives for conducting such interviews (i.e., avoiding liability) continue to exist. In addition, court found that safety reviews are not always performed with an expectation of confidentiality. The court also found that fairness did not require protection since the company was not legally required to conduct these reviews.

Lopez v. Santoyo, No. 09cv00108 W(RBB), 2012 WL 5427957, at *9 (S.D. Cal., Nov. 7, 2012). Court held that self-critical analysis privilege did not protect prior medical and dental committee meeting minutes from disclosure. The “self-critical” analysis privilege invoked by defendants has not been recognized by the Ninth Circuit, but even if it had, it is inapplicable where the four elements have not been met.

In re Digitek Prod. Liab. Litig., MDL No. 1968, 2010 WL 519860, at *5-6 (S.D. W. Va. Feb. 10, 2010). The court did not acknowledge or accept the self-critical analysis privilege, but found that, even if it had, the privilege would not apply to the type of internal audit in question. The purpose of the audit was to determine if a pharmaceutical company’s packaging and testing operations complied with federal regulations. This assessment, the court reasoned, would not be the type whose flow would be curtailed should discovery be allowed because these types of audits are essential to the success of pharmaceutical companies, which are often in competition with one another and stringently regulated by the federal government.

U.S. ex rel. Sanders v. Allison Engine Co., 196 F.R.D. 310 (S.D. Ohio 2000). Self-critical analysis privilege would not protect from discovery by qui tam relator internal audits conducted to assess quality control deficiencies and potential improvements in the fabrication of base and enclosure assemblies for generator sets that were installed in United States Arleigh Burke class destroyers. First, courts, with apparent uniformity, have refused to apply the privilege where the documents in question have been sought by a government agency. There is a “strong public interest in allowing governmental investigations to proceed efficiently and expeditiously.” Second, the court was skeptical that disclosure would chill future quality control audits. Third, the documents were not created with the expectation that they would remain confidential, because the company was required to make the reports available to the prime contractor.

Mason v. Stock, 869 F. Supp. 828 (D. Kan. 1994). City could not invoke self-critical analysis privilege to block discovery of police internal affairs investigation because it would interfere with the constitutional rights of citizens, and discovery was not likely to chill police cooperation with internal investigations.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 861 F. Supp. 386 (D. Md. 1994). Company was served with a grand jury subpoena seeking the results of an internal audit conducted by a private consultant. Court held that the self-critical analysis privilege did not apply in the criminal context.

Vanek v. NutraSweet, Co., No. 92 C 0115, 1992 WL 133162 (N.D. Ill. June 11, 1992). Employee sued former employer under Title VII after she was laid off while on maternity leave. Before the lawsuit, the company had formed a task force to set goals for diversity. In addition, an outside consultant had performed an audit and made recommendations to key personnel in human resources. Court held that the self-evaluative privilege did not apply, because these activities were voluntary.

Steinle v. Boeing Co., No. 90-1377-C, 1992 WL 53752 (D. Kan. Feb. 4, 1992). Employee complained to company’s internal EEOC office which conducted an investigation and concluded that there was no misclassification. In a subsequent lawsuit, the employee requested documents from the investigation, and the court found there was no privilege. It reasoned that self-evaluation of individual grievances would not be affected by disclosure, because such an investigation is consistent with the business interests of management.

In re Fisher & Paykel Appliances, Inc., 420 S.W.3d 842, 848 (Tex. App. 2014). Texas courts have not acknowledged self-critical analysis privilege as part of Texas common law.

Dorato v. Smith, 163 F.Supp.3d 837, 892-93 (D.N.M. 2015). Declining to recognize the self-critical analysis privilege in the Tenth Circuit, specifically as applied to police personnel and investigative files.

Some courts have expressed skepticism and have refused to recognize a self-critical privilege for internal corporate investigations.

See:

Alaska Elec. Pension Fund v. Pharmacia Corp., 554 F.3d 342, 351 n.12 (3d Cir. 2009). “The self-critical analysis privilege has never been recognized by this Court and we see no reason to recognize it now.”

Burden-Meeks v. Welch, 319 F.3d 897, 899 (7th Cir. 2003). Noting that the Seventh Circuit has not recognized the self-critical analysis privilege.

Union Pac. R.R. v. Mower, 219 F.3d 1069, 1076 n.7 (9th Cir. 2000). The Ninth Circuit noted that it “has not recognized this novel privilege” and was unable to identify any Oregon case law adopting or even discussing “this supposed privilege.”

Slaughter v. Nat’l Passenger Corp., No. 10-4203, 2011 WL 780754, at *4 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 4, 2011). Noting that, although the Eastern District has applied the self-critical analysis privilege in various contexts, each of those opinions predated the Third Circuit’s decision in Alaska Electric Pension Fund v. Pharmacia Corp., 554 F.3d 342 (3d Cir. 2009), therefore, their persuasiveness was undercut and the self-critical analysis privilege was inapplicable.

Jewell v. Polar Tankers Inc., No. C 09-1669, 2010 WL 1460165, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 8, 2010). There is no basis for applying the self-critical analysis privilege in the Northern District of California; to the contrary, there is a “well recognized federal policy of promoting broad pre-trial discovery.”

Cochran v. Nat’l Processing Co., No. 5:09-364-KKC, 2010 WL 820943, at *3 (E.D. Ky. Mar. 4, 2010). Finding that the Sixth Circuit has never explicitly adopted the privilege, and, furthermore, that “no circuit court of appeals has explicitly recognized the self-critical analysis privilege.”

Lindley v. Life Investors Ins. Co. of Am., 267 F.R.D. 382, 387 (N.D. Okla. 2010). Noting that the privilege is not recognized in Oklahoma or the Tenth Circuit.

Smith v. Life Investors Ins. Co., No. 2:07-cv-681, 2009 WL 3364933, at *8 (W.D. Pa. Oct. 16, 2009). Noting that the privilege is not recognized by Pennsylvania or the Third Circuit and declining to apply it to an undated report prepared by outside counsel absent demonstration that the report was communicated to the client.

Gordon v. Sunrise Senior Living Mgmt., Inc., No. 08-cv-02299-REB-MJW, 2009 WL 2959213, at *1 (D. Colo. Sept. 10, 2009). Noting that the privilege is not recognized by the Tenth Circuit or under Colorado law.

Ovesen v. Mitsubishi Heavy Indus. of Am. Inc., No. 04 Civ. 2849, 2009 WL 195853, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 23, 2009). Noting that the continued viability of the privilege “is an open question” and declining to apply it to internal correspondence relating to an airplane crash because defendants failed to establish that the information would not have been generated had its authors believed it would be disclosed.

Kreger v. Gen. Steel Corp., No. 07-575, 2008 WL 782767, at *3 (E.D. La. Mar. 20, 2008). Stating that the Fifth Circuit has not recognized the privilege.

EEOC v. City of Madison, No. 07-C-349-S, 2007 WL 5414902, at *1 (W.D. Wis. Sep. 20, 2007). Refusing to recognize the privilege.

Mitchell v. Fishbein, 227 F.R.D. 239, 251-52 (S.D.N.Y. 2005). Noting that the privilege has not been recognized in the Second Circuit.

Freiermuth v. PPG Indus., Inc., 218 F.R.D. 694, 697 (N.D. Ala. 2003). Noting that the privilege has not been recognized in the Eleventh Circuit.

United States v. Dexter Corp., 132 F.R.D. 8 (D. Conn. 1990). Rejecting privilege in environmental context.

Siskonen v. Stanadyne, Inc., 124 F.R.D. 610 (W.D. Mich. 1989). Michigan has not adopted a statutory self-critical analysis privilege, nor has any Michigan court recognized such a privilege.

Abbott v. Harris Publ'ns, 97 Civ. 7648, 1999 WL 549002, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. July 28, 1999). “In light of the Supreme Court opinion in [University of Pennsylvania v. EEOC, 493 U.S. 182 (1990)], it is clear that to the extent a self-critical analysis privilege has any continued validity, the party seeking to invoke it bears a heavy burden of establishing that public policy strongly favors the type of review at issue and that disclosure in the course of discovery will have a substantial chilling effect on the willingness of parties to engage in such reviews.”

State law relating to privileges is often governed by statute, and many states have statutes adopting forms of a self-evaluative privilege in a very limited context. For example, most states afford some confidentiality to medical peer reviews of patient care. See, e.g., ALA. CODE § 22-21-8 (West 2016); GA. CODE ANN. §§ 31-7-133, 31-7-143 (West 2016); IOWA CODE ANN. § 147.135 (West 2017); MASS. GEN. LAWS ANN. ch. 111, § 204 (West 2016). A number of states have adopted statutes that create privilege for environmental audits, generally covering reports or audits that constitute voluntary evaluations designed to identify or prevent non-compliance with environmental laws. See, e.g., ALASKA STAT. ANN. § 09.25.450 (West 2016); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 224.01-040 (West 2017); MISS. CODE ANN. § 49-2-71 (West 2017). State courts, however, have generally declined to recognize a more general self-evaluative privilege. See, e.g., Lara v. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 504 F. Supp. 2d 1323, 1328 (N.D. Ga. 2007) (“Georgia law does not allow for such a privilege.”); Jolly v. Super. Court, 112 Ariz. 186, 540 P.2d 658, 662-63 (Ariz. 1975) (refusing to apply privilege to materials relating to internal investigation of possible violation of company safety standards); Cloud v. Super. Court (Litton Indus., Inc.), 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 365 (Cal. Ct. App. 1996) (privilege does not exist under California law); Combined Commc’ns Corp. v. Pub. Serv. Co., 865 P.2d 893, 898 (Colo. Ct. App. 1993); Weed v. State, No. KNLCV156024544S, 2018 WL 6492780, at *1 (Conn. Super. Ct. Nov. 19, 2018) (“Connecticut does not recognize a ‘self-evaluative’ and/or ‘self-critical’ privilege by way of the common law nor statute.”); S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Beard, 597 So. 2d 873, 876 n.4 (Fla. Ct. App. 1992); Rockford Police Benevolent & Protective Ass’n, Unit No. 6 v. Morrissey, 925 N.E.2d 1205, 1212 (Ill. App. Ct. 2010) (“The self-critical analysis privilege has not been adopted by the Illinois courts.”); Scroggins v. Uniden Corp. of Am., 506 N.E.2d 83, 86 (Ind. Ct. App. 1987); Roman Catholic Diocese of Jackson v. Morrison, 905 So. 2d 1213, 1245 (Miss. 2005) (declining to “recognize or establish” the self-critical analysis privilege); Muenken v. Toner, 2011 WL 2694431, at *8 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. July 13, 2011) (noting that the court has declined to adopt the self-critical analysis privilege as a full privilege; instead, the court must use a “case-by-case balancing approach” to determine when the privilege should be applied to internal investigation reports).

V. PRESERVING THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE AND THE CONFIDENTIALITY OF WORK PRODUCT DURING DEPOSITION PREPARATION AND TESTIMONY

Although the practitioner needs to be aware of the principles of the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine throughout the course of litigation, it is never more important than in preparing for and defending depositions. During the course of a deposition, usually with only a few seconds notice, an attorney must decide whether to instruct a witness not to answer a question on the grounds of privilege and articulate the basis for the privilege. Just as important, an attorney must have prepared the witness with privilege issues in mind – both to avoid waiver and to ensure that the witness is prepared to lay the proper foundation for an asserted privilege.

A. INSTRUCTIONS NOT TO ANSWER

As a general matter, during a deposition it is improper to instruct a witness not to answer a question unless the answer would reveal privileged information. This rule is set out currently in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 30(c)(2) (it was moved to Rule 30(d)(1) between 1993 and 2007):

An objection must be stated concisely in a nonargumentative and nonsuggestive manner. A person may instruct a deponent not to answer only when necessary to preserve a privilege, to enforce a limitation ordered by the court, or to present a motion under Rule 30(d)(3).

An instruction not to answer a question on grounds of privilege should be accompanied by sufficient information to ensure that the court will be able to determine whether the asserted privilege is well-founded. See FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(5). Although it is probably not necessary to specify the type of protection asserted (i.e., attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine), the better practice is to identify one or both of the protections to ensure that the protection is not waived on review by the trial court. Compare Delco Wire & Cable, Inc. v. Weinberger, 109 F.R.D. 680, 691 (E.D. Pa. 1986) (failure to specify work product doctrine during deposition does not waive the protection absent equitable reasons requiring waiver), with Gerrits v. Brannen Banks of Fla., Inc., 138 F.R.D. 574, 576 n.2 (D. Colo. 1991) (failure to identify work product doctrine in response to motion to compel waives the protection).

Although it is common practice in many jurisdictions to require the party taking the deposition to move to compel deposition answers, some courts require the objecting party, immediately following the deposition, to move the court for a protective order regarding the matters to which the attorney has objected and about which she has instructed the witness not to testify. See, e.g., Redwood v. Dobson, 476 F.3d 462, 468 (7th Cir. 2007) (counsel violated the federal rules when he instructed the witness not to answer but never presented a subsequent motion for a protective order); Indus. Risk Insurers v. D.C. Taylor Co., No. C06-0171, 2008 WL 936881, at *2 (N.D. Iowa Apr. 7, 2008) (“Generally, the party who instructs the witness not to answer should immediately seek a protective order.”); Geico Cas. Co. v. Beauford, No. 805-CV-697-24EAJ, 2006 WL 2789013, at *4 (M.D. Fla. Sept. 26, 2006) (same); Tuerkes-Beckers, Inc. v. New Castle Assocs., 158 F.R.D. 573, 575 (D. Del. 1993) (if answering a question would require the witness to disclose privileged information, then “counsel shall immediately call the Court to request a time to present [a] motion” under Rule 30(d)); Hisaw v. Unisys Corp., 134 F.R.D. 151, 152 (W.D. La. 1991) (“[I]t is the duty of the attorney instructing the witness not to answer to immediately seek a protective order.”); Am. Hangar, Inc. v. Basic Line, Inc., 105 F.R.D. 173, 175 (D. Mass. 1985) (same); Int’l Union of Elec., Radio & Mach. Workers v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 91 F.R.D. 277, 280 n.4 (D.D.C. 1981) (“The objecting attorney should normally also seek a protective order under Rule 30(d).”).

An attorney should be careful to avoid instructing a witness not to answer questions that call for background information that is itself not privileged. For example, a witness may identify the individuals who participated in an allegedly privileged conversation, where and when the conversation took place, and the general context of the conversation without revealing the substance of the communication. See, e.g., Wellin v. Wellin, No. 2:13-cv-1831-DCN, 2016 WL 7626536, at *9 (D.S.C. Mar. 8, 2016) (witness properly refused to answer questions during a deposition where testimony relied solely on facts about the attorney’s investigation learned from the attorney); Nycomed U.S. Inc. v. Glenmark Generics Ltd., No. 08-CV-5023 (CBA)(RLM), 2009 WL 3334365, at *3 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 14, 2009) (noting that deposition testimony that defendant’s IP department developed strategies to avoid patent infringement in conjunction with counsel did not reveal the principal substance of the attorney-client communications); New Jersey v. Sprint Corp., 258 F.R.D. 421, 428 (D. Kan. 2009) (deposition testimony disclosing the fact that legal advice was received did not waive attorney-client privilege because only the general subject nature of the defendants’ communications with counsel, rather than the substance of those communications, was revealed); Pucket v. Hot Springs Sch. Dist. No. 23-2, 239 F.R.D. 572, 582 (D.S.D. 2006) (a deposition question concerning when the attorney-client relationship had been established did not require disclosure of privileged communications); Potts v. Allis-Chalmers Corp., 118 F.R.D. 597, 604 (N.D. Ind. 1987) (fact that attorney advised client on a particular occasion is not privileged). This is the type of information that would be included on a privilege log and is the sort of information that the court needs to determine whether an objection is well-founded. However, an attorney may instruct his client not to answer questions that relate to the witness’s preparation for the deposition, such as “were you instructed not to speculate in this deposition by anyone” or “were you instructed not to provide any information unless you knew it for a fact?” See Christy v. Pa. Tpk. Comm’n, 160 F.R.D. 51, 54 (E.D. Pa. 1995).

With respect to attorney-client conversations or written communications, a witness should provide the general contextual information about the communication. With respect to work product, a witness should identify information regarding the foundation for the doctrine, that is, the person who prepared the work product, and, if not an attorney, the attorney who authorized the creation of the work product. It is also well-settled that a witness must testify about the facts contained in work product, even if the document itself is protected from discovery by the work product doctrine. See Underlying Facts By Themselves Are Not Protected, § III.B.2.a, supra. However, a witness should be instructed not to answer questions that would elicit their attorney's mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories about the litigation.

See:

Van Heerden v. Bd. of Supervisors of La. State Univ. & Agric. & Mech. Coll., No. 10-155-D-M2, 2011 WL 293758, at *2 n.4 (M.D. La. Jan. 27, 2011). "The work-product doctrine is designed to guard only against the divulging of an attorney's legal impressions and strategies; it cannot be used to protect the underlying facts found within work-product."

Oklahoma v. Tyson Foods, Inc., No. 05-CV-329-GRF-PJC, 2009 WL 3682757, at *10 (N.D. Okla. Nov. 4, 2009). The mental processes of the attorney are protected by the work product doctrine, but the work product doctrine does not protect underlying facts, "even if those facts are attained due to the efforts of the attorney."

Smith v. Gen. Mills, Inc., No. C2 04 705, 2009 WL 2525462, at *4 (S.D. Ohio Aug. 13, 2009). Defendants were obligated to name a corporate representative for a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition in which plaintiffs sought only to discover the factual bases supporting cross-claim allegations and not the mental impressions of defendants' counsel, although defendants' counsel may have provided the facts to defendants or to the corporate representative.

Taylor v. Shaw, No. 2:04-cv-01668-LDG-LRL, 2007 WL 710186, at *3 (D. Nev. Mar. 7, 2007). Plaintiffs sought a protective order to prevent Rule 30(b)(6) depositions that plaintiffs claimed "would effectively result in the deposition of plaintiffs' attorneys" because noticed topics included the basis for plaintiffs' contentions. Court denied the motion on the grounds that the facts underlying privileged communications and work product are not protected; "work product privilege is not implicated unless the inquiring party asks the organizational deponent questions which improperly tend to elicit the mental impressions of the parties' attorneys."

Barrett Indus. Trucks, Inc. v. Old Republic Ins. Co., 129 F.R.D. 515, 518 (N.D. Ill. 1990). The work product doctrine does not protect discovery of the underlying facts of a particular dispute, even if the deponent's answer to a question is based upon information provided by counsel.

Hydramar, Inc. v. Gen. Dynamics Corp., 119 F.R.D. 367, 372 (E.D. Pa. 1988). The work product doctrine "does in a very limited way operate to circumscribe the scope of depositions upon oral examination." A deponent may not be asked questions that would reveal his attorney's mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories concerning the litigation. However, application of the work product doctrine to oral depositions must be limited, otherwise litigants would use the doctrine unfairly to restrict "the open discovery process envisioned by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure." Therefore, the work product doctrine furnishes no shield against the discovery of the facts that the adverse party's attorney has learned, the persons from whom he has learned such facts, or the existence or non-existence of documents.

See also Prot. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 137 F.R.D. 267, 279-80 (D. Neb. 1989) (finding nothing improper about asking a deponent for facts that were communicated to the deponent by the deponent's counsel so long as there is no danger of indirect disclosure of an attorney's mental impressions or theories of the case); Nutmeg Ins. Co. v. Atwell, Vogel & Sterling, 120 F.R.D. 504, 509 (W.D. La. 1988) (same).

B. SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES – RULE 30(b)(6) DEPOSITIONS AND DEPOSITIONS OF COUNSEL

Depositions taken pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 30(b)(6) present unique problems regarding privilege issues. Rule 30(b)(6) provides in pertinent part:

In its notice or subpoena, a party may name as the deponent a public or private corporation, a partnership, an association, a governmental agency, or other entity and must describe with reasonable particularity the matters for examination. The named organization must then designate one or more officers, directors, or managing agents, or designate other persons who consent to testify on its behalf; and it may set out the matters on which each person designated will testify. . . . The persons designated must testify about information known or reasonably available to the organization.

The Advisory Committee's Notes regarding the 1970 Amendment to Rule 30 indicate that the purpose of Rule 30(b)(6), among other things, is to "curb the 'bandying' by which officers or managing agents of a corporation are deposed in turn but each disclaims knowledge of facts that are clearly known to persons in the organization and thereby to it."

Rule 30(b)(6) witnesses are expected to be adequately prepared regarding the topics identified in the notice for deposition and the subjects that the entity should reasonably know, to the extent information on such matters is reasonably available. See, e.g., State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. v. New Horizont, Inc., 250 F.R.D. 203, 216 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (ordering monetary sanctions for corporate party's failure to adequately prepare the witness); see also 8A CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2103 (3d ed. West 2019).

Generally, courts do not consider a Rule 30(b)(6) witness's testimony to be a judicial admission that absolutely binds the corporate party. See AstenJohnson, Inc. v. Columbia Cas. Co., 562 F.3d 213, 229 n.9 (3d Cir. 2009) (noting that a Rule 30(b)(6) representative's interpretation of a contract did not contain factual admissions or discuss the defendant's intentions and was therefore a legal conclusion; the deponent's testimony was not binding on the corporate defendant, which was allowed to produce contrary evidence at trial); A.I. Credit Corp. v. Legion Ins. Co., 265, F.3d 630, 637 (7th Cir. 2001) (stating that a corporate party is not absolutely bound to the Rule 30(b)(6) witness's recollection); R&B Appliance Parts, Inc. v. Amana Co., 258 F.3d 783, 786 (8th Cir. 2001) (noting that a corporate party is no more bound by its Rule 30(b)(6) witness's deposition testimony "than any witness is by his or her prior deposition testimony"); Dow Corning Corp. v. Weather Shield Mfg., Inc., No. 09-10429, 2011 WL 4506167, at *5 (E.D. Mich. Sept. 29, 2011) ("Although the testimony of a Rule 30(b)(6) designee may be binding on the corporation, testimony furnished by a Rule 30(b)(6) witness does not preclude the introduction of other evidence that relates to the designee's testimony, inconsistent or not."); State Farm, 250 F.R.D. at 212 (noting the "better rule," that the testimony of a Rule 30(b)(6) representative is not a judicial admission that absolutely binds the corporate party, and rejecting defendants' motion for summary judgment argument that plaintiff had no facts to support its claims after plaintiff's Rule 30(b)(6) witness testified that he had no knowledge of facts "[o]ther than [those facts learned through] discussion with counsel" by pointing to the thousands of documents supporting plaintiff's allegations that plaintiff cited in response to defendants' interrogatories); Jerold S. Solovy & Robert L. Byman, Baying at the Rule, 31 NAT'L L.J. 24 (2008). But see Rainey v. Am. Forest & Paper Ass'n, 26 F. Supp. 2d 82, 94 (D.D.C. 1998) ("a corporation cannot later proffer new or different allegations that could have been made at the time of the 30(b)(6) deposition" unless it can prove the information was not known or accessible at that time); United States v. Taylor, 166 F.R.D. 356, 362 (M.D.N.C. 1996) ("[I]f a party states it has no knowledge or position as to a set of alleged facts or area of inquiry at a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition, it cannot argue for a contrary position at trial without introducing evidence explaining the reasons for the change."); Ierardi v. Lorillard, Inc., Civ. A. No. 90-7049, 1991 WL 158911, at *3 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 13, 1991) ("If the designee testifies that [the corporation] does not know the answer . . . [it] will not be allowed to effectively change its answer by introducing evidence during trial.").

Courts may impose sanctions under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 37 for a corporate party's failure to adequately prepare a Rule 30(b)(6) witness. See Banco Del Atlantico, S.A. v. Woods Indus. Inc., 519 F.3d 350, 354 (7th Cir. 2008) (affirming the district court's order granting defendants' motion to dismiss after plaintiff's Rule 30(b)(6) witnesses failed to respond to defendants' questions, except with presumably scripted "talking points"); In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig., No. 02-1390, 2011 WL 2357793, at *6, 9 (D.N.J. June 9, 2011) (upholding magistrate judge's imposition of sanctions and finding that defendant's Rule 30(b)(6) witness lacked the basic knowledge necessary to provide testimony); State Farm, 250 F.R.D. at 219 (ordering monetary sanctions); Kyoei Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. M/V Mar. Antalya, 248 F.R.D. 126, 152 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (preventing defendant from offering evidence on subjects for which its Rule 30(b)(6) deponent claimed to have no knowledge); see generally Jerold S. Solovy & Robert L. Byman, Baying at the Rule, 31 NAT'L L.J. 24 (2008).

Several courts have held that Rule 30(b)(6) witnesses are required to testify regarding facts that they learned from conversations with counsel and from the review of work product, even if the witness has no first-hand knowledge regarding the information. Otherwise, the only alternative would be to depose a party's attorney to learn the basis of the party's allegations or defenses. However, courts attempt to protect legitimately privileged information by prohibiting questions the answers to which would elicit the mental impressions of counsel.

See:

Damarr-Faruq v. City of Pleasantville Police Dept., Civil No. 21-11866 (KMW)(EAP), 2023 WL 3996952, at *2 (D. N.J. June 13, 2023). Regarding FRCP 30(b)(6) depositions, communications with counsel during preparation for a deposition may be privileged where facts cannot be separated from the communication with counsel. Where plaintiff questioned a 30(b)(6) witness about communications with counsel that were part of the witness's preparation, plaintiff's motion to compel a resumed deposition was denied because plaintiff had not asked solely about facts.

Oklahoma v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 262 F.R.D. 617, 631 (N.D. Okla. 2009). In response to a Rule 30(b)(6) notice, a corporation must make a good faith effort to designate representatives having knowledge of the matters listed in the notice and to prepare those representatives so that they can answer fully, completely, and not evasively. "The rules require that the corporation select an officer or employee to gather and obtain from books, records, other offices or employees, or other sources, the information necessary to answer . . . on behalf of the corporation.” This may require that a designated deponent testify regarding facts that the witness has learned from counsel or from his/her review of work product. However, particular care must be taken to protect against the indirect disclosure of opinion work product. This would include counsel’s view as to the significance, or lack thereof, of particular facts, or any other matter that reveals counsel’s mental impressions concerning the case.

Smith v. Gen. Mills, Inc., No. C2 04-705, 2009 WL 2525462, at *3-4 (S.D. Ohio Aug. 13, 2009). Although Rule 30(b)(6) deposition was for the purpose of discovering factual bases for claims, rather than legal opinions, court cautioned against asking questions intended to elicit counsel’s advice or views as to the significance of particular facts or any other matter revealing counsel’s mental impressions.

Kelley v. Microsoft, No. C 07-475, 2009 WL 168258, at *2-3 (W.D. Wash. Jan. 23, 2009). Accounting consultant designated by defendant as Rule 30(b)(6) witness fell outside of both the attorney-client privilege and the work product protection. Defendant’s designation of accountant as Rule 30(b)(6) witness to interpret data that a lay person would not be able to analyze was akin to the designation of the accountant as an expert witness.

State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. v. New Horizont, Inc., 250 F.R.D. 203, 215 (E.D. Pa. 2008). Facts supporting State Farm’s allegations that were communicated to State Farm’s Rule 30(b)(6) deponent by counsel were discoverable.

Sec. Ins. Co. of Hartford v. Trustmark Ins. Co., 218 F.R.D. 29, 33-34 (D. Conn. 2003). A witness designated pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6) has an obligation to be prepared as a spokesperson for the organization he represents. The witness must be prepared to recite the facts upon which the organization has relied to support the allegations of its answer and counterclaim, even if those facts have been provided by corporate counsel. However, the witness should not be asked questions which are intended to elicit counsel’s advice, counsel’s view as to the significance or lack thereof of particular facts, or any other matter that reveals counsel’s mental impressions concerning the case.

But see:

In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 237 F.R.D. 373, 380, 384-85 (E.D. Pa. 2006). A party could not circumvent the attorney-client privilege or work product protection that applied to an attorney’s internal investigation by noticing a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition for a witness to testify about facts discovered in the course of the investigation. Although facts are discoverable, and “facts ‘discovered’ by corporate counsel during an internal investigation are inherently a part of the corporation’s knowledge,” “the process by which a corporation ‘accumulates’ its knowledge—namely, an internal investigation—affords certain protections that can preclude the disclosure of confidential communications and documents created by and recollection of counsel as part of that investigation effort.” Where a party did not show that the information was unavailable elsewhere or crucial to their case, it would be protected as core work product.

See also:

Adidas Am., Inc. v. TRB Acquisitions LLC, 324 F.R.D. 389, 399-402 (D. Or. 2017). Where a party uses privileged materials to prepare a corporate representative for a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition, there is a rebuttable presumption that privileges that would otherwise apply to the materials are waived.

Where the threat to attorney-client privilege or work product is too great, however, courts may require that other methods of discovery be used before, or in place of, depositions.

See:

Fid. Mgmt. & Research Co. v. Actuate Corp., 275 F.R.D. 63, 64-65 (D. Mass. 2011). Where it was difficult to draw the line between discoverable facts and questions sought to elicit facts protected by the work product doctrine, the court determined that the Rule 30(b)(6) witness would be further questioned by means of a deposition upon written questions.

SEC v. Rosenfeld, No. 97 Civ. 1467 (RPP), 1997 WL 576021, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 16, 1997). A Rule 30(b)(6) deposition “would undoubtedly place an undue burden on the SEC and the court, which would have to make a multitude of otherwise unnecessary decisions about issues of attorney work product and law enforcement privilege, whereas no prejudice to defendant ... has been shown if he is required to conduct discovery by” first using interrogatories and document requests, “and then taking the necessary oral discovery from the witnesses with knowledge of the facts alleged in the complaint.”

At least one court has held that where a corporate party objects to an entire category of requested testimony, the proper procedure is to seek a protective order prior to the deposition rather than instructing the witness not to answer at the deposition. See Nutmeg Ins. Co. v. Atwell, Vogel & Sterling, 120 F.R.D. 504, 508 (W.D. La. 1988) (because the corporate party could have sought a protective order or moved to quash the Rule 30(b)(6) deposition but did not, its representative had the duty to answer).

A second type of deposition presents unique difficulties for the practitioner: defending the deposition of a party’s counsel. See Bertrand C. Seller and Andrew W. Gefell, The Opposing Lawyer as Deposition Witness, 231 N.Y.L.J. 18 (2005); Michael C. Silberg, On Opposing Counsel Depositions, 224 N.Y.L.J. 5 (2000); See Steven W. Simmons, Note, Deposing Opposing Counsel Under the Federal Rules: Time for a Unified Approach, 38 WAYNE L. REV. 1959 (1992). Several courts have commented that there appears to be a trend in favor of deposing opposing counsel. These courts have almost universally condemned the trend as injecting unnecessary animosity into litigation, increasing the risk that an attorney will become a witness at trial and therefore be disqualified as counsel, and potentially chilling attorney-client communication. As a result, the courts increasingly are requiring that the parties use contention interrogatories instead of deposing counsel. See Dunkin’ Donuts Inc. v. Mary’s Donuts, Inc., 206 F.R.D. 518, 521 (S.D. Fla. 2002).

In N.F.A. Corp. v. Riverview Narrow Fabrics, Inc., 117 F.R.D. 83 (M.D.N.C. 1987), the court imposed substantial restrictions on the ability of one party to depose opposing counsel. The court in N.F.A. Corp. barred defendant from deposing plaintiff’s patent counsel. Defendant apparently noticed the deposition in retaliation for plaintiff’s deposition of defendant’s attorney, upon whose advice defendant relied. Id. at 84. The court began by explaining that, although protective orders totally prohibiting a deposition rarely should be granted absent extraordinary circumstances, a request to depose a party’s attorney constitutes a circumstance justifying departure from the normal rule. Id. The court stated that “experience teaches that countenancing unbridled depositions of attorneys constitutes an invitation to delay, disruption of the case, harassment, and perhaps disqualification of the attorney.” Id. at 85.

In response to the potential evil of free access to opposing counsel, the court held that “the mere request to depose a party’s attorney constitutes good cause for obtaining a [Rule 26(c) protective order] unless the party seeking the deposition can show both the propriety and need for the deposition.” Id. (citations omitted). In seeking to depose a party’s attorney, the movant must demonstrate that the deposition “is the only practical means available” of obtaining the desired information. Id. at 86. The movant also must show that the information sought will not invade the attorney-client privilege or the attorney’s work product.

Many courts follow the test described by the Eighth Circuit in Shelton v. American Motors Corp., 805 F.2d 1323, 1327 (8th Cir. 1986), which requires the party seeking to depose opposing counsel on matters related to the litigation to show that (1) no other means exist to obtain the information, (2) the information sought is relevant and non-privileged, and (3) the information is crucial to the preparation of the case. See, e.g., Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co. v. Home Ins. Co., 278 F.3d 621, 629 (6th Cir. 2002) (upholding district court’s denial of motion to compel deposition of opposing counsel because movant had not explained why the information was crucial to the preparation of its case); Thiessen v. Gen. Elec. Capital Corp., 267 F.3d 1095, 1112 (10th Cir. 2001) (upholding district court’s refusal to allow deposition of party’s in-house counsel because the information sought was available through other means); Nguyen v. Excel Corp., 197 F.3d 200, 208-09 (5th Cir. 1999) (applying the Shelton factors but concluding that the district court did not abuse its discretion in authorizing depositions of defense counsel); Guantanamo Cigar Co. v. Corp. Habanos, S.A., No. 08-0721 (RCL), 2009 WL 2514082, at *6-7 (D.D.C. Aug. 18, 2009) (applying the Shelton factors and quashing subpoena for defense counsel’s deposition); Asbury v. Apr. 9, 2009) (noting that “[a]lthough the Shelton criteria has not been specifically adopted by the Fourth Circuit, it has been applied by courts within this Circuit and by some other circuits” and denying defendant’s objections to the magistrate judge’s decision to quash subpoenas issued for the deposition of counsel); Fausto v. Credigy Serv. Corp., No. C 07-5658 JW (RS), 2008 WL 4793467, at *1 & n.2 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 3, 2008) (noting that there is no published Ninth Circuit decision adopting the Shelton test but that district courts within the Ninth Circuit have used it when analyzing whether to permit the deposition of counsel and finding that defendant’s arguments fail to satisfy Shelton); Pastrana v. Local 9509, Commc’ns Workers of Am., No. 06cv1779 W(AJB), 2007 WL 2900477, at *5-6 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2007) (applying Shelton to hold that deposition of counsel could be taken because information was not available elsewhere); Newell v. Wis. Teamsters Joint Council No. 39, No. 05-C-552, 2007 WL 2874938, at *6-8 (E.D. Wis. Sept. 28, 2007) (adopting Shelton and noting that although the Seventh Circuit has not addressed the issue, numerous district courts within the Circuit have applied the Shelton test, and ruling the plaintiffs could not depose counsel for defendants); SEC v. Buntrock, No. 02 C 2180, 2004 WL 1470278, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. June 29, 2004) (following Shelton and prohibiting deposition of SEC brought pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6), which effectively required investigating attorneys to submit for deposition); FTC v. The Court reasoned: “the standards set forth in Rule 26 require a flexible approach to lawyer depositions whereby the judicial officer supervising discovery takes into consideration all of the relevant facts and circumstances to determine whether the proposed deposition would entail an inappropriate burden or hardship.” Id. at 72. Factors to consider may include: “the need to depose the lawyer, the lawyer’s role in connection with the matter on which discovery is sought and in relation to the pending litigation, the risk of encountering privilege and work-product issues, and the extent of discovery already conducted.” Id.; see In re Application of Chevron Corp., 749 F. Where the attorney whose deposition is sought is not trial counsel for a party to the litigation, courts are less likely to restrict the deposition. See Premier Dealer Servs., Inc. v. In Pain Ctr. of SE Indiana, LLC v. Origin Healthcare Solutions, LLC, No. 13-cv-133-RLY-DKL, 2015 WL 3631692, at *1-3 (S.D. Ind. June 10, 2015), for example, plaintiffs moved to depose defendant's former general counsel, Vandenberg, who had submitted a declaration stating that he did not provide business or financial advice to defendant's personnel and staff. Despite defendant's argument that the Shelton doctrine precluded the deposition, the court allowed the deposition to proceed. Critical to the court's decision was the fact that there was a basis in the record to support plaintiffs' assertion that Vandenberg had provided non-legal advice to defendant. While noting that there is a split among courts on the application of the Shelton doctrine, the court found the line of decisions rejecting the doctrine to be more persuasive, and held that plaintiffs could depose Vandenberg, and that defendant would need to invoke any privileges or immunities to specific questions. The court cautioned, however, that it would be vigilant in utilizing available sanctions if it became apparent that Vandenberg had so little relevant, non-privileged information that the deposition was a waste of time and resources. See also Armada (Singapore) Pte. The court also found that "the Shelton rule [was] unnecessary given the rarity of attorney depositions in this District and given the Court's ability to sanction counsel for proceeding with a frivolous deposition." The court denied defendants' motion to compel deposition testimony of plaintiffs' counsel, however, after noting that interrogatories would be less expensive and less burdensome.*

Kaiser v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 161 F.R.D. 378, 381-82 (D. Ind. 1994). The concerns raised by depositions of opposing counsel do not justify a court "deviating from the framework provided in the rules for raising and resolving such concerns." Because the court did not believe that depositions of counsel "are so rarely justified or so great a phenomenon as to warrant imposing a stricter standard for their allowance," it held there was "no basis for adopting a general presumption that relevant information which a party seeks from his opponent's counsel during a deposition is overwhelmingly likely to be privileged or immune from discovery."

Bos. Edison Co. v. United States, 75 Fed. Cl. 557, 563 (Fed. Cl. 2007). The court distinguished Shelton and permitted deposition of trial counsel where the focus of the deposition would be counsel's non-legal responsibilities as a consultant in the transaction underlying the litigation and the government was not seeking to discover Boston Edison's litigation strategy or counsel's mental impressions of that strategy.

In contrast, the Sixth Circuit affirmed a trial court's order blocking the deposition of in-house counsel. In Alomari v. Ohio Dep't of Public Safety, 626 F. App'x 558, 569-70 (6th Cir. 2015), the plaintiff in an employment discrimination action against his former employer sought the deposition of defendant's in-house counsel, who had met with plaintiff to discuss his employment history and also provided legal advice to defendant, including regarding how to respond to media inquiries. The trial court applied the Shelton doctrine to in-house counsel and blocked the deposition. Id. at 570. The Sixth Circuit affirmed, holding that the meeting between in-house counsel and plaintiff was privileged, because plaintiff was aware that he was being interviewed so that in-house counsel could provide legal advice to defendant, and that defendant's communications with in-house counsel regarding how to respond to media inquiries were privileged. Id. at 570-73. The Sixth Circuit also affirmed the trial court's application of the Shelton doctrine to in-house counsel, noting that although in-house counsel was not litigation counsel of record, in-house counsel had assisted with the investigation at a time when litigation was contemplated and had assisted with developing litigation strategy. Id. at 573-74.

Designating an attorney as a Rule 30(b)(6) witness is rife with danger. Although courts generally hold that the mere designation of an attorney pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6), without more, does not waive any privilege, the witness may waive privilege by straying into privileged areas. See, e.g., In re Pioneer Hi-Bred Int'l, Inc., 238 F.3d 1370, 1375 (Fed. Cir. 2001) ("Counsel is often a fact witness with respect to various events, and may testify on deposition by the opposing party as to such matters without waiver."); Motley v. Marathon Oil Co., 71 F.3d 1547, 1552 (10th Cir. 1995) (designating a lawyer as a Rule 30(b)(6) witness "is a wholly insufficient ground to hold that [the party] waived its attorney-client privilege"); Natural Res. Dec. 20, 2010) (finding that although the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine may be waived in the proper case, there was no basis to conclude that these privileges were waived merely because the plaintiff designated one of its staff attorneys as a Rule 30(b)(6) deponent); Colonial Gas Co. v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co., 139 F.R.D. 269, 273 (D. Mass. 1991) (refusing to find an automatic and general waiver by virtue of designating an attorney pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6)); see also L.S.S. C. DEPOSITION PREPARATION

Preparing a witness for his or her deposition can be a particularly perilous time for attorney-client privileged communications and attorney work product. For example, protection may be waived if a corporate officer who serves as in-house counsel conducts the preparation without adequately separating her legal role from her business role; if counsel reveals legal strategy to a witness who may not be a privileged party, such as a former employee of the client; or if attorney work product or privileged communications are used to refresh the witness's recollection. See generally Waiving The Attorney-Client Privilege, § I.G, and Waiver Of Work Product Protection, § III.E, supra. Waiver as to one small aspect of privileged communications may result in a broad opportunity for opposing counsel to inquire into privileged areas during a deposition. See generally The Extent Of Waiver, § I.G.6, supra.

Attorneys who represent clients during depositions must remember that any discussions with the client during the deposition that do not relate to the assertion of a privilege are not privileged. Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 30(c), depositions are to be conducted in the same manner as trial examination. As with trial testimony, off-the-record discussions between counsel and the deponent regarding matters other than privilege are not privileged and may be discovered by the opposing party. E.g., Ngai v. Old Navy, Civil Action No. 07-5653 (KSH)(PS), 2009 WL 2391282, at *4-5 (D.N.J. July 31, 2009) (holding that text messages sent between a deponent and her attorney during a video deposition were not protected by the attorney-client privilege, although text messages exchanged before the deposition began remained privileged).

In many cases it may be necessary to prepare an outside corporate attorney or in-house attorney to testify regarding their communications with the corporate client. As discussed above, communications with an attorney are privileged only if the attorney is acting in her official capacity as a lawyer. See Privilege Applies Only To Communications Made For The Purpose Of Securing Legal Advice, § I.D, supra. When an attorney has acted primarily as a businessperson, the communications are not privileged. Therefore, deposition preparation should include discussing the nature of the attorney's work and whether she used her legal skills and training at relevant times. Otherwise, the deponent may be caught off guard and inadvertently fail to provide an otherwise available basis for privilege.

Preparing a client's former employees to testify may also present potential pitfalls. In Peralta v. Cendant Corp., 190 F.R.D. 38, 40 (D. Conn. 1999) (emphasis in original), an employment discrimination case, the court rejected the "wholesale application of the Upjohn principles to former employees as if they were no different than current employees" because it was "not justified by the underlying reasoning of Upjohn." Although the court noted that courts have applied the attorney-client privilege to communications with former employees (see generally Former Employees Of Organizational Clients, § I.B.1.b(4), supra), it distinguished certain communications from others. Any privileged information obtained by the witness during her employment remained privileged upon termination of employment, and counsel's communications with the witness during deposition preparation were privileged if their purpose was to learn facts that the witness became aware of during her employment. Id. at 41. But to the extent that the deposition preparation went beyond the witness's knowledge of events developed during her employment, those communications would not be protected by the attorney-client privilege. For example, if counsel informed the witness of facts developed during litigation, such as testimony of other witnesses, of which the former employee would not have had prior or independent knowledge, such communications would not be privileged. Id. at 41-42. The court also held, however, that the work product protection would cover conclusions or opinions that counsel communicated to the witness, because disclosure of work product to non-adverse third parties does not waive the protection. Id. at 42.

City of New York v. Coastal Oil N.Y., Inc., No. 96 Civ. 8667 (RPP), 2000 WL 145748, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 7, 2000). Attorney-client privilege does not apply to communications between in-house corporate counsel and a corporate subsidiary's former employee during deposition preparation where in-house counsel was not conducting an investigation and the former employee did not regard in-house counsel as his attorneys. Because the Second Circuit had not ruled in the area, the court limited questioning to in-house counsel's activities that aided the witness in preparing to be deposed and prohibited questioning into conversations that were not related to the witness's upcoming testimony or testimony of other potential witnesses in the case.

In the context of a deposition, the principal hazard regarding work product is waiving work product protections by showing work product to a witness during deposition preparation or allowing the deponent to review work product during the deposition. As discussed in detail above, the work product protection may be waived by using protected documents for the purpose of refreshing the recollection of a witness. See Use Of Documents By Witnesses And Experts, § III.E.9, supra. However, the waiver may be limited solely to the portions of material that were actually used to refresh recollection. See, e.g., Mattel, Inc. v. MGA Entm't, Inc., No. CV 04-9049 DOC (RNBx), 2010 WL 3705782, at *5 (C.D. Cal. Md. 1998) (disclosure under Federal Rule of Evidence 612 "is limited only to those writings which may fairly be said in part to have an impact upon the testimony of the witness"); S & A Painting Co. v. McClatchy, 116 F.R.D. 438, 454 (D. Nev. 1987) (where court ordered deponent to review attorney work product to refresh her recollection for deposition, the work product protection would not be waived pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 612).

A related risk involves the potential disclosure of notes taken by a party or client during one deposition that are intended to be used to prepare for another deposition. In Schwarz & Schwarz of Virginia, LLC v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, Civil Action No. 6:07cv042, 2009 WL 1913234, at *2 (W.D. Va. July 1, 2009), the court rejected the defendant insurers' argument that, because the representative did not share the notes with counsel, they were not protected by the work product doctrine and stated that, because the notes were taken during the litigation process by a party representative, they were "plainly subject to work product protection.” The insurers had not shown substantial need for the representative’s notes, as they were able to depose the corporate party representative himself and actually did so.

It is important that the practitioner be aware of possible waiver before preparing a witness to testify. There may be cases in which the risk of waiver of some work product is outweighed by the benefit of refreshing the witness’s recollection. There are, however, certain precautions that can be employed to avoid waiver in most cases:

- Do not show a witness notebooks or other compilations of documents that have been assembled by counsel. Using only the specific non-work product documents contained in the compilations that are relevant to the witness’s testimony will serve the purpose of preparation, but will not waive the protection of the attorney’s organization and related thought processes.
- Use the non-work product underlying a compilation or analysis instead of the resulting work product whenever possible.
- Instruct the witness not to bring notes or other documents to the deposition, unless the documents are otherwise called for by a document request or court order.

VI. INTERNAL INVESTIGATIONS

It is common for corporations to conduct internal investigations regarding matters that come to the attention of management. Investigations may involve seemingly mundane matters, such as rumors about employee inefficiency or petty wrongdoing, or obviously serious matters, such as alleged criminal misconduct. Corporations may delegate the task of conducting such investigations to outside counsel, to in-house counsel, or to non-legal personnel. Often, the materials assembled and created during an investigation are sought by government subpoena or civil document request.

Whether communications and documents relating to an investigation will be discoverable will depend on the same issues that are discussed throughout this outline relating to the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine. Essentially, the court will want to know: (1) whether the investigation was conducted primarily or solely for the purpose of rendering legal advice or, instead, was conducted largely for business reasons; (2) whether the investigation was conducted by counsel or by non-legal personnel; and (3) whether the investigation was conducted in anticipation of imminent litigation or, instead, as a routine matter in response to the ever-present concern about the possibility of litigation. The less routine and more “special” the internal investigation, the more likely it is that a court will protect materials relating to the investigation. For a general discussion of protecting privilege in internal investigations, see THE GENERAL COUNSEL’S GUIDE TO GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATIONS, DAVID M. GREENWALD, Ch. 15, “Maximizing The Protections Provided By The Attorney-Client Privilege And The Work Product Doctrine” (GICLI 2018). See also the GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATIONS REFERENCE MODEL (GICLI 2019), attached as Appendix B.

A. THE COURTS' ANALYSIS OF ASSERTIONS OF PRIVILEGE OVER INVESTIGATIVE MATERIALS

Corporations may protect the products of internal investigations through both the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine. Each presents its own benefits and its own challenges. The attorney-client privilege provides the best protection, but it is also more difficult to establish. As discussed above, once established, the attorney-client privilege is almost absolute. Barring waiver or the crime-fraud exception, a communication deemed privileged is simply off-limits in discovery. However, establishing the privilege is difficult in the context of an internal investigation. There must be communications with counsel that are intended to secure or communicate legal advice and that are intended to be and remain privileged. As discussed below, each of these elements presents difficulties in internal investigations. In addition, it is far easier to waive the attorney-client privilege than work product protection.

The products of internal investigations are more often protected by the work product doctrine. The protection provided is far less absolute than the attorney-client privilege, but it is easier to establish that investigative materials are work product, and waiver is more difficult to prove. Ordinary work product, such as verbatim or near verbatim witness statements of company employees, is discoverable upon a showing of substantial need and undue hardship by an opposing party. As discussed below, many courts do not require very substantial need or very much hardship to allow a party to discover ordinary work product, particularly when the work product is primarily a recitation of facts. Opinion work product, as discussed above, enjoys far more protection, even “absolute” protection in some jurisdictions.

In order to maximize the chance that internal investigative materials will not be discovered in litigation, it is important that a company attempt to place the materials under both umbrellas.

B. THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

Admiral Insurance Co. v. U.S. District Court for the District of Arizona, 881 F.2d 1486 (9th Cir. 1989), presents an example of a corporation successfully conducting an internal investigation and prevailing in its assertion of attorney-client privilege over interviews conducted with corporate employees. In anticipation of litigation regarding certain real estate investment transactions, Admiral hired outside counsel. Id. at 1488. Shortly thereafter, a securities fraud action was filed against it, and Admiral’s senior management directed outside counsel to interview the two Admiral officers with the most knowledge regarding the transactions. Id. at 1488-89. At the beginning of the interviews, which a stenographer transcribed, counsel advised the employees that Admiral had retained outside counsel to investigate the circumstances of the transactions for the purpose of rendering legal advice to their employer regarding its potential interests and liabilities; that counsel represented Admiral and not the employees personally; that Admiral would claim attorney-client privilege and work product protection with respect to the interviews; that the two officers were selected for interviews because they knew the most about the transactions at issue in the lawsuit; and that the employees should treat the interviews as confidential communications. Id. at 1489. Both employees resigned shortly after their interviews. Id.

When the plaintiffs noticed the two officers' depositions, both officers stated that they would invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination if they were deposed. Id. Plaintiffs subsequently served a subpoena duces tecum on Admiral for production of the officers' statements, which Admiral moved to quash. Id. In response to the motion to quash, plaintiffs asserted that the documents were discoverable because plaintiffs were unable to obtain the information in the statements from any other source. Id. The district court denied Admiral's motion and held that Admiral must produce the statements if the witnesses refused to testify at their depositions. Id.

A Ninth Circuit panel, however, granted the petition for a writ of mandamus to vacate the part of the district court's order compelling production of one of the officer's statements. Id. at 1495. Applying Upjohn, the court held that the communications between counsel and the corporate employees were privileged because: (1) counsel was retained in anticipation of litigation; (2) the officers were the management-level employees with the most knowledge about the transactions; (3) Admiral instructed the officers to give the statements; (4) the information that the officers provided related directly to the officers' roles in the transactions and therefore was within the scope of their corporate duties; and (5) the officers knew that the purpose of the interviews was for counsel to provide Admiral with legal advice regarding the litigation. Id. at 1492-93. "These circumstances fall squarely within Upjohn." Id. at 1493; see also Yurick v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 201 F.R.D. 465, 468 (D. Ariz. 2001) (applying Admiral criteria); Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Super. Court, 219 P.3d 736, 766 (Cal. 2009) (holding that an opinion letter prepared by outside counsel that contained employee interview statements was privileged, in part, because counsel was acting in a legal capacity when she interviewed the employees); Shew v. Freedom of Info. Comm'n, 714 A.2d 664, 670-71 (Conn. 1998) (concluding that employee interviews conducted by outside counsel are privileged when attorney acts in legal capacity and not as mere investigator, employees are currently employed by entity, and the interviews relate to the requested legal advice and are made in confidence). The Admiral court directly rejected an "unavailability" exception to the attorney-client privilege, which would apply when privileged materials are not available from any unprivileged source. 881 F.2d at 1494-95.

The Admiral case demonstrates the importance of having internal investigation interviews conducted by counsel. As discussed below, although the interviews may have qualified as work product, there is a good chance that the court would have found both substantial need and undue hardship based on the witnesses' refusal to submit to discovery and would have compelled production of the interview transcripts.

In contrast to Admiral, Claude P. Bamberger International, Inc. v. Rohm & Haas Co., No. Civ. 96-1041(WGB), 1997 WL 33762249 (D.N.J. Dec. 29, 1997), is an example of an internal investigation where the attorney-client privilege was not established because it did not appear to the court that investigative materials had been created for the primary purpose of obtaining legal advice. Rohm & Haas attempted to withhold from production – on the grounds of attorney-client privilege and work product protection – a memorandum containing the results from an in-house investigation conducted by non-attorney Davis at the request of in-house counsel Stroebel. Id. at *1-2. Stroebel asserted to the court that he had reviewed and approved the memo before circulation and that the purpose of the memo was to assist the legal department in providing management with legal advice. Id. at *1. Rohm & Haas refused to

The district court affirmed the magistrate judge's earlier ruling that the memo fell outside the attorney-client privilege because it did not appear to have been created for the primary purpose of obtaining legal advice. Id. at *4. (The court also affirmed that the documents were not protected by the work product doctrine. Id. at *5.) The court stated in support of its position that a non-attorney conducted the investigation; that Davis sent the memo to a non-attorney and only copied in-house counsel on the document; and that the memo was "the end result of a business investigation into the justifications for a business decision, not a tool to be used by Stroebel or the legal department to help render legal advice." Id. at *3. The court cited Hercules, Inc. v. Exxon Corp., 434 F. Supp. 136, 147 (D. Del. 1977), for the following principles:

If the primary purpose of a communication is to solicit or render advice on non-legal matters, the communication is not within the scope of the attorney-client privilege. Only if the attorney is "acting as a lawyer" giving advice with respect to the legal implications of a proposed course of conduct may the privilege be properly invoked. In addition, if a communication is made primarily for the purpose of soliciting legal advice, an incidental request for business advice does not vitiate the attorney-client privilege.

Claude P. Bamberger Int'l, 1997 WL 33762249, at *2. See also Wierciszewski v. Granite City Ill. Hosp. Co., LLC, No. 11-cv-120-GPM-SCW, 2011 WL 5374114, at *1-2 (S.D. Ill. Nov 7, 2011) (carbon copying counsel was insufficient to sustain privilege over communications between employees because counsel was not directing the investigation and communications were merely making counsel aware of situation, not seeking legal advice); cf. In re Buspirone Antitrust Litig., 211 F.R.D. 249, 253 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) ("[T]he fact that a request to counsel was sent simultaneously to non-legal personnel should not by itself dictate the conclusion that the document was not prepared for the purpose of obtaining legal advice.").

Problems asserting attorney-client privilege may also arise in internal investigations if a non-attorney interviewer fails to disclose to employees that the purpose of the investigation is to assist company counsel to provide legal advice. See, e.g., Davine v. Golub Corp., No. 3:14-30136-MGM, 2017 WL 517749, at *7-8 (D. Mass. Feb. 8, 2017) (denying attorney-client privilege or work-product protection to non-legal consultant's report after consultant interviewed employees without stating that information was being gathered in order to provide legal advice to the general counsel).

The Claude P. Bamberger International case demonstrates the importance of: (1) having counsel conduct investigations directly; (2) limiting the focus of the investigation to providing legal advice; (3) limiting the distribution of investigative materials to those with a need to know; and, (4) weaving impressions, opinions, and strategies into memoranda so that it is clear that the purpose of the investigation is to obtain legal advice.

1. A Legal Purpose

Unlike the work product protection, which most courts allow even if a substantial portion of the document relates to business matters, the attorney-client privilege does not exist unless the predominant intention of the party is to obtain legal advice or services. See Diversified Indus., Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596, 603 (8th Cir. 1977) (report prepared by outside counsel based on interviews with corporate employees not protected by attorney-client privilege because counsel “was employed solely for the purpose of making an investigation of facts and to make business recommendations with respect to the future conduct of Diversified”; the work done by counsel could just as easily have been performed by non-lawyers).

For this reason, an engagement letter that expressly states that outside counsel performing the investigation are providing legal advice in connection with the representation may be key to preserving the privilege. See Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist. 100, 600 F.3d 612, 619-20 (7th Cir. 2010) (reversing order to disclose privileged communications from an investigation into sexual abuse at a school district where the engagement letter between the school district and the law firm conducting the investigation stated that the firm was retained to provide legal services). Whether the predominant intention of the party is to obtain legal advice is a fact-intensive inquiry, and courts will demand a high level of detail from the party. In re Aqua Dots Prods. Liab. Litig., 270 F.R.D. 322, 327-28 (N.D. Ill. 2010).

Investigations Found to be Privileged:

In re Kellogg Brown & Root, Inc., 756 F.3d 754, 757-60 (D.C. Cir. 2014). Court granted petition for writ of mandamus, holding broadly that internal investigations conducted for a significant legal purpose are privileged even where there are also significant business purposes for the investigation. The appellate court also held that (1) the investigation was conducted entirely by non-lawyers; (2) the report did not indicate that it was prepared for a legal purpose; (3) witnesses interviewed by the non-lawyers did not receive Upjohn warnings or expressly informed that the purpose of the interviews was for a legal purpose; and (4) the investigation would have been conducted whether or not company sought legal advice. On appeal, the D.C. Circuit held that (1) a lawyer’s status as in-house counsel does not “dilute” the privilege, provided counsel was acting in a legal capacity; (2) non-lawyers who conduct interviews at the direction of counsel act as agents of counsel and such interviews are “routinely protected by the attorney-client privilege”; (3) Upjohn does not require a company to use “magic words” in order to gain the benefit of the privilege for an internal investigation; and (4) obtaining legal advice need not be the “sole purpose” of the investigation as long as “a primary purpose” of the investigation is to obtain or provide legal advice.

United States v. Massachusetts Gen. Hosp., Inc., 475 F.Supp.3d 45, 63-64 (D. Mass. 2020). Counsel’s investigation conducted in response to tip alleging hospital improperly permitted concurrent surgeries was for purpose of providing legal advice.

Pearson v. Arizona, No. CV-20-00237-PHX-MTL, 2020 WL 5544373, at *2 (D. Ariz. Sept. 16, 2020). Internal investigative report drafted by a regional investigator at the direction of the general counsel to enable general counsel to provide legal advice regarding employment dispute was privileged.

Martinez v. Kleinfeld Bridal Corp., 16-CV-348 (RA) (JLC), 2017 WL 2859941, at*2 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 2017). Notes were privileged where they contained facts and information about a workplace incident and memorialized the “giving of information to the lawyer to enable him to give sound and informed advice.”

In re financialright GmbH, 17-mc-105 (DAB), 2017 WL 2879696, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. June 23, 2017). Stating that “[d]espite the narrow construction of the attorney-client privilege, it may also encompass fact investigations” and a consideration for protecting fact finding is “whether the predominant purpose of the communication is to render or solicit legal advice.”

Craig v. Rite Aid Corp., No. 4:08-CV-2317, 2012 WL 426275, at *6-8 (M.D. Pa. Feb. 9, 2012). Court rejected in-house counsel’s assertion that an entire internal review was legal in nature and assessed the withheld documents on an individualized basis to determine whether in-house counsel made the communications for a legal purpose.

Cline v. Advanced Med. Optics, Inc., No. 2:08-CV-62, 2009 WL 585507 (E.D. Tex. Mar. 6, 2009). Defendant’s “root cause” analysis conducted at direction of in-house counsel following product recall was protected by both attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine.

Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Super. Court, 219 P.3d 736 (Cal. 2009). Where outside counsel conducted factual investigation and prepared opinion letter, the entire opinion letter was privileged. The California Supreme Court held that the discovery referee and trial court had erred by redacting counsel’s legal advice and directing that factual portions of the letter be produced.

Lawrence E. Jaffe Pension Plan v. Household Int’l, Inc., 244 F.R.D. 412, 426-28 (N.D. Ill. 2006). All communications and documents related to law firm’s internal investigation were privileged where corporation’s audit committee retained law firm to investigate the quantitative and qualitative aspects of restructuring policies and to provide legal advice as to whether corporation should take correction action.

Amco Ins. Co. v. Madera Quality Nut LLC, No. 1:04-cv-06456-SMS, 2006 WL 931437, at *8-9 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 11, 2006). Communications between company employees to in-house counsel and counsel’s agents were privileged communications as a part of an internal investigation, the dominant purpose of which was to obtain factual information in order to give legal advice.

Picard Chem. Inc. Profit Sharing Plan v. Perrigo Co., 951 F. Supp. 679, 685-86 (W.D. Mich. 1996). Investigation report commissioned by board of directors and conducted by disinterested independent director and outside counsel in response to shareholder demand held privileged despite mixture of legal and business considerations, because the report contained a legal analysis of the securities fraud claims and discussed legal theories; “legal and business considerations may frequently be inextricably intertwined[.] The mere fact that business considerations are weighed in the rendering of legal advice does not vitiate the attorney-client privilege.”

University of Texas System v. Franklin Center for Government and Public Integrity-- S.W.3d --, 2023 WL 4278243, at*4 (Tex. June 30, 2023). Applying the “a” significant purpose test, the court held that an investigation conducted by a non-legal third party investigator (Kroll) was privileged where the engagement letter provided: (1) the investigation was to be conducted under the direction of the university’s general counsel; (2) the investigator’s final report and all notices and communications must be submitted to the general counsel; and (3) the consultant was required to maintain confidentiality of investigatory materials unless otherwise authorized by the university. The court rejected an argument that privilege did not apply because the engagement letter did not explicitly mention legal advice or legal services. “[T]he key factor in determining whether a party falls with the definition of a ‘lawyers’ representative’ is not the formalities of the contract but rather the substance of the work the representative was hired to perform and its relation to the provision of legal advice. . . we must look beyond the surface language used in the contract and instead evaluate the actual scope of Kroll’s work.”

State ex rel. Toledo Blade Co. v. Toledo-Lucas Cnty. Port Auth., 905 N.E.2d 1221 (Ohio 2009). Ohio Supreme Court held that outside counsel’s investigation report was privileged because it was “related to the rendition of legal services.”

Investigations Found not to be Privileged:

Elsasser v. Devon Energy Production Company, Case No. 21-CV-00182-NDF, 2022 WL 17488164, at *3 (D. Wyo. Dec. 7, 2022). Internal procedures provided that, in response to a serious incident involving injury or fatality that was likely to lead to litigation, a “privileged investigation” was to be led by the legal department. Here, in-house counsel sent an email to the company’s Health and Safety department requesting assistance in conducting a privileged investigation. A team of non-lawyers conducted an investigation, which included root cause analysis and suggested corrective actions. The team provided some information to in-house counsel, but no one recalled the participation of any attorney. Finding that the investigation was conducted for a business purpose, and not to obtain legal advice, the court held that a PowerPoint presentation reflecting the investigation’s findings and recommended corrective actions was not privileged.

Wengui v. Clark Hill PLC, 338 F.R.D. 7, 13-14 (D.D.C. 2021). Cyber breach report prepared by third party consultant engaged by outside counsel not privilege where the “true objective” was obtaining consultant’s expertise in cybersecurity for business purposes not to assist counsel to provide legal advice.”

Pearlstein v. BlackBerry Limited, 13-CV-07060 (CM) (KHP), 2019 WL 1259382, at 13-15 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 19, 2019). Communications and documents from investigation led by chief legal officer were not privileged where investigation related to sales and return rates and was primarily for the business purpose of refuting negative market research report.

Wultz v. Bank of China Ltd., 304 F.R.D. 384, 392-93 (S.D.N.Y. 2015). Where a company’s internal investigation was conducted by non-lawyers, without the direction or supervision of an attorney, the investigation materials were not protected by the attorney-client privilege, even if that company’s intention was to send the materials to outside counsel at some future date.

In re General Motors LLC Ignition Switch Litig., 80 F.Supp.3d 521, 529-31 (S.D.N.Y. 2015). Internal investigation materials are protected where a primary purpose of the investigation is legal in nature; the primary purpose test does not require a showing that obtaining or providing legal advice is the sole purpose of an internal investigation or that the communications at issue “would not have been made ‘but for’ the fact that legal advice was sought.”

Koumoulis v. Indep. Fin. Mktg. Grp., Inc., 295 F.R.D. 28, 38, 44-46 (E.D.N.Y. 2013). Communications of outside counsel who supervised and directed an internal investigation as an adjunct member of the human resources team were not privileged where the predominant purpose was to provide human resources, or business advice, not legal advice.

U.S. v. ISS Marine Services, Inc., 905 F.Supp.2d 121, 127-132 (D.D.C. 2012). Defendant failed to show audit report was prepared for the primary purpose of seeking legal advice where there was a clear business motivation for the report and counsel’s involvement was minimal.

Lewis v. Wells Fargo & Co., 266 F.R.D. 433, 441-43 (N.D. Cal. 2010). Interview notes and a questionnaire completed by employees to determine compliance with the Fair Labor Standards Act were not privileged. “The [company’s] fatal flaw [] was that it did not clarify to the employees completing the questionnaire that it needed the information to obtain legal advice.” The questionnaire indicated that it was being administered as part of a routine review, not to seek legal advice, and it did not contain a confidentiality warning.

Marceau v. Int’l Bhd. of Elec. Workers Local 1269, 246 F.R.D. 610 (D. Ariz. 2007). Internal investigation report conducted by outside counsel, detailing manipulation of sales performance calculations to favor union agents, was undertaken for a business, not legal, purpose and thus not covered by the attorney-client or work product privileges.

Navigant Consulting, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 220 F.R.D. 467, 476 (N.D. Tex. 2004). Where attorney was retained primarily as an investigator, communications were held to be made for a business rather than legal purpose and were not privileged.

In re Syncor ERISA Litig., 229 F.R.D. 636, 645 (C.D. Cal. 2005). Documents prepared during internal investigation were created with intent to disclose to government and thus were not privileged.

Cf.:

City of Roseville Employees' Retirement System v. Apple Inc., Case No. 19-cv-02033-YGR (JCS), 2022 WL 3083000, at *10 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 3, 2022). Court concludes that the court in In Re Grand Jury, 23 F.4th 1088 (9th Cir. 2021) did not intend to announce a bright-line rule that advice involving regulatory compliance is, per se, business advice but simply that it may be business or legal advice under the same common law principles that govern tax advice. The court rejects the argument that communications that were sent to an entire committee email group were primarily for the purpose of seeking legal advice merely because of the regulatory requirements that were applicable or the fact that in-house counsel was a member of the committee.

Greer v. County of San Diego, 634 F.Supp.3d 911, 920 (S.D. Cal. 2022). Merely adding an attorney to a review board does not make its work privileged. “[R]espondent’s claim to privilege appears to be premised on a gimmick: exclude counsel from conducting the internal investigation but retain them in a watered-down capacity to ‘consult’ on the investigation in order to cloak the investigation with privilege. Unfortunately for the respondent, this sort of ‘consultation lite’ does not qualify the Audit Report for the protections of the attorney-client privilege,” quoting United States v. ISS Marine Servs., Inc., 905 F.Supp.2d 121, 129-30 (D.D.C. 2012).

Miss. Pub. Emp. Ret. Sys. v. Bos. Scientific Corp., 649 F.3d 5, 30 (1st Cir. 2011). Communications between an investigation working group and counsel regarding how to prevent a situation from happening again were nevertheless directly related to providing legal advice to management and therefore within the scope of the attorney-client privilege.

2. Only Communications Protected

Although the attorney-client privilege will protect a communication with counsel, it will not protect the facts communicated. “Facts gathered by counsel in the course of investigating a claim or preparing for trial are not privileged and must be divulged if requested in the course of proper discovery.” Andritz Sprout-Bauer, Inc. v. Beazer E., Inc., 174 F.R.D. 609, 632 (M.D. Pa. 1997) (citations omitted). “Opposing counsel is entitled to obtain through discovery the names of witnesses, facts underlying the cause of action, technical data, the results of studies, investigations and testing to be used at trial, and other factual information.” Id. (citation omitted). Including such facts in documents prepared by, or circulated to, counsel does not make the facts privileged. Id. The court in Andritz stated in dicta: “To the extent that purely factual material can be extracted from privileged documents without divulging privileged communications, such information is obtainable.” Id. at 633. See also Nelson v. NAV-RENO-GS, LLC, No. 3:12-CV-0165-LRH (VPC), 2013 WL 2475862, at *4 (D. Nev. June 7, 2013) (notes prepared by non-attorney human resources personnel that captured what employees stated in their interviews during an internal investigation were not protected by the attorney-client privilege); Pfizer Inc. v. Ranbaxy Labs. Ltd., No. 03-209-JJF, 2004 WL 2323135, at *1 (D. Del. Oct. 7, 2004); but note Lawrence E. Jaffe Pension Plan v. Household Int'l, Inc., 244 F.R.D. 412, 430 (N.D. Ill. 2006) (fact that defendants produced strictly factual documents from counsel engaged to perform internal investigation did not constitute waiver of privilege over all documents produced by counsel in connection with investigation); Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Super. Court, 219 P.3d 736, 743 (Cal. 2009) (attorney-client privilege protected entire opinion letter from outside counsel to corporate client even though the letter contained factual information that counsel learned during employee interviews it conducted during an internal investigation in order to provide legal advice).

As a result, although a witness may properly be instructed not to testify regarding what he told the company's attorney, he will be required to testify about factual information that he knows. See, e.g., Upjohn v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 395-96 (1981). However, where counsel conducts an internal investigation and prepares a report, the entire report may be deemed privileged unless the factual aspects of the report are easily segregated from counsel's legal work and thinking. Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist. 100, 600 F.3d 612, 620 (7th Cir. 2010) (when a law firm is hired to provide legal services, its internal investigation of the factual circumstances surrounding the allegations of illegal activity is protected by the attorney-client privilege); United States v. Rowe, 96 F.3d 1294, 1297 (9th Cir. 1996) (determining that communications were privileged between law firm partner and the two associates who engaged in fact-finding activities in internal investigation of another partner's handling of client funds); SEC v. Brady, 238 F.R.D. 429, 439 (N.D. Tex. 2006) (where outside counsel's report was "laced with underlying facts, legal opinions, and business advice," and "was the result of many . . . officer and director interviews" with counsel, report was protected attorney-client communication prior to waiver caused by disclosure). But see Abel v. Merrill Lynch & Co., No. 91 Civ. 6261 (RPP), 1993 WL 33348, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 4, 1993) (in employment disparate impact case, demographic analysis prepared for in-house counsel not privileged, because the underlying facts to the analysis are not privileged and the corporation chose to destroy the underlying data; the communication with counsel was the only remaining form in which the factual data was available).

3. Privilege May Extend to Consultants

The attorney-client privilege may protect not only communications between the attorney and client, but also between the attorney and consultants hired by the attorney to enable the attorney to render legal advice.

See:

Geller v. N. Shore Long Island Jewish Health Sys., No. CV 10-170(ADS)(ETB), 2011 WL 5507572, at *2-4 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 9, 2011). Investigative documents prepared by non-attorney compliance officer were subject to attorney-client privilege from the date that outside counsel was retained.

Davis v. City of Seattle, No. C06-1659Z, 2007 WL 4166154, at *4 (W.D. Wash. Nov. 20, 2007). Attorney-client privilege precluded outside counsel, who was hired by the City's legal department to investigate employee misconduct, from disclosing communications she had with the City's legal department before she issued her final investigation report, because the communications were solely for the purpose of allowing the legal department to formulate legal advice for the City.

Carter v. Cornell Univ., 173 F.R.D. 92, 94 (S.D.N.Y. 1997). Associate dean of human resources who conducted interviews at “request of counsel and for the exclusive use of counsel in rendering legal representation” was attorney’s representative for privilege purposes.

In re Hardwood P-G, Inc., 403 B.R. 445, 458-59 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2009). Communications to third-party professionals hired by a bankruptcy trustee for the purpose of facilitating attorney-client communications were privileged because the Bankruptcy Code requires such professionals to be hired by the bankruptcy estate, not the estate’s attorney.

First Fed. Savs. Bank v. United States, 55 Fed. Cl. 263, 268-69 (Fed. Cl. 2003). Privilege applied to unredacted board minutes when accounting firm investigated complicated accounting issues such that accounting firm’s role was related to rendering legal advice but did not apply to the unredacted board minutes accounting firm used for audits.

But see:

Ward v. Equilon Enters., LLC, No. C 09-4565 RS, 2011 WL 2746645, at *1-3 (N.D. Cal. July 13, 2011). Attorney-client privilege did not exist between company and independent contractor who was legally required to be part of the root-cause analysis investigation team because communications with contractor were not necessary for company to obtain legal advice.

Allied Irish Banks, PLC v. Bank of Am., 240 F.R.D. 96 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). Where bank hired consultant to perform an investigation, and consultant in turn hired law firm, there was no privilege created between the law firm and bank because there was no evidence that the law firm actually provided legal advice to the bank, nor was there any evidence that the investigation was driven by the impending litigation.

The court in U.S. Postal Service v. Phelps Dodge Refining Corp., 852 F. Supp. 156 (E.D.N.Y. 1994) considered communications with a third party environmental consultant. The company hired outside environmental consultants to formulate a remediation plan and to oversee remedial work. Id. at 161. The court held that the consultants’ communications with Phelps’ in-house counsel were not privileged because the consultants had not been hired for the purpose of analyzing the client’s data and putting it in a form which would enable counsel to provide legal advice. Id. Instead, the consultants had undertaken their own “factual and scientific” study – “information that did not come through client confidences.” Id. at 162. The court stated: “Such underlying factual data can never be protected by the attorney-client privilege and neither can the resulting opinions and recommendations. There are few, if any, conceivable circumstances where a scientist or engineer employed to gather data should be considered an agent within the scope of the privilege since the information collected will generally be factual, obtained from sources other than the client.” Id.

Consultant report regarding firm’s compliance with FDA regulations was privileged “only to the extent that the findings in the report [were] derived from confidential communications made by corporate employees . . . factual findings based on a view of conditions, drawings, etc.” were not privileged.

Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers Local 212 v. Am. Laundry Mach., Inc., No. 1:07-CV-324, 2009 WL 81114, at *2-3 (S.D. Ohio Jan. 9, 2009). Court applied Phelps and compelled disclosure of environmental advice and technical data.

In re Grand Jury Matter, 147 F.R.D. 82, 85-86 (E.D. Pa. 1992). Documents compiled by expert environmental consultant were not privileged because they constituted part of the expert's environmental services and were not for purpose of assisting outside counsel with legal advice to the company.

The case law demonstrates the importance of setting forth in an engagement letter the foundation for asserting the attorney-client privilege: the work is intended to enable counsel to render legal advice, and the consultant should treat all communications as confidential. See also Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist. 100, 600 F.3d 612, 619-20 (7th Cir. 2010) (giving weight to engagement letter stating that counsel was hired to provide legal services); Sullivan v. Warminster Twp., 274 F.R.D. 147, 152-53 (E.D. Pa. 2011) (same, but finding partial waiver); Regions Fin. Corp. v. United States, No. 2:06-CV-00895-RDP, 2008 WL 2139008, at *8 (N.D. Ala. May 8, 2008) (finding it significant that general counsel's engagement letter with an accounting firm included a confidentiality agreement for all privileged communications and documents).

C. WORK PRODUCT DOCTRINE

The work product doctrine will generally apply with respect to an internal investigation that is undertaken in anticipation of litigation, whether it is conducted by counsel or by other agents of the corporation. See, e.g., Geller v. N. Shore Long Island Jewish Health Sys., No. CV 10-170(ADS)(ETB), 2011 WL 5507572, at *2-4 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 9, 2011) (investigative documents prepared by non-attorney compliance officer were subject to work product protection because they were prepared at the direction of counsel in anticipation of litigation); Wagoner v. Pfizer, Inc., No. 07-1229-JTM, 2008 WL 821952, at *3-5 (D. Kan. Mar. 26, 2008) (notes and summaries prepared by a non-attorney at the direction of in-house counsel following an employment discrimination claim were protected); Jeffers v. Russell Cty. Bd. of Educ., No. 3:06cv685-CSC, 2007 WL 2903012, at *2 (M.D. Ala. Oct. 4, 2007) ("The mere fact that the documents were gathered and/or created by the Superintendent or the Assistant Superintendent does not strip the documents of the protection offered by the work product doctrine."); Peterson v. Wallace Computer Servs., Inc., 984 F. Supp. 821, 824 (D. Vt. 1997) (notes and memoranda from investigation undertaken by director of human resources and plant manager constituted work product prepared in anticipation of litigation); Covington v. Calvin, No. CL96-30, 1996 WL 1065647 (Va. Cir. Ct. Nov. 25, 1996) (accident reconstruction prepared by insurer's agent may be work product because agent of insurer is a party's "representative" as defined by Virginia's corollary to FRCP 26(b)(3)).

To be considered work product, investigative documents must be prepared in anticipation of litigation and not as part of a routine investigation conducted in the ordinary course of business.

Compare:

Gillespie v. Charter Commc'ns, 133 F. Supp. 3d 1195, 1201 (E.D. Mo. 2015). Anonymous discrimination complaint filed in employer's ethics program and related internal "Incident Investigation Report" were not protected as work product because they were created in the ordinary course of business as part of an ongoing compliance program. Further, even if work product, plaintiff had shown substantial need for the documents, because such documents might show history of similar discrimination or retaliation.

Farr v. Paikowski, No. 11-C-789, 2012 WL 3150291, at *2 (E.D. Wis. July 31, 2012). Internal investigation materials were not privileged where police department did not show that, absent threat of suit, it would not have investigated plaintiff's charges alleging that police officers arrested her and held her without probable cause. The court stated that an investigation into employee misconduct is an "ordinary business decision." Accordingly, defendant needed to show that the investigation would not have been conducted without the threat of litigation, which it failed to do.

Galvin v. Pepe, No. 09-cv-104-PB, 2010 WL 2720608, at *4 (D.N.H. July 8, 2010). Court refused to extend work product protection to documents contained in insurer's claim file that were created during insurer's investigation of insured's car accident. Although noting that the documents might aid insurer in the event of litigation, they appeared to have been created during the ordinary course of business, not in anticipation of litigation.

Sajda v. Brewton, 265 F.R.D. 334, 339-40 (N.D. Ind. 2009). Work product doctrine did not apply to an accident report submitted by an employee to his supervisor because such reports are "regular occurrences in the transportation industry."

SEC v. Microtune Inc., 258 F.R.D. 310, 318-19 (N.D. Tex. 2009). Work product doctrine did not apply because the defendant "and its lawyers would have created most of the documents at issue for business purposes, regardless of the prospects of litigation."

Milder v. Farm Family Cas. Ins. Co., C.A. No. 08-310S, 2008 WL 4671003, at *1-2 (D.R.I. Oct. 21, 2008). Work product protection did not apply to a loss investigation report prepared for an insurance company, although plaintiff's claim was significant and plaintiff had engaged in extensive litigation related to the same property, because there was no evidence the report was prepared in anticipation of litigation.

Marceau v. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers (IBEW) Local 1269, 246 F.R.D. 610, 614 (D. Ariz. 2007). Work product protection did not apply to documents generated as part of an audit conducted a year before litigation was initiated after observing that the letter sent to outside counsel characterized the purpose of the investigation as business management recommendations.

Elec. Data Sys. Corp. v. Steingraber, No. 4:02 CV 225, 2003 WL 21653414, at *5-6 (E.D. Tex. July 9, 2003). Investigation into employee misconduct was based on business decision whether to terminate employee and not in anticipation of litigation.

Scott v. Litton Avondale Indus., No. Civ.A. 01-3334, 2003 WL 1913976, at *3 (E.D. La. Apr. 17, 2003). Certain employee-witness statements were not subject to work product protection because they were not taken in anticipation of litigation when the matter had not been referred to an attorney, the statements were not taken subject to an attorney's request, and the human resources employee taking the statements did not have the belief that litigation was imminent.

In re Subpoena Duces Tecum Served on Wilkie Farr & Gallagher, No. M8-85 (JSM), 1997 WL 118369, at *2-3 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 14, 1997). Law firm was compelled to produce audit committee documents generated in connection with internal investigation. Court concluded that attorney-client privilege was waived when the audit committee disclosed the results of the internal investigation to auditors Ernst &

Young in an attempt to obtain an unqualified audit opinion. Court also ruled that “[t]he investigation was necessary to maintain the integrity of the financial reports of a publicly-held corporation and the documents were prepared primarily for business purposes. Where primary motivation for the creation of work-product is other than litigation, the work-product doctrine does not apply.”

With:

Miss. Pub. Emp. Ret. Sys. v. Bos. Scientific Corp., 649 F.3d 5, 30 (1st Cir. 2011). Documents prepared by counsel in coordination with an investigation working group did not lose work product protection merely because they were also intended to inform business decisions influenced by the prospects of litigation.

Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist. 100, 600 F.3d 612, 622 (7th Cir. 2010). Work product doctrine applied although investigation of sexual abuse at school district may have had additional purposes, such as quelling public outrage, where chronology demonstrated that investigation was begun in response to filing of a lawsuit. It was not dispositive that the law firm conducting the investigation was not litigation counsel.

Patel v. L-3 Commc’ns Holdings, Inc., Nos. 14-CV-6038 (VEC), 14-CV-6182 (VEC), 14-CV-6939 (VEC), 2016 WL 4030704, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. July 25, 2016). The mere fact that documents are created for multiple purposes, including both anticipation of litigation and business purposes or other obligations, does not strip work product protection from otherwise protected documents. Accordingly, court held that work papers created by forensic accounting firm hired by defendant’s outside counsel in connection with counsel’s investigation of accounting improprieties in a division of defendant’s business and the forensic accounting firm’s internal and external communications relating to the investigation were protected as work product.

Lindon v. Kakavand, Civil Action No. 5:13-026-DCR, 2014 WL 4063821, at *2-3 (E.D. Ky. Aug. 15, 2014). Report of outside consultant hired to investigate an allegedly negligent medical procedure qualified as work product. Plaintiff argued that work product protection did not apply because the investigation was a business requirement, in that hospital licensure rules, administrative regulations, and health care accreditation standards require such investigation and causal analysis. The court rejected plaintiff’s argument, noting that plaintiff had failed to identify any regulation that required an incident investigation report like the report prepared by the outside consultant and that the retention letter indicated defendant’s subjective belief that litigation was a distinct possibility.

Sullivan v. Warminster Twp., 274 F.R.D. 147, 152-53 (E.D. Pa. 2011). Internal investigation conducted by outside counsel was protected work product where engagement letter expressly stated that counsel was engaged to provide legal advice and to represent client in future claims and the report discussed legal strategy regarding the incident being investigated.

Treat v. Tom Kelley Buick Pontiac GMC, Inc., No. 1:08-CV-173, 2009 WL 1543651, at *6-7 (N.D. Ind. June 2, 2009). Outside counsel’s investigation materials were protected work product because the purpose of the investigation was to respond to EEOC charges.

In re Vecco Instruments, Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 05 MD 1695(CM)(GAY), 2007 WL 210110, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. Jan 25, 2007). Internal investigation of a company’s financial statements by outside counsel and a forensic accounting firm was protected where it was anticipated that a restatement would be required that would result in litigation.

Ott v. Ind. Dep’t. of Corr., No. 3:05-CV-059 AS, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11315, at *4 (N.D. Ind. June 7, 2005). Investigative reports that come into existence because of a claim that is likely to lead to litigation may be protected under work product doctrine.

The work product doctrine also protects materials prepared by consultants hired by counsel to undertake an investigation in anticipation of litigation.

See:

Equal Rights Ctr. v. Post Props., Inc., 247 F.R.D. 208, 211 (D.D.C. 2008). Compliance reviews conducted by outside consultants were protected by work product doctrine.

Hertzberg v. Veneman, 273 F. Supp. 2d 67, 77 n.4 (D.D.C. 2003). “If one wants to assure work-product protection for factual or investigatory material or witness interviews, it surely is the better practice to have the agent who collects the information or conducts the investigation employed by the client’s attorney rather than by the client directly because there is a stronger presumption that the work-product of an agent of a lawyer retained for litigation or potential litigation (or the agent of an in-house or government agency lawyer with litigation responsibilities) was prepared ‘in anticipation of litigation.’”

Pacamor Bearings, Inc. v. Minebea Co., 918 F. Supp. 491, 513 (D.N.H. 1996). “When a party or the party’s attorney has an agent do work for it in anticipation of litigation, one way to ensure that such work will be protected under the work product doctrine is to provide ‘[c]larity of purpose in the engagement letter [.]’”

Henderson v. Newport Cty. Reg’l YMCA, 966 A.2d 1242, 1245, 1248-49 (R.I. 2009). Outside consultant’s report regarding staff policies and procedures was protected work product where the engagement letter specifically indicated the consultant was being retained in anticipation of litigation.

But see:

Halley v. Okla. Dep’t of Human Servs., No. 14-CV-562-JHP, 2016 WL 3197556, at *2-3 (E.D. Okla. June 8, 2016). Party ordered to produce private investigator’s report otherwise qualifying as work product because private investigator conducted interviews in state where he was not licensed, and thus work-product protections never attached, despite investigator’s representations to third parties that he had plaintiff’s “power of attorney.”

Ward v. Equilon Enters., LLC, No. C 09-4565 RS, 2011 WL 2746645, at *1-3 (N.D. Cal. July 13, 2011). Work product protection was waived where contents of investigation report were disclosed to independent contractor who was legally required to be part of investigative team.

However, the involvement of counsel is useful for several reasons. First, use of counsel is a contemporaneous indication that the corporation was contemplating the initiation of specific litigation. Second, when counsel prepares the written materials, they are more likely to contain opinion work product, and, therefore, enjoy a high level of protection.

The primary limitation in invoking the work product doctrine with respect to internal investigative materials is that ordinary work product may be discovered upon a showing of substantial need and undue hardship. To prove need and hardship, the party seeking production must show why the desired materials are relevant and that prejudice will result from the non-disclosure of those materials. See, e.g., Loctite Corp. v. Fel-Pro, Inc., 667 F.2d 577, 582 (7th Cir. 1981); Condon v. Petacque, 90 F.R.D. 53, 54-55 (N.D. Ill. 1981) (noting that the burden of showing substantial need is lessened the further the material is from the attorney’s mental processes and impressions). Courts have considered a variety of factors in determining need and hardship. See Protection Of Ordinary Work Product, § III.D.1, supra. Undue hardship most often is proven when materials are unavailable elsewhere. Id. Compare Vallabharapurapu v. Burger King Corp., 276 F.R.D. 611, 616-18 (N.D. Cal. 2011) (ordering production of measurements and photographs taken of certain restaurants by defendant's consultants because plaintiffs had "no other way of obtaining the information" after defendant altered the restaurant sites at issue in the litigation); SEC v. Vitesse Semiconductor Corp., 771 F. Supp. 2d 310, 314 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (despite non-waiver agreement, defendant showed substantial need for internal report disclosed to SEC by third party because depositions could not reveal the same detail as contemporaneous interviews and SEC would likely use report against defendant at trial), with Friends of Hope Valley v. Frederick Co., 268 F.R.D. 643, 648-49 (E.D. Cal. 2010) (defendant did not show substantial need for questions asked and factual responses provided by third-party witnesses to questionnaires prepared by plaintiff's counsel and administered by plaintiff's board members, especially when plaintiff agreed to increase the number of depositions defendant could take).

Like the attorney-client privilege, the work product doctrine does not protect the discovery of facts contained in work product. "Rule 26(b)(3)'s work-product protection 'furnishes no shield against discovery,' by interrogatory and deposition, of the facts that an adverse party's representative has amassed and accumulated in documents prepared for litigation." Carver v. Allstate Ins. Co., 94 F.R.D. 131, 136 (S.D. Ga. 1982) (citation omitted). Many courts have not found substantial need or undue hardship where the factual information contained in work product may be obtained by an opposing party by means of deposing the witness who provided the factual information. See id.; see also Stampley v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 23 F. App'x 467, 471 (6th Cir. 2001); SEC v. Brady, 238 F.R.D. 429, 439 (N.D. Tex. 2006); In re Natural Gas Commodities Litig., 232 F.R.D. 208, 213 (S.D.N.Y. 2005). But see Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Atl. Gas Light Co., 248 F.R.D. 663, 668-69 (N.D. Ga. 2008) (finding substantial need and allowing discovery of insurance company files when facts contained in the files could contradict the deposition testimony of certain witnesses).

1. Witness Statements

A critical component of most internal investigations is interviewing employees about their knowledge of relevant events. Memoranda generated by interviews conducted in anticipation of litigation are generally deemed to be work product. These memoranda can take the form of (1) verbatim statements (e.g., statements that are stenographically produced and signed), (2) near verbatim statements (e.g., handwritten notes that attempt to track the actual statements made by the witness), or (3) summaries of witness statements that do not attempt to recite any statements verbatim. Such summaries are often drafted by counsel and weave in the mental impressions of counsel as well as the substance of the witness statements. Categories (1) and (2) constitute ordinary work product. Category (3), to the extent that it includes opinions and impressions of counsel, constitutes opinion work product. As discussed below, courts commonly find that an opposing party demonstrates substantial need and undue hardship with respect to witness statements. It is therefore preferable that all witness interview memoranda be in the form of opinion work product, which is almost absolutely protected from discovery.

Many federal and state courts have compelled the production of witness statements despite finding them to be work product. These courts have found substantial need and undue hardship when witness statements are contemporaneous with relevant events, witness memories have dimmed, and/or where the party is effectively unable to obtain the information by other means.

In National Union Fire Insurance Co. of Pittsburgh v. Murray Sheet Metal Co., 967 F.2d 980 (4th Cir. 1992), a panel of the Fourth Circuit considered the discoverability of employee witness statements taken by non-legal personnel during an internal investigation that took place immediately following a fire. The court did not consider the attorney-client privilege, because counsel did not interview the employees and was not involved in the investigation. In remanding the case for further proceedings, the court instructed the trial court to consider the following issues, assuming that the statements were determined by the trial court to be ordinary work product:

When evaluating a party's need for statements taken immediately after an accident, we have observed: Statements of either the parties or witnesses taken immediately after the accident and involving a material issue in an action arising out of that accident, constitute "unique catalysts in the search for truth" in the judicial process; and where the parties seeking their discovery was disabled from making his own investigation at the time, there is sufficient showing under the amended Rule to warrant discovery.

Id. at 985 (quoting with approval McDougall v. Dunn, 468 F.2d 468, 474 (4th Cir. 1972)); see also Sanford v. Virginia, No. 3:08cv835, 2009 WL 2947377, at *2-6 (E.D. Va. Sept. 14, 2009) (citing National Union and ordering discovery of witness statements taken immediately after the events giving rise to the litigation because those statements "constitute unique catalysts in the search for truth") (quoting McDougall, 468 F.2d at 474); Cohen v. City of New York, 255 F.R.D. 110, 125-26 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (ordering the production of handwritten notes taken by attorneys during a political demonstration that resulted in numerous arrests and subsequent litigation because "the notes [were] the product of contemporaneous observations" that could not be replicated).

In In re John Doe Corp., 675 F.2d 482, 492-93 (2d Cir. 1982), the court held that notes taken by an attorney of a witness interview during an internal investigation were discoverable because the government demonstrated substantial need. In John Doe Corp., a company conducted an internal "business ethics review" through its legal department, apparently in response to allegations of criminal wrongdoing. Among other things, in-house counsel conducted interviews of high-level employees and took notes of those meetings. After determining that the attorney-client privilege was inapplicable due to the crime-fraud exception, the court turned its attention to the work product doctrine. The court found that notes relating to one high-level employee were work product but found, based on an in camera inspection, that the notes did not reflect the mental processes of counsel. The court ruled that the notes had to be produced because, among other reasons, the notes may have been the only available evidence of what John Doe Corp. knew and when it knew it. Id. at 492. The court noted that one employee's memory was hazy and that other potential witnesses had invoked the Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination. Id. at 486, 488, 492 n.10; see also In re Grand Jury Subpoenas 89-3 & 89-4, 734 F. Supp. 1207, 1215 (E.D. Va. 1990), vacated in part on other grounds, 902 F.2d 244 (4th Cir. 1990). In In re Grand Jury Subpoenas 89-3 & 89-4, the court cited John Doe Corp. and held that employee witness interview materials created by in-house counsel were discoverable, even though the interviews took place approximately four years after the alleged wrongdoing because: (1) the interviews would “constitute the most accurate and the principal, if not sole, source of evidence of Movant’s state of knowledge”; (2) time had faded memories; and (3) several employee witnesses had invoked the Fifth Amendment. 734 F. Supp. at 1215. The court indicated it would conduct an in camera inspection and “may order appropriate redactions to protect against any unwarranted or unnecessary disclosure of attorneys’ mental processes.” Id.

Other courts have found that parties have not demonstrated substantial need under similar circumstances. See, e.g., Sandra T.E. v. S. Berwyn Sch. Dist. 100, 600 F.3d 612, 622-23 (7th Cir. 2010) (use for impeachment of notes and memoranda of attorneys’ interviews with school district employees during investigation of sexual abuse was not substantial need); Treat v. Tom Kelley Buick Pontiac GMC, Inc., No. 1:08-CV-173, 2009 WL 1543651, at *6-7 (N.D. Ind. June 2, 2009) (witness interview notes “reflecting counsel’s mental impressions about what [counsel] deemed important” were protected work product); SEC v. Schroeder, No. C07-03798 JW (HRL), 2009 WL 1125579, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 7, 2009) (defendant had not shown need for draft interview memoranda prepared by outside counsel during an internal investigation); Feacher v. Intercont’l Hotels Grp., Civil Action No. 3:06-CV-0877 (TJM/DEP), 2007 WL 3104329, at *3 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 22, 2007) (the transcript of a witness interview conducted by non-attorney investigator was protected work product and reasoning that courts that permit disclosure of purely factual witness statements ignore that, in addition to creating a “zone of privacy” in which an attorney can prepare for litigation, the work product doctrine encourages “vigorous investigation . . . unfettered by fear that the products of such efforts will . . . fall into an adversary’s hands”).

2. Employment Discrimination Cases: “At Issue” Waiver

Internal investigations into allegations of sexual harassment and racial discrimination in the workplace present particular challenges. In these cases, a company often alleges in its answer to a complaint that it has conducted a thorough investigation and found no wrongdoing and/or that the company has taken appropriate remedial action to ensure no future wrongdoing. In so doing, the company puts the merits of the internal investigation at issue in the litigation, and courts often hold that the work product protection has been waived.

See:

Koumoulis v. Indep. Fin. Mktg. Grp., Inc., 295 F.R.D. 28, 40, 42, 47-48 (E.D.N.Y. 2013). Defendants waived any applicable work product protection by asserting, as an affirmative defense, both the reasonableness of their efforts to prevent and correct promptly any discriminatory behavior and the reasonableness of their policies and procedures for investigating and preventing discrimination.

Nelson v. NAV-RENO-GS, LLC, No. 3:12-CV-0165-LRH (VPC), 2013 WL 2475862, at *3 (D. Nev. June 7, 2013). Defendant’s assertion of the Faragher-Ellerth affirmative defense put internal investigation “at issue” and waived any work product protection that might apply to interview notes prepared by non-attorney HR personnel, particularly because there was no indication the notes contained mental opinions or impressions of counsel.

Angelone v. Xerox Corp., No. 09-CV-6019, 2011 WL 4473534, at *2 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2011). Finding waiver of attorney-client privilege and work product protection over documents used to prepare investigation report where corporation invoked Faragher-Ellerth defense, affirmatively putting its internal investigation at issue.

Nelsen v. Green, No. 08-CV-1424-ST, 2010 WL 3491360, at *4-5 (D. Or. Aug. 31, 2010). Compelling the production of two interim draft reports prepared by an investigating officer regarding sexual harassment and discrimination claims made by a former employee of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, except for the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of defendant's attorney contained therein, when defendant put its investigation at issue.

Musa-Muaremi v. Florists' Transworld Delivery, Inc., 270 F.R.D. 312, 318-19 (N.D. Ill. 2010). Defendant waived privilege over in-house counsel's edits to an internal investigation report where defendant asserted an affirmative defense of reasonable investigation and thereby put the adequacy of the investigation in issue.

Reitz v. City of Mt. Juliet, 680 F. Supp. 2d 888, 892-95 (M.D. Tenn. 2010). Although plaintiff dropped her hostile work environment claim, the court found that defendant had waived attorney-client privilege and work product protection over interview memoranda prepared by outside counsel investigating plaintiff's sexual harassment claims after defendant, in seeking summary judgment, asserted that the outside investigator had "fully, completely, and exhaustively investigated" plaintiff's claims, but defendant was allowed to redact opinion work product, which was irrelevant to the remaining retaliation claim.

Emps. Committed for Justice v. Eastman Kodak Co., 251 F.R.D. 101, 107-08 (W.D.N.Y. 2008). Assertion that employee appraisal process is overseen by legal department, which confers with HR on matters of racial disparities, waived privilege for those communications and analysis.

Walker v. Cnty. of Contra Costa, 227 F.R.D. 529, 535 (N.D. Cal. 2005). While attorney's investigation would normally be protected by both work product and attorney-client privilege, defendants' intention to rely upon it as a defense to a discrimination claim resulted in waiver.

Sedillos v. Bd. of Educ. of Sch. Dist. 1 in the City & Cnty. of Denver, 313 F. Supp. 2d 1091, 1094 (D. Colo. 2004). Decision to place advice of counsel as an issue in retaliatory transfer claim resulted in waiver of attorney-client privilege.

EEOC v. Rose Casual Dining, L.P., No. Civ.A. 02-7485, 2004 WL 231287, at *3-4 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 23, 2004). Work product protection waived for investigation into dismissal where party placed the investigation at issue.

McGrath v. Nassau Cnty. Health Care Corp., 204 F.R.D. 240, 245-46 (E.D.N.Y. 2001). Employer waived work product protection by invoking investigation in its defense.

Harding v. Dana Transp., Inc., 914 F. Supp. 1084, 1090-1100 (D.N.J. 1996). In case of first impression regarding discoverability of investigative materials obtained by counsel in sexual discrimination case founded on allegations of hostile work environment, the court held that the employer waived both the attorney-client privilege and work product protection as to all of outside counsel's investigative materials by raising the fact of the employer's investigation as a defense to plaintiff's allegations.

Alberts v. Wickes Lumber Co., No. 93 C 4397, 1995 WL 31577, at *1-2 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 26, 1995). Because defendant intended to use evidence of its investigation into plaintiff's allegations to establish its own good faith, defendant waived privilege for all documents contained in outside counsel's investigation file.

But see:

Angelone v. Xerox Corp., No. 09-CV-6019, 2011 WL 4473534, at *2 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2011). Waiver did not apply to post-investigation documents that would not be referred to or relied on by Faragher-Ellerth defense.

Crutcher-Sanchez v. Cnty. of Dakota, No. 8:09CV288, 2011 WL 612061, at *10 (D. Neb. Feb. 10, 2011). Generally alleging Faragher-Ellerth defense did not waive privilege for documents related to law firm investigation that took place after alleged improper termination.

Malin v. Hospira, Inc., No. 08 C 4393, 2010 WL 3781284, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 21, 2010). Declining to find waiver of attorney-client privilege and work product protection as it related to defendant's internal investigation of plaintiff's EEOC charge, even though defendant raised affirmative defense that it attempted to comply with applicable antidiscrimination laws, because the defense related only to plaintiff's inability to recover punitive damages and because defendant claimed that it did not intend to use the investigation at trial.

Treat v. Tom Kelley Buick Pontiac GMC, Inc., No. 1:08-CV-173, 2009 WL 1543651, at *12-13 (N.D. Ind. June 2, 2009). Employer's affirmative defense that it "exercised reasonable care" to prevent discrimination did not place its investigation into plaintiff's allegations at issue because plaintiff failed to take advantage of the employer's policies regarding discrimination, making it impossible for the employer to conduct an investigation of her claims prior to commencement of the litigation.

The district court decision in Peterson v. Wallace Computer Services, Inc., 984 F. Supp. 821 (D. Vt. 1997), illustrates the particular difficulty companies have in maintaining the work product privilege in the context of employment discrimination claims. In Peterson, Barry White, Wallace's Director of Human Resources, undertook an investigation of Peterson's allegations of sexual harassment after Peterson informed him that she intended to file a claim. Id. at 823. Wallace consulted both in-house and outside counsel during the course of the investigation and prepared three memoranda regarding White's conversations with counsel and his interviews with several employees. Id. Wallace raised as a defense its adequate investigation of Peterson's allegations. Id. In response to Peterson's discovery requests, Wallace asserted the attorney-client privilege and work product immunity over notes and memoranda, but it did not object to depositions of White and other Wallace employees. Id.

The Magistrate Judge found that both privileges applied to the investigation memoranda and that Wallace had not waived those privileges. Id. at 824. The district court agreed that the privileges applied but set aside the magistrate judge's opinion after finding that Wallace waived the privileges by putting the investigation "at issue" in the litigation. Id. at 826-27. For her hostile work environment claim, Peterson had to show that Wallace "provided no reasonable avenue for complaint or knew of the harassment but did nothing about it." Id. at 825 (internal quotation and citation omitted). "Wallace must have taken 'immediate and corrective action' in response to Peterson's allegations in order to avoid liability." Id. (citations omitted). The court stated that, in order to enable the finder of fact to evaluate Wallace's investigation with respect to timeliness, thoroughness and employer bias, Peterson had to be able to present evidence on these aspects of Wallace's investigation. Id. at 826. Peterson's ability to do so would have been "impaired severely" if the investigation notes and memoranda were not disclosed to her. Id. The court held that both the attorney-client privilege and work product protection had been waived by Wallace's interjecting the investigation into the case, and ordered that the investigative materials be disclosed. Id. However, the court instructed the Magistrate Judge to conduct an in camera review of the materials to protect against the disclosure of opinion work product. Id. at 826-27.

Two cases decided by California appellate courts indicate that very little from an internal investigation into employment discrimination claims is protected from discovery when the company raises the existence and adequacy of the investigation as a defense. In Wellpoint Health Networks, Inc. v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. App. 4th 110, 125-28 (Cal. Ct. App. 1997), the court held that pre-litigation investigative materials prepared by outside counsel were discoverable because Wellpoint had waived its privileges by putting the investigation at issue in litigation. Prior to plaintiff's filing of an employment discrimination action, Wellpoint hired outside counsel to conduct an investigation into charges plaintiff had brought to Wellpoint's attention. Id. at 117. Wellpoint's counsel then sent a letter to plaintiff asserting that each charge that he had filed "ha[d] been fully investigated and taken seriously." Id. (alteration in original).

The court found that both the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine applied to the investigative materials. Id. at 121-24. However, the court held that Wellpoint would waive those protections if it chose to defend the action based on the adequacy of the investigation. The court explained the unique situation that is presented by employment discrimination cases:

The adequacy or thoroughness of a defendant's investigation of plaintiff's claim is simply irrelevant in the typical civil action. In an employment discrimination lawsuit based on hostile work environment, on the other hand, the adequacy of the employer's investigation of the employee's initial complaints could be a critical issue if the employer chooses to defend by establishing that it took reasonable corrective or remedial action.

Id. at 126 (citations omitted). A party cannot use the investigation as both sword and shield by "fusing the roles" of internal investigator and attorney:

By asking [the attorney] to serve multiple duties, the defendants have fused the roles of internal investigator and legal advisor. Consequently, [the employer] cannot now argue that its own process is shielded from discovery. Consistent with the doctrine of fairness, the plaintiffs must be permitted to probe the substance of [the employer's] alleged investigation to determine its sufficiency.

Id. at 127 (quoting Harding, 914 F. Supp. at 1096) (alterations appear in quoted language). "[T]he employer's injection into the lawsuit of an issue concerning the adequacy of the investigation . . . undertaken by an attorney . . . must result in waiver of the attorney-client privilege and work-product doctrine." Id. at 128.

A later California appellate court decision somewhat limited the scope of Wellpoint but clarified that the vast majority of investigative materials must be produced when they are put at issue by a defendant in an employment discrimination case. Kaiser Found. Hosps. v. Super. Court, 66 Cal. App. 4th 1217 (Cal. Ct. App. 1998). In Kaiser, the employer, Kaiser, prior to the initiation of litigation, directed its human resources consultant, Diaz, to investigate allegations regarding a physician's allegedly "inappropriate sexual conduct." Id. at 1220. Diaz obtained advice from Kaiser's legal department regarding the process and progress of the investigation. Id. After filing suit, plaintiffs sought discovery of Kaiser's "complete investigation files." Id. In response to plaintiff's document request, Kaiser agreed to produce the majority of Diaz's work, including several investigation reports and investigation notes that did "not refer or relate to communication with counsel." Id. at 1221. Kaiser withheld or partially redacted 38 pages of documents, less than 10 percent of the investigative materials, on grounds of the attorney-client privilege, the work product protection, and the California right to privacy. Id. at 1221, 1225.

The Kaiser court held that "[w]here a defendant has produced its files and disclosed the substance of its internal investigation conducted by nonlawyer employees, and only seeks to protect specified discrete communications which those employees had with their attorneys, disclosure of such privileged communications is simply not essential for a thorough examination of the adequacy of the investigation or a fair adjudication of the action." Id. at 1227 (citations omitted). The court distinguished Wellpoint, where the court was confronted with an assertion of complete privilege over all materials prepared by counsel who undertook the investigation for the employer. Id. at 1225-26.

One lesson to be derived from Wellpoint and Kaiser is that, where a company intends to put its internal investigation at issue in litigation, it may be required to produce at least the majority of the investigative materials. See Baez v. Super. Court, No. B208294, 2008 WL 5394067, at *4 (Cal. Ct. App. Dec. 22, 2008) (unpublished) (ordering production of defendant's investigation file and reconciling Kaiser and Wellpoint). This principle may apply to cases other than employment discrimination actions where the internal investigation is put at issue by the assertion of a claim or defense. See, e.g., Reid-Lamb v. Time Warner Entm't Co., No. 3:10-CV-77-FDW-DCK, 2010 WL 5128632, at *2 (W.D.N.C. Dec. 10, 2010) (denying waiver argument where there was no evidence defendant intended to use privileged documents as support for any of its affirmative defenses); Picard Chem. Inc. Profit Sharing Plan v. Perrigo Co., 951 F. Supp. 679 (W.D. Mich. 1996) (upholding privilege asserted over internal investigation in securities class action but warning that privilege would be waived if the investigation report were to be used as a defense in a separate stockholder derivative action then pending before the court).

VII. SPECIAL PROBLEM AREAS

A. CHOICE OF LAW: IDENTIFYING THE APPLICABLE LAW

Because each jurisdiction may apply different rules regarding privilege, it is important to identify which law will most likely be applied to discovery disputes arising from each deposition in a case. Where depositions of third parties will be taken in several different jurisdictions, several different rules of law may be applied to the same case.

Rule 501 of the Federal Rules of Evidence provides:

The common law--as interpreted by United States courts in the light of reason and experience--governs a claim of privilege unless any of the following provides otherwise:

- the United States Constitution;
- a federal statute; or
- rules prescribed by the Supreme Court.

But in a civil case, state law governs privilege regarding a claim or defense for which state law supplies the rule of decision.

Thus, in cases based solely on diversity, privilege claims will be based on state attorney-client privilege law. See In re Avantel, S.A., 343 F.3d 311, 318 n.6 (5th Cir. 2003); Pamida, Inc. v. E.S. Originals, Inc., 281 F.3d 726, 731 (8th Cir. 2002); 1550 Brickell Assocs. v. Q.B.E. Ins. Co., 253 F.R.D. 697, 699 (S.D. Fl. 2008) (“Attorney-client privilege is governed by state law in diversity actions.”); Pal v. N.Y. Univ., No. 06 Civ. 5892(PAC)(FM), 2007 WL 4358463, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 10, 2007); Navigant Consulting, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 220 F.R.D. 467, 473 (N.D. Tex. 2004); RCN Corp. v. Paramount Pavilion Grp. LLC, No. Civ. A. 03-CV-1706, 2003 WL 23112381, at *3 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 19, 2003), Roberts v. Carrier Corp., 107 F.R.D. 678, 685 (N.D. Ind. 1985) (recognizing that the law of the forum state governs the availability of privilege in a diversity action). The scope of the work product protection, however, will be determined under federal procedural law. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3). See also Royal Marco Point 1 Condo. Ass’n, Inc. v. QBE Ins. Corp., No. 2:07-cv-16-FtM-99SPC, 2010 WL 5161111, at *2 (M.D. Fla. Dec. 14, 2010) (“Unlike the attorney-client privilege, which is controlled by state law in diversity cases, the work-product privilege is controlled by Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.”).

Federal Rule of Evidence 502 governs the scope of waiver of the attorney-client privilege and work product protection for all federal court proceedings that occur through disclosure in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency. FED. R. EVID. 502(f). This includes cases arising under state law brought in federal court based on diversity jurisdiction. FED. R. EVID. 502(f) advisory committee’s note.

In determining which state’s law will be applied, federal district courts sitting in diversity cases apply the conflict of laws rules prevailing in the state in which they are situated.

Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co., 313 U.S. 487, 496-97 (1941); Connolly Data Sys., Inc. v. Victor Tech., Inc., 114 F.R.D. 89, 91 (S.D. Cal. 1987); 3Com Corp. v. Diamond II Holdings, Inc., C.A. No. 3933-VCN, 2010 WL 2280734, at *5-6 (Del. Ch. May 31, 2010) (applying forum state privilege law because that state had the more significant interest in the challenged communications, but noting that, in the event that a non-forum state has the more significant relationship to the communications, that state's privilege law should be applied unless doing so would contravene the forum state's public policy). Where a third party witness's deposition is being taken, federal courts have applied the privilege law of the forum where the deposition takes place. Wolpin v. Philip Morris Inc., 189 F.R.D. 418, 423 (C.D. Cal. 1999); Tartaglia v. Paul Revere Life Ins., 948 F. Supp. 325, 326-27 (S.D.N.Y. 1996); Roberts v. Carrier Corp., 107 F.R.D. 678, 685-86 (N.D. Ind. 1985).

When jurisdiction is based on a federal question, privilege claims are governed by federal common law rather than state law. See Reed v. Baxter, 134 F.3d 351, 355 (6th Cir. 1998); Gray v. Bicknell, 86 F.3d 1472 (8th Cir. 1996); William T. Thompson Co. v. Gen. Nutrition Corp., Inc., 671 F.2d 100, 103 (3d Cir. 1982); Guzman v. City of Chi., No. 09 C 7570, 2011 WL 55979, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Jan 7, 2011) (rejecting plaintiff's argument that Illinois privilege law should apply to her federal civil rights law claim); Pei-Hreng Hor v. Ching-Wu Chu, No. 4:08-cv-3584, 2010 WL 4284902, at *3 (S.D. Tex. Oct. 22, 2010) (applying federal privilege law to communications occurring in patent law context); Dagdagan v. City of Vallejo, 263 F.R.D. 632, 638 (E.D. Cal. 2009); Cappetta v. GC Servs. Ltd. P'ship, 266 F.R.D. 121, 125 (E.D. Va. 2009); Clemmer v. Office of the Chief Judge, 544 F. Supp. 2d 722, 725 (N.D. Ill. 2008); SEC v. Beacon Hill Asset Mgmt. LLC, 231 F.R.D. 134, 138 (S.D.N.Y. 2004); In re Copper Mkt. Antitrust Litig., 200 F.R.D. 213, 217 (S.D.N.Y. 2001).

The federal common law of privilege will apply in federal question cases, at least to federal claims, even if the challenged testimony is relevant to a pendent state law claim. See Wilcox v. Arpaio, 753 F.3d 872, 876-77 (9th Cir. 2014) (where the same evidence related to both the federal and state law claims alleged, the court was not bound by state law and applied federal privilege law pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 501); Hancock v. Hobbs, 967 F.2d 462, 466-67 (11th Cir. 1992) (Georgia psychiatrist-patient privilege not applicable since federal law does not recognize such a privilege); von Bulow v. von Bulow, 811 F.2d 136 (2d Cir. 1987); William T. Thompson Co., 671 F.2d at 103-04; Mem'l Hosp. for McHenry Cnty. v. Shadur, 664 F.2d 1058, 1061 n.3 (7th Cir. 1981); Babych v. Psychiatric Solutions, Inc., 271 F.R.D. 603, 610 (N.D. Ill. 2010) (noting that the fact that the disputed materials related to pendant state law claims, in addition to the federal question claims that occasioned the removal of the entire action to federal court, did "not make the state privilege law applicable because 'it would be meaningless to hold the communication privileged for one set of claims and not the other'") (internal citation omitted); FSP Stallion 1, LLC v. Luce, No. 2:08-cv-01155-PMP-PAL, 2010 WL 3895914, at *14 (D. Nev. Sept. 30, 2010) (applying federal common law of privilege to federal question and pendant state law claims consistent with Ninth Circuit law); In re Zyprexa Prods. Liab. Litig., 254 F.R.D. 50, 52 (E.D.N.Y. 2008); Keen v. Hancock Cnty. Job & Family Servs., 581 F. Supp. 2d 893, 895 (N.D. Ohio 2008); HPD Labs., Inc. v. Clorox Co., 202 F.R.D. 410, 413 (D.N.J. 2001); Audritz Sprout-Bauer, Inc. v. Beazer E., Inc., 174 F.R.D. 609, 632 (M.D. Pa. 1997). Where, however, the privilege covers matters related solely to a pendent claim, state privilege law will apply to privilege issues related to that claim. See Motorola, Inc. v. Lemko Corp., No. 08 C 5427, 2010 WL 2179170, at *2 (N.D. Ill. June 1, 2010)

(distinguishing von Bulow because federal law applied narrower privilege protection than state law in that case, and applying Illinois privilege law to state Whistleblower Act claim); Lego v. Stratos Lightwave, Inc., 224 F.R.D. 576, 578-79 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (applying federal common law of privilege law to federal claims and state accountant's privilege to pendent state claims). In federal question cases, work product is also determined under federal procedural law. See FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3).

Multi-district litigation (“MDL”) proceedings present complex questions regarding which law to apply to privilege issues. In In re Yasmin & Yaz (Drospirenone) Marketing, Sales Practices & Products Liability Litigation, No. 3:09-md-02100, 2011 WL 1375011, at *1 (S.D. Ill. Apr. 12, 2011), the court provided a lengthy and detailed analysis of the privilege laws that should apply in 5,998 MDL lawsuits against various pharmaceutical company defendants, which involved state law claims asserted by plaintiffs, and included federal defenses asserted by defendants. Because the work product protection is a procedural, qualified immunity, and not a substantive testimonial privilege, the court held that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26 would govern any work product doctrine issues. Id. at *1-2. For transfer and foreign direct-filed cases, the court held that it would apply the law of each case's source of origin and would only apply Illinois, the forum state, choice of law principles to the MDL cases filed in Illinois. Id. at *5-6. Relying on Federal Rule of Evidence 501, the court rejected defendants' suggestion of applying federal law to all privilege issues in order to streamline the litigation. Id. at *6-7. In addition, the court held that federal privilege law would apply to defendants' federal defenses, but that state privilege laws would apply to any state law claims or defenses. Id. at *7. For communications relevant to both federal defenses and state claims or defenses, the court held that it would apply “the law favoring reception of the evidence.” Id. at *8. Finally, it concluded that Section 139 of the Restatement (Second) Conflict of Laws would govern state choice of privilege law questions, but the court would not apply Illinois's privilege law to communications occurring outside the state regarding matters arising outside the state. Id. at *8-15.

Where a communication occurs in a foreign country, courts may apply the law of the foreign country based on principles of comity.

See:

Fraunhofer-Gesellschaft Zur Forderung Der Angewandten Forschung E.V. v. Sirius XM Radio Inc., 1:17CV184, 2022 WL 4079051, at *3 (D. Del. Sept. 2, 2022). In the context of patent law, the law of the country where legal advice was rendered or where the patent application is pending will apply; communications between a foreign client and a foreign patent agent relating to assistance in prosecuting applications in the U.S. are governed by U.S. privilege law; as a matter of comity, communications regarding prosecuting foreign patent applications, were governed by the law of that jurisdiction.

Cadence Pharm., Inc. v. Fresenius Kabi USA, LLC, 996 F. Supp. 2d 1015, 1021 (S.D. Cal. 2014). Applying touch base approach and holding that communications with a German patent agent were protected under German law and not subject to discovery in the U.S.

Astrazeneca LP v. Breath Ltd., No. 08-1512, 2011 WL 1421800, *8 (D.N.J. Mar. 31, 2011). Applying foreign privilege law where the communications clearly related to activity in a foreign country and the communications did not “touch base” with the United States.

Organon, Inc. v. Mylan Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 303 F.Supp.2d 546, 549-550 (D.N.J. 2004). Applying Dutch law to Dutch patent agent's communications and finding them privileged.

Baxter International, Inc. v. Becton, Dickinson and Company, Case No. 17 C 7576, 2019 WL 6258490, at *2 (N.D. Ill. 2019). "Courts in this district, as a matter of comity and as a functional approach to the problem, 'look to the foreign nation's law to determine the extent to which the [attorney-client] privilege may attach' to communications with foreign individuals;" the court rejected the "touch base" approach and applied Swedish law.

See also:

Wultz v. Bank of China Ltd., 979 F. Supp. 2d 479, 492 (S.D.N.Y. 2013). Applying "touch base" analysis and finding that U.S. privilege law applied to all documents that related to the demand letter and the subject matter that gave rise to the lawsuit), modified on reconsideration, 2013 WL 6098484, at *2 (Nov. 20, 2013) modifying prior holding to clarify that U.S. privilege law applies to all communications that "touch base" with U.S. legal matters, regardless of whether they relate to the current litigation.

Anwar v. Fairfield Greenwich Ltd., 306 F.R.D. 117 (S.D.N.Y. July 8, 2013). Applying U.S. privilege law, because the communications arose out of defendants' role in activities that occurred in the United States, but noting that the court would reach the same result under Dutch privilege law.

Gucci Am., Inc. v. Guess?, Inc., 271 F.R.D. 58, 66, 68 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). Applying American privilege law because (1) communications at issued "touch[ed] base," that is, had a "more than incidental connection," with the United States, and (2) application of foreign law absent definitive evidence that foreign country recognized an analogous privilege scheme would violate the forum's public policy.

But see:

Aktiebolag v. Andrx Pharms., Inc., 208 F.R.D. 92, 102 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). Applying federal privilege law notwithstanding the fact that communications at issue did not "touch base" with the United States where application of Korean law could result in disclosure of documents that would be protected by the privilege under domestic law.

Other courts, however, will continue to accord deference to foreign privilege principles where doing so extends the privilege to communications with non-attorneys, at least where the non-attorney is acting in a capacity similar to an American attorney. See SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Apotex Corp., No. 98 C 3952, 2000 WL 1310668, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 13, 2000).

B. SHAREHOLDER LITIGATION

Shareholder litigation can create special problems when shareholders, either as a class or on a derivative basis, seek privileged or work product documents from the corporation. Many courts have recognized an exception to the attorney-client privilege that allows the shareholders of the corporation to access materials prepared by corporate counsel. For a more detailed discussion, see Exceptions To The Attorney-Client Privilege: Fiduciary Exception, § I.I.3, above. On the other hand, courts generally have not found a similar exception for work product protection. They recognize that the mutuality of interest is destroyed between shareholders and the corporation when litigation arises. For a more detailed discussion on the fiduciary exception and the work product doctrine, see Fiduciary Exception: The Garner Doctrine, § III.F.3, above.

C. ETHICAL CONSIDERATIONS

1. Dual Representation

One issue that often arises in the organizational context is whether a corporation's counsel should represent corporate employees, and if not, the extent to which corporate counsel should inform employees about their individual legal rights. When a corporation believes it is in its best interest to waive the attorney-client privilege for employee communications, such communications are subject to discovery unless the employee may assert an individual attorney-client privilege. Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 348 (1985); United States v. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 119 F.3d 210, 216-17 (2d Cir. 1997); In re Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Mgmt. Corp., 805 F.2d 120, 124-25 (3d Cir. 1986); United States v. Keplinger, 776 F.2d 678 (7th Cir. 1985); In re Bounds, 443 B.R. 729, 733 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2010) (declining to allow bankruptcy trustee, the current holder of the corporation's privilege, to waive the debtor-former owner's personal privilege). An employee may do so only if the communication satisfies each element of the privilege. See Representation Of Individual Employees By Organizational Counsel, § I.B.1.b(3), supra. If counsel represents only the corporation and has informed the employee of that fact, no individual privilege arises to protect the employee. See, e.g., United States v. Graf, 610 F.3d 1148, 1162 (9th Cir. 2010) (adopting standard set forth in In re Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Mgmt. Corp., 805 F.2d 120, 123 (3d Cir. 1986), for determining whether corporate employee holds a personal attorney-client privilege and finding that defendant held no individual privilege because he never requested or made clear to the attorneys that he sought personal representation, the retainer agreement was signed by another party, the bills were paid only by the company, and the substance of the communications at issue related solely to the defendant's official duties); In re Grand Jury Subpoena: Under Seal, 415 F.3d 333, 339 (4th Cir. 2005); Keplinger, 776 F.2d at 700-01.

Under certain circumstances, a corporation may choose to have its counsel also represent its employees. For example, where corporate officers, directors, or employees are the targets of a grand jury investigation, a corporation may wish to offer joint representation in order to retain control over the case and enable counsel to plot joint strategy. Joint representation may provide counsel with increased information and facilitate interviewing grand jury witnesses.

Multiple representations may, however, lead to the disqualification of counsel, either on the government's motion in a criminal case or an adverse party's motion in a civil case, and could result in disqualifying the lawyer and the lawyer's firm inability to participate in the litigation.

See:

disqualification order “only where the impropriety is clear and is one that would be recognized as such by all reasonable persons.”

In re Cmty. Lending, Inc., No. C 08-00201, 2011 WL 7479165, at *3-4 (N.D. Cal. June 6, 2011). Denying plaintiff’s motion to disqualify defendant’s law firm where plaintiff was the former CEO of defendant and the law firm had asserted the attorney-client privilege over communications between the former CEO and attorneys at the law firm, because the former CEO had been informed that the law firm only represented defendant.

Lieberman v. City of Rochester, 681 F. Supp. 2d 418, 423, 427 (W.D.N.Y. 2010). Noting that the Second Circuit has declined to adopt a “‘single representation’ rule requiring independent representation in all cases involving actual or potential conflicts between multiple clients” and finding inappropriate the disqualification of counsel from defending both a municipality and municipal employees in the same action.

Emmis Operating Co. v. CBS Radio Inc., 480 F. Supp. 2d 1111 (S.D. Ind. 2007). Disqualifying counsel who had consulted for a former executive in his contract negotiations with a company from representing the company in a subsequent action.

Smith v. City of New York, 611 F. Supp. 1080, 1091 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). Canon 5 is satisfied by the clients’ informed consent.

United States v. Occidental Chem. Corp., 606 F. Supp. 1470 (W.D.N.Y. 1985). Corporate counsel may also represent former employees where there is no actual conflict of interest.

United States v. Linton, 502 F. Supp. 871, 877 (D. Nev. 1980). Consent to and waiver of objections to conflict of interest not sufficient if confidential information involved: “the ethical requirement to utilize on behalf of one client confidential information obtained from another client could conceivably result in counsel’s disqualification to represent both clients.”

But see:

United States v. Turner, 594 F.3d 946, 954-55 (7th Cir. 2010). Finding error in disqualification of attorney from concurrent representation of multiple criminal defendants based on the “mere possibility” of conflict and discussing protective measures short of disqualification to insure that all defendants received effective assistance.

Vegetable Kingdom, Inc. v. Katzen, 653 F. Supp. 917, 925-26 (N.D.N.Y. 1987). Noting that motions for disqualification are increasingly filed merely to harass opposing counsel, the court denied the motion and imposed sanctions on movant.

Even if counsel is not disqualified, counsel may have difficulty adequately representing an individual’s interests, which may conflict with those of the corporation or those of other individuals represented by corporate counsel. For example, it may be in an individual’s best interest to accept an offer of immunity from the government, but such an offer may undermine the corporation’s case. In certain circumstances, the rules of professional responsibility may prohibit the representation of more than one client in this situation. See ABA CODE OF PROF’L RESPONSIBILITY DR 5-105, EC 5-14, 5-15, 9-1, 9-2; MODEL RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 1.7(b); see also United States v. Marshall, 488 F.2d 1169, 1193-94 (9th Cir. 1973). In criminal cases, moreover, this joint representation by counsel may also increase the possibility that counsel will be subpoenaed by the grand jury, which may lead to disqualification.

2. Former Employees

Ethics rules will also affect the ability of lawyers to contact former employees of an adversary corporation. Courts have reached conflicting results under the ethical canons. See Brian J. Redding, The Perils of Litigation Practice, 18 LITIG. 6, 10 (1992) (summarizing opinions on communicating with former employees). Some courts have found that ethical rules prohibit interviews with the former client of an adversary. See Am. Prot. Ins. Co. v. MGM Grand Hotel-Las Vegas, Inc., No. CV-LV 82-26-HDM, 1986 WL 57464, at *3-4 (D. Nev. Mar. 11, 1986) (ex parte contact with former employee involved with legal activities was improper). Other courts allow a lawyer to communicate with these former employees without the consent of opposing counsel. See Arista Records LLC v. Lime Grp. LLC, 784 F. Supp. 2d 398, 416-17 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (declining to restrict ex parte communications with former employees of opposing party, but placing limitations on elicitation of confidential information); Goff v. Wheaton Indus., 145 F.R.D. 351, 353-54 (D.N.J. 1992); Nalian Truck Lines, Inc. v. Nakano Warehouse & Transp. Corp., 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 467, 470 (Cal. Ct. App. 1992). See generally ABA Comm'n on Ethics & Prof'l Responsibility, Formal Op. 91-359 (Mar. 22, 1991) (contacts with former employees are not prohibited if the employee is unrepresented); D.C. Bar Op. 287 (2007) (lawyers may contact former employees without their adversary's consent but must disclose their identities and may not solicit privileged information of the party opponent).

Still other courts restrict interviews if the former employee was significantly involved in the events of the case. See Colborn v. Hardee's Food Sys., Inc., No. 2:10cv59-P-S, 2010 WL 4338353, at *1-2 (N.D. Miss. Oct. 27, 2010) (allowing ex parte contact with former employees of defendant except the employee whose conduct could be imputed to defendant to establish liability in the pending litigation); Serrano v. Cintas Corp., No. 04-40132, 2009 WL 5171802, at *3 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 23, 2009) (precluding party from conducting ex parte interviews with defendant's former decision makers because their conduct could be imputed to defendant to establish liability in the very litigation in which the interviews were sought); Chancellor v. Boeing, Co., 678 F. Supp. 250, 253 (D. Kan. 1988) (ex parte interviews with former employees are not permitted without the corporation's consent if the former employee's acts or admissions can be imputed to the corporation); Lang v. Super. Court, 826 P.2d 1228, 1233 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1992) (former employee interviews permitted unless the acts or omissions of the former employee give rise to the underlying litigation or the former employee has an ongoing relationship with the former employer in connection with the litigation).

In any case, even if the court allows the interview to take place, the attorney is prohibited from discussing any privileged communications of which the former employee is aware. See Arista Records, 784 F. Supp. 2d at 416-17 (placing limitations on elicitation of confidential information during otherwise permissible ex parte communications with former employees of opposing parties); Weber v. Fujifilm Med. Sys., U.S.A., No. 3:10 CV 401(JBA), 2010 WL 2836720, at *4 (D. Conn. Cargill Inc., No. 01-2086, 2004 WL 2203410, at *8-9 (D. Minn. Sept. 24, 2004) (noting that majority of courts allow attorneys to interview former employees ex parte, but disqualifying counsel due to failure to take precautions against the exchange of privileged matter); Dubois v. Gradco Sys., Inc., 136 F.R.D. 341, 347 (D. Conn. 1991); In re

Home Shopping Network, Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 87-248-CIV-T-13A, 1989 WL 201085, at *2 (M.D. Fla. June 22, 1989) (counsel can question about non-privileged matters but must advise former employees that (1) the attorney-client privilege belongs to the company and cannot be waived by the employees and (2) the employees are prohibited from discussing matters where the privilege belongs to the company); Amarin Plastics, Inc. v. Md. Cup Corp., 116 F.R.D. 36, 42 (D. Mass. 1987) (attorneys cannot try to uncover strategy or opinions of other lawyer from interviews with employees or former employees).

D. POST-ENRON CONSIDERATIONS

In 2002, in response to the collapse of Enron and other publicized incidents of corporate malfeasance, the federal government enacted the Sarbanes-Oxley Act (“SOX”) to impose stricter standards of accountability on public companies and accounting practices. SOX addresses corporate responsibility within publicly held companies and holds parties, particularly the chief executive officer and chief financial officer, accountable for intentional financial misstatements contained in securities filings. SOX permits the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board (“PCAOB”) to inspect registered public accounting firms’ compliance with SOX. 15 U.S.C. §§ 7214 & 7215. As part of these inspections, PCAOB may require testimony and the production of certain documents, including audit work papers, from the accounting firm or its client that it deems relevant to its investigation. Id. § 7215(b)(2). Failure to cooperate could lead to sanctions, including suspending or revoking the registration of the public accounting firm. Id. § 7215(b)(3)(A).

SOX provides that “all documents and information prepared or received by or specifically for the Board, and deliberations of the Board and its employees and agents in connection with an inspection under section 7214 of this title or with an investigation under this section, “shall be confidential and privileged as an evidentiary matter (and shall not be subject to civil discovery or other legal process) in any proceeding in any Federal or State Court or administrative agency, and shall be exempt from disclosure . . . unless and until presented in connection with a public proceeding. . . .” Id. § 7215(b)(5)(A). See also Bennett v. Sprint Nextel Corp., No. 11-9014-MC-W-ODS, 2012 WL 4829312, at *3-4 (W.D. Mo. Oct. 10, 2012) (direct communications with PCAOB, as well as materials KPMG provided to PCAOB during an annual inspection of KPMG, including KPMG’s 2005 audit of Sprint, and KPMG’s internal communications discussing PCAOB’s questions or comments and KPMG’s responses thereto, were privileged and protected from disclosure in class action litigation against Sprint); Silverman v. Motorola, No. 07 C 4507, 2010 WL 4659535, at *4, *6 (N.D. Ill. June 29, 2010) (holding that SOX’s statutory privilege did not apply to all documents and information relating to a PCAOB inspection, and ordering KPMG to produce all requested documents except those “prepared . . . specifically for the Board” in class action litigation against Motorola).

Section 307 of SOX authorizes the Securities and Exchange Commission (“SEC”) to issue rules “setting forth minimum standards of professional conduct for attorneys appearing and practicing before the Commission in any way in the representation of issuers,” specifically including a requirement that an attorney report evidence of corporate wrongdoing “up the ladder” within a client company. 15 U.S.C.A. § 7245 (West 2017). This reporting provision applies to both domestic and foreign attorneys. See Carnero v. Bos. Scientific Corp., 433 F.3d 1, 10 n.8 (1st Cir. 2006) (citing 17 C.F.R. § 205.2(a)(2)(ii), (c), and (j)).

After the announcement of a proposed rule regarding attorneys' obligations under SOX, there was considerable uproar in the legal community regarding a "noisy withdrawal" provision that required outside counsel who did not receive an "appropriate response" after reporting up the ladder to withdraw from the representation, report the withdrawal to the SEC (citing "professional considerations"), and disaffirm any SEC filings the attorney helped prepare that the attorney reasonably believed might be materially false or misleading. (In-house counsel would be subject to the requirement to disaffirm but would not have to resign.) The proposed rule, which was criticized because it could result in violations of some states' ethics rules and could damage client confidence in the attorney-client relationship, was not promulgated but remained under SEC consideration. See Giovanni P. Prezioso, Speech by SEC Staff: Remarks Before the ABA Section of Business Law 2004 Spring Meeting (Apr. 3, 2004), <http://www.sec.gov/news/speech/spch040304gpp.htm> (accessed September 10, 2023) ("At a staff level we are continuing our consideration of whether to recommend that the Commission also adopt a mandatory 'noisy withdrawal' rule."); SEC Unified Agenda: Long-Term Actions, 71 FR 74326-01, 2006 WL 3741820 (Dec. 11, 2006) (stating that noisy withdrawal rule is still under consideration). An alternative proposal that would require the corporate client, after outside counsel withdraws from the representation for "professional considerations," to report the withdrawal to the SEC is technically still under consideration, but there is no prospect that it will be adopted.

Instead of implementing either of these controversial rules, in 2003 the SEC opted for a rule that does not demand the disclosure of privileged information. Effective August 5, 2003, Rule 205 governs attorney conduct when an attorney appearing and practicing before the SEC becomes aware of evidence of a "material violation" of securities laws, breach of fiduciary duty, or similar violation by a company or its agent. 15 U.S.C.A. § 7245 (West 2017); 17 C.F.R. § 205.1 et seq. (2013). The legal community raised concerns about the broad reach of the language in the rule, especially regarding which attorneys appear and practice before the SEC and what constitutes sufficient wrongdoing to warrant up-the-ladder reporting. Despite these uncertainties, the rule does not mandate the disclosure of privileged information, as the attorney's representation is of the entity, not a particular employee, officer, or director, and the attorney is only required to report the violation within the client. See 17 C.F.R. § 205.3(b)(1) (2013) ("By communicating such information to the issuer's officers or directors, an attorney does not reveal client confidences or secrets or privileged or otherwise protected information related to the attorney's representation of an issuer.").

However, SEC Rule 205 permits – although it does not require – the reporting of privileged information outside the corporation without client consent under certain circumstances, and these permitted disclosures under Rule 205 differ in many instances from states' rules of professional responsibility. If an attorney's compliance with the SEC standards is at issue in any investigation, proceeding, or litigation, the attorney may disclose any report or response made under Rule 205. Id. § 205.3(d)(1). The SEC rules also permit an attorney to disclose to the SEC without client consent confidential information the attorney reasonably believes necessary: (1) "[t]o prevent the issuer from committing a material violation that is likely to cause substantial injury to the financial interest or property of the issuer or investors";

(2) to prevent the issuer from committing or suborning perjury in an SEC investigation or administrative proceeding or from perpetrating a fraud upon the SEC; or (3) “[t]o rectify the consequences of a material violation by the issuer that caused, or may cause, substantial injury to the financial interest or property of the issuer or investors in the furtherance of which the attorney’s services were used.” Id. § 205.3(d)(2); see also Wadler v. Bio-Rad Labs., Inc., 212 F. Supp. 3d 829, 854-57 (N.D. Cal. 2016) (in action by general counsel against his former employer for alleged FCPA violations, holding that Part 205 of SOX preempted state ethical obligations to the extent they imposed stricter limits on the disclosure of privileged and confidential information in connection with whistleblower retaliation claims).

Because the interaction between the SEC standards and the respective states’ standards for attorney conduct is not completely clear, states may attempt to clarify attorneys’ obligations to maintain client confidences. The SEC has taken the position that the SEC standards of professional conduct for attorneys appearing and practicing before the SEC supplement state rules and “are not intended to limit the ability of any jurisdiction to impose additional obligations on an attorney not inconsistent with [the SEC standards],” but that the SEC rules “shall govern” when state professional responsibility rules conflict with the SEC rules. See id. § 205.1. See also Cohen v. Telsey, Civ No. 09-2033 (DRD), 2009 WL 3747059, at *18 (D.N.J. Nov. 2, 2009) (holding that New Jersey law provides a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation when an issuer’s attorney responsible for SEC filings allegedly made misrepresentations as to the issuer’s financial situation, even though 17 C.F.R. § 205.7 does not allow for such private right of action).

The Washington State Bar Association (“WSBA”) Board of Governors on July 26, 2003 approved and adopted an Interim Formal Ethics Opinion to explain the impact of the SEC rules on Washington attorneys. In a July 23, 2003 letter to the WSBA, the SEC opined that SEC rules in areas covered by SEC regulations preempt conflicting state ethics rules, including when “a state rule prohibits an attorney from exercising the discretion provided by a federal regulation.” Giovanni P. Prezioso, Public Statement by SEC Official: Letter Regarding WSBA’s Proposed Opinion on the Effect of the SEC’s Attorney Conduct Rules (July 23, 2003), <http://www.sec.gov/news/speech/spch072303gpp.htm> (accessed September 10, 2023). However, the WSBA Ethics Opinion concluded that Washington lawyers were obligated to adhere to Washington’s stricter rules regarding the preservation of client confidences, despite the SEC’s more permissive rules, and that an attorney acting contrary to the opinion cannot assert as a defense that he acted in “good faith” pursuant to the SEC rules’ safe harbor provision. See 17 C.F.R. § 205.6(c) (2013) (“An attorney who complies in good faith with the provisions of this part shall not be subject to discipline or otherwise liable under inconsistent standards imposed by any state or other United States jurisdiction where the attorney is admitted or practices.”). It is critical that an attorney making a disclosure under Rule 205.3(d)(2) be aware that he could be subject to disciplinary action under state standards of professional responsibility to the extent that there is conflict between the SEC and state standards.

The ABA House of Delegates responded to public concerns about corporate and attorney wrongdoing by amending Model Rules of Professional Conduct (“MRPC”) 1.6 and 1.13 in August 2003. Amended MRPC 1.6, which governs an attorney’s obligation to keep information relating to representation of a client in confidence, permits (but does not require) an attorney to reveal confidential information “to prevent the client from committing a crime or fraud that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer’s services” or “to prevent, mitigate or rectify substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another that is reasonably certain to result or has resulted from the client’s commission of a crime or fraud in furtherance of which the client has used the lawyer’s services.” MODEL RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 1.6(b)(2)-(3) (2013).

Amended MRPC 1.13, governing an attorney’s representation of an organizational client, contains an up-the-ladder provision for an attorney with knowledge of “a violation of a legal obligation to the organization, or a violation of law that reasonably might be imputed to the organization” that will likely result in substantial injury to the organization, requiring the attorney to, if in the best interest of the corporation, report the matter up the ladder within the organization. Id. 1.13(b). Under certain circumstances, the attorney is permitted (but not required) to disclose information outside of the organization “only if and to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to prevent substantial injury to the organization.” Id. 1.13(c). The “organization” can refer to a governmental entity. See In re Witness Before Special Grand Jury 2000-2, 288 F.3d 289, 293 (7th Cir. 2002) (citing Model Rule 1.13 with respect to government employee’s obligation to act in the public interest).

It remains to be seen whether the states will adopt these amended Model Rules. Some states have already adopted these provisions. E.g., IND. RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT 1.13(b). Adoption of the rules will close the space between SEC rules and state rules, providing more uniformity and clarity to attorneys, but could have the effect of significantly reducing the scope of applicable privileges.

On July 21, 2010, the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (“Dodd-Frank Act”) was signed into law. Designed to further regulate the financial industry and curb other perceived abuses, the Dodd-Frank Act also contained a provision allowing federal authorities to share information without waiving the attorney-client, work product or any other governmental privilege. Specifically, section 929K of the Dodd-Frank Act allows the SEC to share information with federal agencies, the PCAOB, state securities and law enforcement authorities, foreign securities or law enforcement authorities, and self-regulatory organizations without waiving privilege. Similarly, federal agencies, PCAOB, state securities and law enforcement authorities, and self-regulatory organizations may share information with the SEC without waiving any applicable privilege.

In addition, section 922 of the Dodd-Frank Act allows certain persons who submit “original information” to the SEC the opportunity to receive 10-30% of the total recovery if such information results in a successful enforcement by the SEC of such action. In May 2012, the SEC released final rules related to the whistleblower policy under section 922 of the Dodd-Frank Act. 17 C.F.R. § 240.21F (2013). In the final rules, the SEC restricted the number of people who can claim awards by disclosure of privileged information to the SEC or other regulatory body. Specifically, any person who learns of the possible violation of securities laws (or any other related claim eligible for whistleblower recovery) through privileged attorney-client communications or who brings whistleblower claims for her own benefit based on information learned through representation of a client (unless the disclosure is permitted under Rule 205, discussed above, or state attorney conduct rules) cannot recover as a whistleblower because such information is not within the definition of “independent information” or “independent analysis.” Id. § 21F-4(b)(4). Thus, any person wishing to submit a claim (including an attorney) must have an exception to the privilege rule if they wish to recover. This sets privilege as an important issue outside the normal litigation sphere and substantially prevents attorneys and related parties from using privileged information discovered or prepared as a result of an investigation to subsequently claim an award.

In response, the New York County Lawyer’s Association (“NYCLA”) issued a formal opinion specifically addressing the issue of whether New York lawyers who act as attorneys on behalf of clients may serve as whistleblowers under the SEC’s whistleblower program. Reasoning that disclosing such confidential information acts as a conflict of interest under the New York Rules of Professional Conduct, the NYCLA opined that New York lawyers may not ethically serve as whistleblowers against their clients and collect awards under the whistleblower program. NYCLA COMMITTEE ON PROFESSIONAL ETHICS FORMAL OPINION 746 (Oct. 7, 2013). Thus, while it might be possible for an attorney to find an exception to the privilege doctrine to allow for the reporting of information, the attorney may be prevented from disclosing such information due to ethical concerns.

E. LOBBYING

Lobbying presents a particular challenge because it can be difficult to separate legal advice from political advice. The attorney-client privilege and the attorney work product doctrine may apply where the lobbyist is a lawyer or where the lobbyist is acting as an agent of a lawyer or a client.

1. Attorney-Client Privilege

Communications that relate solely to political advice or strategizing are not protected by the attorney-client privilege. For example, in In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated March 9, 2001, 179 F. Supp. 2d 270, 289-91 (S.D.N.Y. 2001), the court held that the attorney-client privilege did not protect communications between March Rich and Pincus Green and the lawyers who were lobbying for presidential pardons on their behalf. The court granted the government’s motion to compel, stating “[c]ommunications about non-legal issues such as public relations, the solicitation of prominent individuals or persons with access to the White House (such as Denise Rich and Beth Dozoretz) to support the Petition, and strategies for persuading the President to grant the petition are not privileged.” Id. at 291.

See:

Black v. Sw. Water Conservation Dist., 74 P.3d 462, 468-69 (Colo. App. 2003). In taxpayers’ action under Colorado’s Open Records Act seeking documents related to water district project, documents that were related to lobbying activities, including letters and memoranda to and from state and national public officials, records of Colorado Senate hearings, Senate bills, and comments of Colorado’s Attorney General, were not privileged. Documents containing legal advice on how to proceed with lobbying efforts or how to respond to plaintiffs’ Open Records Act requests were privileged, however, because “they represent[ed] legal advice regarding . . . negotiations and lobbying efforts and [were] not communications made to a public official for the purpose of influencing legislation.”

But see:

Blair v. Prof'l Transp., Inc., No. 3:14-cv-18-RLY-WGH, 2015 WL 410451, at *3 (S.D. Ind. Jan. 29, 2015). In action by current and former employees against defendants for alleged violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act, plaintiffs moved to compel the production of communications between defendants and an industry trade association involved in lobbying. The court noted that, although communications with attorneys acting as lobbyists are not privileged, communications for the purpose of obtaining or receiving legal advice may be privileged even when the attorney is acting as a lobbyist on behalf of the client. Because defendants' privilege log did not contain sufficient information for the court to evaluate the privilege assertions, the court ordered defendants to submit the documents at issue for in camera review.

Legal advice provided by lobbyists is protected, particularly where the legal nature of services provided is made explicit in a retainer agreement. See Vacco v. Harrah's Operating Co., Civil Action No. 1:07-CV-0663 (TJM/DEP), 2008 WL 4793719, at *7-8 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 29, 2008) (denying motion to compel production of communications with lobbyists where retainer agreement supported conclusion that services were predominately legal); United States v. Ill. Power Co., No. 99-cv-0833-MJR, 2003 WL 25593221, at *3 (S.D. Ill. Apr. 24, 2003) (denying government's motion to compel production of defendants' communications with an industry coalition). Privileged communications do not lose their privileged character merely because they are with a lobbyist or because they relate to legislation that is the subject of lobbying efforts. Id. If a lobbyist gives advice that requires legal analysis, such as interpretation or application of proposed legislation, it falls within the intended purpose of the privilege and should be protected. Id. See also United States v. Duke Energy Corp., No. 1:00-CV-1262, 2012 WL 1565228, at *12 (M.D.N.C. Apr. 30, 2012) (applying Illinois Power Co. and not finding communications with a regulatory group to be privileged).

Information that is provided to lobbyists to be disclosed to third parties in the course of lobbying efforts is not protected by the attorney-client privilege. See U.S. Postal Serv. v. Phelps-Dodge Ref. Corp., 852 F. Supp. 156, 164 (E.D.N.Y. 1994) (letter from in-house counsel describing current status of certain matters to disclose in response to concerns raised by a legislator fell outside the bounds of the privilege because it contemplated disclosure to a third party). But privileged information provided to lobbyists for their own information and kept confidential will not necessarily lose the protection of the attorney-client privilege. See Hope for Families & Cmty. Serv., Inc., v. Warren, No. 3:06-CV-1113-WKW, 2009 WL 1066525, at *12-13 (M.D. Ala. Apr. 21, 2009) (disclosure of privileged documents to consultant hired to provide government relations and campaign consulting to secure a license to operate bingo did not destroy the privilege); Vacco, 2008 WL 4793719, at *7-8 (extending attorney-client privilege to counsel's letter to lobbyists setting forth the position of his clients on a legal issue).

Status reports on lobbying activities are not protected by the attorney-client privilege. See Wolf Creek Ski Corp. v. Leavell-McCombs Joint Venture, No. CA04CV010099 JLKDLW, 2006 WL 1119031, at *2 (D. Colo. Apr. 25, 2006) (lobbying firms' invoices identifying legislative meetings not protected by the attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Mar. 9, 2001, 179 F. Supp. 2d at 291 ("The lawyers' reports to the clients on these non-legal items and lobbying efforts are not privileged (or protected by the work product doctrine)."); N.C. Elec. Membership Corp. v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 110 F.R.D. 511, 517 (M.D.N.C. 1986) (although coordinated by the legal department, summaries of town meetings and progress reports describing defendant's activities coordinating opposition to proposed government action was not legal advice for purposes of the attorney-client privilege because they did not refer to legal problems). But see In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., No. 94 C 897, 1995 WL 557412, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 19, 1995) (general counsel's memorandum summarizing and providing legal advice regarding a conference call among general counsels of six pharmaceutical companies for purpose of discussing lobbying initiatives was protected by the attorney-client privilege).

2. Attorney Work Product

The work product doctrine may protect materials produced by or provided to lobbyists where the materials relate to a threat of litigation. See Cambrians for Thoughtful Dev., U.A., v. Didion Milling, Inc., No. 07-C-246-C, 2007 WL 5618671, at *2 (W.D. Wis. Nov. 27, 2007) (denying motion to compel production of emails exchanged with lobbyists where the emails discussed a notice of violation from the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources). In In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Mar. 9, 2001, 179 F. Supp. 2d 270, 290 (S.D.N.Y. 2001), the court rejected the application of the work product doctrine because "the lawyers were being used principally to put legal trappings on what was essentially a lobbying and political effort. . . . [T]he lawyers were engaged primarily in lobbying activity, working with and sometimes at the direction of non-lawyer public relations consultants and lobbyists."

Some courts have held that even where the materials at issue relate to a specific threat of litigation, the work product doctrine could not apply because lobbying is an effort to avoid litigation. See Harper-Wyman Co. v. Conn. Gen. Life Ins. Co., No. 86 C 9595, 1991 WL 62510, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 17, 1991) ("While the insurance industry's lobbying efforts may have been sparked by lawsuits against insurers, a motivation to avoid potential claims does not supply the necessary foundation for a finding that the work product privilege applies."); P. & B. Marina, L.P. v. Logrande, 136 F.R.D. 50, 58-59 (E.D.N.Y. 1991) (ordering production of documents because defendant's use of a lobbyist "appears to have been intended to avert litigation by applying political pressure to federal agencies").

VIII. PATENTS

A. PATENTS AND LEGAL ADVICE

The majority rule prior to 1963 held that the attorney-client privilege did not extend to discussions between clients and patent attorneys because such attorneys were not regarded as being involved in "legal work." See McCook Metals L.L.C. v. Alcoa Inc., 192 F.R.D. 242, 248 (N.D. Ill. 2000) (reviewing the history of attorney-client privilege in the patent arena); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Radio Corp. of Am., 121 F. Supp. 792, 793 (D. Del. 1954). The Supreme Court's decision in Sperry v. Florida, 373 U.S. 379 (1963), proved a watershed event, however, as the court detailed the capacities in which the patent attorney undertook to practice law.

Even after Sperry, however, the courts remained of two schools in extending the protection of the attorney-client privilege to information relayed to patent attorneys. In Jack Winter, Inc. v. Koratron Co., 50 F.R.D. 225, 227 (N.D. Cal. 1970), the court held that factual information provided to an attorney as part of the patent prosecution process could not be protected by the privilege because such communications were made simply to be relayed to the Patent Office. Because the attorney acted as a mere “conduit” and lacked any discretion as to what information to pass on, there was no expectation of privacy in the communication, which precluded its privileged status. See id. at 228.

The Court of Claims in Knogo Corp. v. United States, 213 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 936, 939 (Ct. Cl. 1980), took a more expansive approach to the issue of attorney-client privilege in the patent context, holding that nearly all communications with such attorneys are privileged. See also McCook, 192 F.R.D. at 250. The Knogo court reasoned that the patent attorney, in preparing the patent, is actively involved in securing the greatest possible protection for the client, and therefore the “conduit” theory oversimplified the attorney’s role. 213 U.S.P.Q. at 940.

In In re Spalding Sports Worldwide, Inc., 203 F.3d 800, 805-06 (Fed. Cir. 2000), the Federal Circuit adopted the Knogo line of cases, holding that communications provided to a patent attorney for the purpose of obtaining legal advice, as embodied in an invention record, constitute protected communications. Even though the invention record contained portions not relevant to legal advice, such as the listing of prior art, the court held the entire communication protected, refusing to “dissect” the document to evaluate each part. Id. at 806.

Federal Circuit law is applied to privilege and work product issues when the materials sought to be discovered relate to an issue of substantive patent law. In re MSTG, Inc., 675 F.3d 1337, 1341 (Fed. Cir. 2012); In re Spalding Sports Worldwide, Inc., 203 F.3d at 803-04. Thus, the Spalding Sports decision and its progeny are controlling precedent in other Circuits with regard to documents that only appear in the patent law context, such as patent records; for other communications, the procedural law of the individual Circuits controls the availability of the privilege. See, e.g., In re Google Inc., 462 F. App’x 975, 977 (Fed. Cir. 2012) (holding that Ninth Circuit privilege law would apply because the district court’s refusal to protect the communications at issue was not unique to patent law); Nycomed U.S. Inc. v. Glenmark Generics Ltd., No. 08-CV-5023 (CBA)(RLM), 2009 WL 3334365, at *1 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 14, 2009) (acknowledging that Federal Circuit law governs the scope of waiver where advice of counsel has been raised as a defense to an assertion of willful infringement, but applying Second Circuit law to determine whether a waiver of privilege has occurred); McCook, 192 F.R.D. at 248-52 (acknowledging Spalding Sports and detailing the historic treatment of attorney-client privilege, but predicting that the Seventh Circuit would continue to apply a narrow construction to such issues).

Nonetheless, the majority position is now that communications between clients and patent attorneys are protected to the same extent that the privilege would attach to conversations with non-patent attorneys. See, e.g., Info-Hold, Inc. v. Trusonic, Inc., No. 1:06CV543, 2008 WL 2949399, at *3-4 (S.D. Ohio July 30, 2008) (applying Federal Circuit law and following Spalding Sports to protect communications between plaintiff and plaintiff’s attorney regarding patentability determination and invention protection); Kellogg v. Nike, Inc., No. 8:07CV70, 2007 WL 4570871, at *5-7, 11 (D. Neb. Dec. 26, 2007) (finding under general patent principles that documents created by defendant’s patent attorney or at his direction and sent to defendant’s in-house patent and litigation specialists were protected by attorney client privilege); SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Apotex Corp., 232 F.R.D. 467, 473, 480-81 (E.D. Pa. 2005) (following Spalding Sports); Softview Computer Prods. Corp. v. Haworth, Inc., No. 97 Civ. 8815 KMWHBP, 2000 WL 351411, at *2-3 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2000) (same); MessagePhone, Inc. v. SVI Sys., Inc., No. 3-97-1813 H, 1998 WL 812397, at *1 (N.D. Tex. Nov. 18, 1998) (“[T]he current and more widely accepted view is that communications between an inventor and his attorney are privileged to the same extent as any other attorney-client communication.”); Applied Telematics, Inc. v. Sprint Commc’ns Co., Civ. A. No. 94-4603, 1996 WL 539595, at *2 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 18, 1996) (“The majority of courts have rejected the rationale of the [Jack Winter line of cases] and recognize that attorneys render legal advice in the traditional sense when helping inventors apply for patents.”). See also California Inst. of Tech. v. Broadcom Ltd., No. CV 16-3714-GW (AGRx), 2018 WL 1468371, at *1-3 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 19, 2018) (applying Spalding Sports to protect invention disclosure form sent to defendant’s internal IP committee, which included attorneys, paralegals, and engineers, in the hope of commissioning a patent because the form was an implied request for legal advice).

Even when patent agents and other administrative practitioners are not attorneys, their communications with counsel and clients may be held privileged if the practitioners are proper agents of the attorney. See, e.g., Gucci America, Inc. v. Guess?, Inc., 271 F.R.D. 58, 72 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (the standard for the application of privilege is not whether a third-party patent agent is a licensed attorney, but rather whether the agent is supervised directly by an attorney and whether the communications were intended to remain confidential); Cargill, Inc. v. Sears Petroleum & Trans. Corp., No. CIVAS:03CV0530(DEP), 2003 WL 22225580 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 17, 2003) (privilege extends to communications between a registered patent agent and patent prosecution counsel who retained the patent agent because such communications relate to the scope of the attorney’s engagement and are used by the attorney in providing legal advice to the client); Gorman v. Polar Electro, Inc., 137 F. Supp. 2d 223, (E.D.N.Y. 2001) (noting that courts in this circuit generally have held that the attorney-client privilege applies to confidential communications with patent agents acting under the authority and control of counsel when the communications relate to the prosecution of a patent application in the United States); Willemijn Houdstermaatschaap BV v. Apollo Computer Inc., 707 F. Supp. 1429, 1446 (D. Del. 1989) (communications between attorney, client, and independent patent agent are privileged if patent agent is working on behalf of and under the direction of the attorney, provided that documents are not technical and unrelated to the provision of legal advice); Foseco Int’l Ltd. v. Fireline, Inc., 546 F. Supp. 22, 25, 26 (N.D. Ohio 1982) (privilege applicable to communications between American patent counsel and British patent agent acting as agent for British corporation); Congoleum Indus., Inc. v. GAF Corp., 49 F.R.D. 82, 84 (E.D. Pa. 1969), aff’d, 478 F.2d 1398 (3d Cir. 1973) (privilege held applicable where patent agent was “employed by and under the personal supervision of outside counsel whom he represented in discussions with the various [employees of the corporate client]”).

Some courts have held, however, that the privilege is inapplicable to communications between lawyers and patent agents where the agents were not under the direct personal supervision of the attorney and “essential to the lawyer’s performance of legal services.” See E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. MacDermid, Inc., Civ. Action No. 06-3383 (MLC), 2009 WL 3048421 (D.N.J. Sept. 17, 2009) (declining to apply privilege to third-party patent agent because she was not acting under the authority and control of counsel); Burton v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 200 F.R.D. 661 (D. Kan. 2001) (document primarily concerning scientific research with no connection to the rendering of legal advice is not privileged).

Prior to 2016, some courts extended the attorney-client privilege to non-lawyer patent agents, reasoning that the underlying basis of the privilege, certain policy considerations, and the role played by patent agents as “professional legal advisers” with respect to proceedings before the United States Patent and Trademark Office (“PTO”) warranted the extension. See, e.g., Buyer’s Direct Inc. v. Belk, Inc., No. SACV 12-00370-DOC, 2012 WL 1416639 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 24, 2012) (extending attorney-client privilege to patent agents due to congressional goal of allowing clients to utilize either attorneys or patent agents in proceedings before the USPTO, but limiting the patent agent-client privilege to “communications related to presenting and prosecuting applications before the USPTO” and not post-issuance communications); Mold-Masters Ltd. v. Husky Injection Molding Sys., Ltd., No. 01 C 1576, 2001 WL 1268587 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 15, 2001); accord Dow Chem. Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 227 U.S.P.Q. 129, 1985 WL 71991 (E.D. Mich. Apr. 23, 1985); In re Ampicillin Antitrust Litig., 81 F.R.D. 377, 25 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 1248 (D.D.C. 1978). Meanwhile, other courts held that communications to a non-lawyer patent agent who was authorized to practice before the PTO were not protected by the attorney-client privilege unless the purpose of the communication was to obtain legal advice from an attorney. See, e.g., Agfa Corp. v. Creo Prods., Inc., No. Civ. A 00-10836-GAO, 2002 WL 1787534, at *2 (D. Mass. Aug. 1, 2002), abrogated on other grounds by In re Queen’s University, 820 F.3d 1287 (Fed. Cir. 2016).

In 2016, the Federal Circuit recognized the existence of a patent-agent privilege to protect communications between non-lawyer patent agents and their clients, provided the communications were reasonably necessary and incident to the prosecution of patents before the PTO. See In re Queen’s University at Kingston, 820 F.3d 1287, 1298, 1301 (Fed. Cir. 2016). In so holding, the court explained that the prosecution of patent applications before the PTO constitutes the practice of law. Id. at 1296. The court nonetheless cautioned that the scope of the patent-agent privilege is not as expansive as the scope of the attorney client privilege. Id. at 1301-02. Specifically, the Federal Circuit limited the patent-agent privilege to those responsibilities patent agents are authorized to engage in by Congress and set forth in 37 C.F.R. § 11.5(b)(1) – namely, communications related to the patent agent’s representation of the client in the procurement or protection of patent rights before the PTO. Id. Other communications, such as a patent agent’s opinion on the validity of a third-party patent in contemplation of a federal district court lawsuit, would not be privileged unless they were in contemplation of an ex parte reexamination or inter partes filing before the PTO. Id. See also TCL Commc’ns Tech. Holdings Ltd. v. Telefonaktenbologer LM Ericsson, No. SACV1400341JVSANX, 2016 WL 6921124, at *3 (C.D. Cal. May 3, 2016) (following the Federal Circuit in recognizing a patent-agent privilege that is narrower than but substantially overlaps with the attorney-client privilege). But see In re Silver, 500 S.W.3d 644, 646 (Tex. App. 2016) (declining to follow In re Queen’s University in a breach of contract case upon the reasoning that the state privilege law, rather than federal privilege law, governed a state law claim).

Several cases have held that the attorney-client privilege is inapplicable to information that is material to applications filed with the PTO, because the duty of complete candor to the PTO in ex parte proceedings requires the disclosure of all material facts. See, e.g., Synair Corp. v. Am. Indus. Tire, Inc., 645 F. Supp. 1080, 1083-84 (S.D. Tex. 1986); Union Carbide Corp. v. Dow Chem. Co., 619 F. Supp. 1036, 1047 (D. Del. 1985). But see Hydraflow, Inc. v. Enidine Inc., 145 F.R.D. 626, 633 (W.D. N.Y. 1993) (disagreeing with decisions stating that patent counsel simply serves as funnel to convey information to PTO); Glaxo, Inc. v. Novopharm Ltd., 148 F.R.D. 535, 540 (E.D.N.C. 1993) (same); Rohm and Haas Co. v. Brotech Corp., 815 F. Supp. 793, 796-97 (D. Del. 1993), aff'd, 19 F.3d 41 (Fed. Cir. 1994) (same; privilege applies to draft patent applications); Research Institute for Med. and Chem., Inc. v. Wis. Alumni Research Found., 114 F.R.D. 672, 679 (W.D. Wis. 1987) (attorney-client privilege applies in connection with patent applications unless there is a showing of fraud; no work product protection applies, however, because patent application proceedings are not adversarial); Advanced Cardiovascular Sys., Inc. v. C.R. Bard, Inc., 144 F.R.D. 372, 374, 375 (N.D. Cal. 1992) (“great weight of current authority” holds that privilege may attach to communications or documents generated in connection with PTO proceedings).

At least two courts have held that a showing that an attorney omitted material evidence from a patent application makes out a prima facie case of fraud, destroying the privilege. Specialty Minerals, Inc. v. Pleuss-Stauffer AG, No. 98 Civ. 7775(VM)(MHD), 2004 WL 42280 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 7, 2004) (because plaintiff made prima facie showing for the crime-fraud exception where a patent holder had knowingly withheld information of prior art at the time of its initial application and again in its subsequent application for re-examination, the court ordered counsel who prepared the application for re-examination to testify about his communications with his client regarding prior art and its relationship to the patent); Bulk Lift Int'l Inc. v. Flexcon & Sys., Inc., 122 F.R.D. 493, 496 (W.D. La. 1988).

B. WAIVER OF PRIVILEGE AND THE GOOD FAITH RELIANCE ON ADVICE OF COUNSEL DEFENSE TO WILLFUL INFRINGEMENT

In infringement cases, a finding of willfulness can result in an award of trebled damages. See 35 U.S.C. § 284. To rebut an assertion of willfulness, a party may raise a defense of good faith reliance on the opinion of counsel that the conduct at issue was not infringing. Because a party may not use privilege as both sword and shield, “[w]here a party relies upon an advice of counsel defense, the assertion of that defense gives rise to potential waiver of attorney-client privilege and work product immunity based on fairness concerns.” Verizon Cal. Inc. v. Ronald A. Katz Tech. Licensing, L.P., 266 F. Supp. 2d 1144, 1148 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (citing Chevron Corp. v. Pennzoil Co., 974 F.2d 1156, 1162-63 (9th Cir. 1992); Chiron Corp. v. Genentech, Inc., 179 F. Supp. 2d 1182, 1186 (E.D. Cal. 2001)). See also Optimumpath, LLC v. Belkin Int'l, Inc., No. C 09-1398 CW (MEJ), 2010 WL 2348665, at * 4 (N.D. Cal. June 8, 2010) (denying party’s request for further production of privileged documents because no showing had been made that the party holding the privilege had relied upon the communications at issue in attempting to secure a legal right or supporting its position in the current litigation); Pall Corp. v. Cuno Inc., 268 F.R.D. 167, 170 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) (the assertion of a “good faith” reliance on patent counsel’s “thoughts and mental impressions” as a “shield” to allegations of inequitable conduct precluded the use of such communications as a “sword,” as well); Solomon v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., No. 98 C 7598, 1999 WL 89570, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 12, 1999).

For years, the Federal Circuit's decisions in Underwater Devices Inc. v. Morrison-Knudsen Co., 717 F.2d 1380 (Fed. Cir. 1983), overruled by In re Seagate Tech., LLC, 497 F.3d 1360, 1371 (Fed. Cir. 2007) (en banc), abrogated on other grounds by Halo Elecs., Inc. v. Pulse Elecs., Inc., 136 S. Ct. 1923 (2016), and established an affirmative duty for alleged infringers to obtain competent legal advice before commencing or continuing the allegedly infringing activity. The Federal Circuit also held that failure to rely on the advice of counsel defense and waive attorney-client privilege could lead to an adverse inference of willful infringement. See, e.g., Electro Med. Sys., S.A. v. Cooper Life Scis., Inc., 34 F.3d 1048, 1056 (Fed. Cir. 1994) (“[W]e have held that when an infringer refuses to produce an exculpatory opinion of counsel in response to a charge of willful infringement, an inference may be drawn that either no opinion was obtained or, if an opinion was obtained, it was unfavorable.”) (citations omitted).

In 2004, however, the Federal Circuit began an extensive overhaul of its decisions in this area. First, the court expressly overruled the adverse inference that had applied when a party relied on the advice of counsel defense but did not produce any opinion of counsel, holding that the failure to obtain such an opinion, or a refusal to produce the opinion after relying on it, should not give rise to an inference of willful infringement. See Knorr-Bremse Systeme Fuer Nutzfahrzeuge GMBH v. Dana Corp., 383 F.3d at 1344-45; Insituform Techs., Inc. v. Cat Contracting, Inc., 518 F. Supp. 2d 876, 893-95 (S.D. Tex. 2007) (finding, in light of Knorr-Bremse's elimination of the adverse inference, that plaintiff, an owner of a patent for underground pipe repair method, did not meet its burden of proving defendant's willful infringement under the totality-of-the-circumstances analysis when plaintiff did not introduce evidence of the opinions defendant obtained or challenge the competency of those opinions).

After Knorr-Bremse, it was uncertain whether the duty of due care standard announced in Underwater Devices, which included “the duty to seek and obtain competent legal advice from counsel,” still applied. Indeed, some courts still permitted a party's failure to obtain opinions as one factor in evaluating the existence of willful infringement. See Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 543 F.3d 683, 697-702 (Fed. Cir. 2008) (a defendant's failure to obtain non-infringement opinion letters could be considered, along with other factors, to support an induced infringement claim, even though such evidence could not be used to create an adverse inference of an unfavorable opinion to support a willful infringement claim). In 2007, however, the Federal Circuit overruled the duty of care standard set out in Underwater Devices and expressly held that there was no affirmative obligation to obtain an opinion of counsel. In re Seagate, 497 F.3d at 1371. The court held that a patentee must show by clear and convincing evidence that the infringer acted despite an objectively high likelihood that its actions constituted infringement of a valid patent, and that this objective risk was either known or so obvious that it should have been known to the accused infringer. In re Seagate, 497 F.3d at 1371. Courts thereafter began following In re Seagate.

See:

Bard Peripheral Vascular, Inc. v. W.L. Gore & Assocs., 670 F.3d 1171, 1190 (Fed. Cir. 2012), vacated by 682 F.3d 1003, 1005-08 (Fed. Cir. 2012) (en banc). Court vacated holding of willfulness and remanded so that objective recklessness prong could be decided by district court as a question of law rather than a question of fact. Relying on Seagate, the court stated that a favorable advice of counsel opinion “is not dispositive of the willfulness inquiry.”

Metso Minerals, Inc. v. Powerscreen Int'l Distrib. Ltd., 833 F. Supp. 2d 282, 308 (E.D.N.Y. 2011), reversed on other grounds by 526 F. App'x 988 (Fed. Cir. 2013). The court denied the accused infringer's motion for a new trial and held that jury may consider failure to obtain an opinion of counsel as a factor in assessing willfulness.

Presidio Components, Inc. v. Am. Technical Ceramics Corp., 723 F. Supp. 2d 1284, 1323-25 (S.D. Cal. 2010), vacated in part on other grounds, 702 F.3d 1351 (Fed. Cir. 2012) (vacating false marking claims). Failure to seek advice of counsel, while not grounds for an adverse inference, is a factor the jury may consider in determining willful infringement; however, that one factor alone was not sufficient on its own to demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that infringement was willful.

Kellogg v. Nike, Inc., 592 F. Supp. 2d 1166, 1171 (D. Neb. 2008). Court rejected defendant's claim that an alleged infringer's due care was no longer an issue after Seagate.

Energy Transp. Grp., Inc. v. William Demant Holding, No. 05422GMS, 2008 WL 114861, at *1 (D. Del. Jan. 7, 2008). Seagate decision does not prevent a jury from considering, under the totality-of-the-circumstances approach, whether defendant obtained the advice of counsel.

In 2016, the Supreme Court in Halo Electronics, Inc. v. Pulse Electronics, Inc., 136 S. Ct. 1923, 1934 (2016), rejected the two-part test for willful infringement laid out in In re Seagate. The Court instead articulated a more relaxed standard that provides district courts with discretion in making determinations of willful infringement. It remains to be seen, however, how the standard articulated in Halo will affect the advice of counsel defense to willful infringement. Nonetheless, the case law addressing the advice of counsel defense pre-Halo will provide helpful guidance and persuasive reasoning to the court.

1. Scope of Waiver

In re EchoStar Communications Corp., 448 F.3d 1294 (Fed. Cir. 2006), provides guidance as to how courts prior to Halo treated the scope of waiver when an accused infringer asserted advice of counsel as a defense to willful infringement. In that case, the Federal Circuit stated that reliance on the advice of counsel results in the waiver of the privilege for any attorney-client communications relating to the same subject matter, even communications with counsel upon whose opinion the party ultimately does not rely. First, the court held that the advice of counsel defense waived privilege equally “[w]hether counsel is employed by the client or hired by outside contract.” Id. at 1299.

Reedhycalog UK, Ltd. v. Baker Hughes Oilfield Operations Inc., 251 F.R.D. 238, 242-43 (E.D. Tex. 2008). Court ordered defendant who asserted an advice-of-counsel defense to produce unredacted portions of its email correspondence with counsel. Redacted versions of the email correspondence related to the issue of whether defendant acted with objective recklessness when it relied on counsel's opinion that plaintiff's patents were invalid or unenforceable.

V. Mane Fils S.A. v. Int'l Flavors & Fragrances, Inc., 249 F.R.D. 152 (D.N.J. 2008). Patent infringement defendant's disclosure of patent counsel opinion letters to potential customers waived the attorney-client privilege for all documents surrounding the opinions. Plaintiff sought production of the opinion letters as well as all documents, statements, and communications surrounding defendant's solicitation and direction regarding the opinions, including in-house patent counsel's discussions regarding the opinions. Defendant, relying on Seagate, argued that the defendant's state of mind regarding willfulness should be bifurcated and was not currently relevant. The court rejected defendant's argument, finding that disclosure of the opinions had resulted in a broad subject matter waiver, requiring immediate production of the requested documents.

Second, EchoStar held that despite the broad subject matter waiver triggered by the advice of counsel defense, an opposing party cannot obtain attorney opinion work product that was never given to the client. 448 F.3d at 1304. The court reasoned: “if a legal opinion or mental impression was never communicated to the client, then it provides little if any assistance to the court in determining whether the accused knew it was infringing, and any relative value is outweighed by the policies supporting the work-product doctrine.” Id. Therefore, documents that discuss a communication between attorney and client concerning the subject matter of the case but that were not themselves communicated to the client – such as an internal memorandum referencing a phone call with the client in which the client’s potential infringement was discussed – must be produced because they “will aid the parties in determining what communications were made to the client and protect against intentional or unintentional withholding of attorney-client communications from the court.” Id. Yet, the court noted that redaction of legal analysis not communicated to the client may be appropriate. Id.

2. Bifurcating Trial and Staying Discovery

With the relaxation of the Seagate standard, accused infringers may still find themselves facing the choice of risking treble damages or disclosing privileged material. In such cases, the possible prejudice from discovery of privileged information may be reduced by a bifurcated trial. The alleged infringer can request separate trials for liability and damages and a stay of willfulness discovery unless and until there is a finding of liability. In Johns Hopkins University v. CellPro, 160 F.R.D. 30 (D. Del. 1995), the court described the standard scenario of cases wherein a bifurcated trial is requested:

The current convention in patent litigation strategy is as follows: the patent owner opens with a claim for willful infringement; the alleged infringer answers by denying willful infringement and asserts good faith reliance on advice of counsel as an affirmative defense; then the owner serves contention interrogatories and document requests seeking the factual basis for that good faith reliance defense and the production of documents relating to counsel's opinion; the alleged infringer responds by seeking to defer responses and a decision on disclosure of the opinion; the owner counters by moving to compel; and the alleged infringer moves to stay discovery and for separate trials.

The Federal Circuit has stated that separate trials are warranted under certain circumstances: "An accused infringer . . . should not, without the trial court's careful consideration, be forced to choose between waiving the privilege in order to protect itself from a willfulness finding, in which case it may risk prejudicing itself on the question of liability, and maintaining the privilege, in which case it may risk being found to be a willful infringer if liability is found." Trial courts thus should give serious consideration to a separate trial on willfulness whenever the particular attorney-client communications, once inspected by the court in camera, reveal that the defendant is indeed confronted with this dilemma." Supp. 2d 542 (E.D. Ky. 2010) (determining that the bifurcation of trial into two phases had not been in error because a district court has broad discretion to bifurcate issues of liability and damages based on the consideration of principles of "fairness to the parties"). But see Nielsen v. Alcon, Inc., No. 3:08-CV-02239-B, 2010 WL 1063429, at *1-2 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 22, 2010) (citation omitted) (finding that, other than cost and potential time consumption, there were no extenuating circumstances, including waiver of privilege shadowing the determination of liability, that would normally justify the bifurcation of a patent trial); WebXchange Inc. v. Dell Inc., 2009 WL 5173485, at *3 (D. Del. Dec. 30, 2009) (denying defendants' motion to bifurcate because such bifurcation "[would] not promote the efficient adjudication of the parties' disputes" because of the potential for the presentation of duplicative evidence) (citations omitted); Trading Techs. Int'l, Inc. v. eSpeed, Inc., 431 F. Supp. 2d 834, 841 (N.D. Ill. 2006) (declining to bifurcate trial because plaintiff would be irreparably prejudiced by "substantial delay in final determination of action" and by having to "present the same evidence in two separate trials").

Factors that a court may consider when determining whether to bifurcate trial and stay discovery include: (1) "whether a stay of discovery is uneconomical and a waste of judicial resources"; (2) "whether a needless delay will be created"; (3) "the complexity of the case"; (4) "potential juror confusion"; (5) "the stage of the litigation at which the request is made"; (6) "whether any delay in filing such motion was a tactical strategy"; (7) "the overlap of evidence and witnesses between liability and willfulness"; (8) "the prejudice to patent owner by delaying the ultimate conclusion of the case"; (9) "the risk of prejudice as to the liability issues which may result from disclosure"; and (10) "the prejudice of having counsel who wrote the opinions disqualified as trial counsel." Some courts have denied motions to bifurcate trial and stay discovery on willfulness but have spoken favorably of multi-phase trials before the same jury for which evidence of willfulness would not be introduced until the damages portion of the trial. The court granted the accused infringer's motion to bifurcate, finding that not to do so would require defendant to assert an advice of counsel defense, which would result in waiver.

Static Control Components, Inc. v. Lexmark Int'l, Inc., 749 F.Supp.2d 542, 552-54 (E.D. Ky. 2010). In considering post-trial motion for new trial, the court determined that the bifurcation of trial into two phases (the first covering infringement-related affirmative claims and defenses and the second covering damages-related issues, including willfulness) had not been in error. Noting that a district court has broad discretion to bifurcate issues of liability and damages, the court reiterated its previous view that, after consideration of principles of "fairness to the parties," bifurcation of that matter "served the interests of convenience, efficiency, and economy, without prejudicing [defendant] or any other party." The court therefore denied the motion for new trial on that basis.

C. THE INEQUITABLE CONDUCT DEFENSE AND THE CRIME-FRAUD EXCEPTION

Parties asserting the affirmative defense of inequitable conduct in a patent action often seek discovery of privileged communications between the patent holder and its counsel under the crime-fraud exception. Despite several opinions distinguishing between the standard for proving inequitable conduct as broader than the prima facie showing of fraud needed for the crime-fraud exception, the two standards may have grown more in sync with the Federal Circuit's en banc decision in Therasense, Inc. v. Becton, Dickinson & Co., 649 F.3d 1276, 1285-92 (Fed. Cir. 2011).

The Federal Circuit applies its own law to the application of the crime-fraud exception to the attorney-client privilege. Unigene Labs., Inc. v. Apotex, Inc., 655 F.3d 1352, 1358 (Fed. Cir. 2011). To successfully pierce the attorney-client privilege, a party must establish a prima facie case of Walker Process fraud, also known as common law fraud. Id. (citing Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177 (1965)); Stryker Corp. v. Intermedics Orthopedics, Inc., 148 F.R.D. 493, 497 (E.D.N.Y. 1993) (citations omitted). A prima facie case of common law fraud must show:

- (1) a representation of a material fact, (2) the falsity of that representation, (3) the intent to deceive or, at least, a state of mind so reckless as to the consequences that it is held to be the equivalent of intent (scienter), (4) a justifiable reliance upon the misrepresentation by the party deceived which induces him to act thereon, and (5) injury to the party deceived as a result of his reliance on the misrepresentation.

Id. (citing In re Spalding Sports Worldwide, Inc., 203 F.3d 800, 807 (Fed. Cir. 2000), and Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1070 (Fed. Cir. 1998)); see also Vardon Golf Co. v. Karsten Mfg. Corp., 213 F.R.D. 528, 535 (N.D. Ill. 2003) (the crime-fraud exception required "(1) a prima facie showing of fraud, and (2) [a showing that] the communications in question are in furtherance of the misconduct"). "[I]ndependent and clear evidence must establish a prima facie case of fraud" for the crime-fraud exception. Id.

Inequitable conduct is an equitable and affirmative defense to patent infringement that provides the remedy of patent unenforceability. Therasense, 649 F.3d at 1285. The “judge-made doctrine evolved from a trio of Supreme Court cases that applied the doctrine of unclean hands to dismiss patent cases involving egregious misconduct.” Id. Over time, the doctrine evolved to provide the remedy of patent unenforceability and to require proof “that the applicant misrepresented or omitted material information with the specific intent to deceive the [U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (“PTO”).]” Id. at 1287 (citing Star Scientific Inc. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 537 F.3d 1357, 1365 (Fed. Cir. 2008)). These elements of materiality and specific intent to deceive the PTO must be proven with clear and convincing evidence. Id.

Because “inequitable conduct emerged from unclean hands, the standards for intent to deceive and materiality have fluctuated over time.” Id. at 1287-88. The Federal Circuit has used five different tests for materiality including an objective “but for” standard, where the examiner otherwise would not have allowed the patent to issue but for the misrepresentation or omitted reference, and a “reasonable examiner” standard, where there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable examiner would consider the information important in deciding whether to allow the application to issue. Digital Control, Inc. v. Charles Mach. Works, 437 F.3d 1309, 1314-16 (Fed. Cir. 2006). At times the Federal Circuit “espoused low standards for the intent requirement,” such as findings of “gross negligence or even negligence,” and also allowed the “sliding scale” of “a reduced showing of intent if the record contained a strong showing of materiality, and vice versa.” Therasense, 649 F.3d at 1288.

In the past, the Federal Circuit had rejected the argument that the standards for a prima facie case of inequitable conduct and common law fraud “are substantially the same, if not identical.” Spalding Sports, 203 F.3d at 807; see also Info-Hold, Inc. v. Trusonic, Inc., No. 1:06CV543, 2008 WL 2949399, at *6-7 (S.D. Ohio July 30, 2008) (finding that conduct might qualify as inequitable conduct but did not constitute prima facie evidence of fraud sufficient to trigger disclosure under the crime-fraud exception); Vardon Golf Co., 213 F.R.D. at 535 (“Inequitable conduct, however, is distinguishable as a lesser offense than common law fraud, and includes types of conduct less serious than ‘knowing and willful’ fraud.”); Stryker Corp., 148 F.R.D. at 497 (“more than a mere showing of circumstantial evidence indicating inequitable conduct before the PTO must be alleged to in order to vitiate the attorney-client privilege”); Research Corp. v. Gourmet’s Delight Mushroom Co., 560 F. Supp. 811, 820 (E.D. Pa. 1983) (holding that based on American Optical Corp. v. United States, 179 U.S.P.Q. 682, 684 (Ct. Cl. 1973), proof of inequitable conduct is not sufficient to establish a prima facie case of fraud for the crime-fraud exception). In Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1069-71 (Fed. Cir. 1998), the court held that inequitable conduct was insufficient to satisfy the crime-fraud standard because it is “a broader, more inclusive concept than the common law fraud needed to support [] Walker Process” and “includes types of conduct less serious than ‘knowing and willful’ fraud.” A finding of fraud “requires higher threshold showings of both intent and materiality than does a finding of inequitable conduct” and “must be based on independent and clear evidence of deceptive intent together with a clear showing of reliance, i.e., that the patent would not have issued but for the misrepresentation or omission.” Id. at 1070; see also WebXchange, Inc. v. Dell, Inc., 264 F.R.D. 123, 129 (D. Del. 2010) (explaining that defendants’ inequitable conduct allegations were “insufficient for a prima facie showing of fraud”); Abbott Lab. v. AndrX Pharm., 241 F.R.D. 480 (N.D. Ill. 2007)

(noting that in the patent context, a court may find inequitable conduct by balancing the materiality of the nondisclosure against evidence of intent, while in order to find fraud, intent may not be balanced).

In the en banc Therasense opinion, the Federal Circuit sought to “tighten the standard[] for finding both intent and materiality” in order to correct “unintended consequences” of low standards creating an inequitable conduct doctrine that “plagued not only the courts but also the entire patent system.” 649 F.3d at 1289. For materiality, the Federal Circuit held that “but for” materiality would be required. Id. at 1291. For example, if the allegation of inequitable conduct is based on a withheld reference, the court must determine whether the PTO would have allowed the claim if it had been aware of undisclosed reference. Id. However, the Federal Circuit recognized an exception to the “but for” causation requirement for “affirmative egregious misconduct,” “such as the filing of an unmistakably false affidavit.” Id.

In addition, the Federal Circuit restated its previous ruling that “[i]ntent and materiality are separate requirements” and cannot be placed on a sliding scale in which “a weak showing of intent may be found sufficient based on a strong showing of materiality, and vice versa.” Id. at 1290. “[A] district court may not infer intent solely from materiality.” Id. Instead, the specific intent to deceive the PTO must be proven, and a “should have known” standard of negligence or gross negligence is not sufficient. Id. If more than one reasonable inference may be drawn, intent to deceive cannot be found. Id. at 1290-91.

Now that the inequitable conduct standard has been tightened, the standard may now be closer to the standard for the crime-fraud exception. In Therasense, prior to stating the tightened standards, the Federal Circuit noted in dicta that “[a] finding of inequitable conduct may also prove the crime or fraud exception to the attorney-client privilege.” Id. at 1288 (citing Spalding, 203 F.3d at 807). See also Unigene Labs., Inc. v. Apotex, Inc., 655 F.3d 1352, 1358 (Fed. Cir. 2011) (Federal Circuit affirmed rejection of crime-fraud exception “because the record [was] devoid of sufficient intent evidence”); Ergo Licensing, LLC v. CareFusion 303, Inc., 263 F.R.D. 40, 45 (D. Me. 2009) (declining to order production of documents under the crime-fraud exception because the “documents [did] not show any evidence that [the clients] were ‘involved’ in the ‘continuation’ of the alleged fraud; rather, the issue in the documents [was] how to correct” previous misstatements and their effects).

Since Therasense, at least one district court has equated inequitable conduct to fraud and stated that “[i]nequitable conduct can satisfy the crime-fraud exception to the attorney-client privilege.” Kenall Mfg. Co. v. H.E. Williams, Inc., No. 09-C-1284, 2012 WL 4434370, at *1-5 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 24, 2012) (citing Therasense, 649 F.3d at 1289), noting that the Federal Circuit regards the crime-fraud exception as an extreme remedy, and holding that proponent failed to provide “clear evidence of deceptive intent together with clear showing of reliance”). In comparison, another district court has stated that it is “unconvinced that the Therasense, Inc. standard [for finding specific intent to deceive] has been imported into the crime-fraud context.” Shelbyzyme, LLC v. June 25, 2013) (denying motion to reconsider grant of crime-fraud exception and noting that specific intent was demonstrated under either Therasense, Inc. v. D. APPLICATION OF PRIVILEGE TO FOREIGN PATENT AGENT COMMUNICATIONS

Increased globalism in the world economy has caused United States courts to confront privilege issues as they relate to foreign patent agents who may assist in the prosecution of foreign patents. Because foreign patent agents are not licensed attorneys, their communications may not be subject to attorney-client privilege. Courts considering whether such communications are privileged may take into account a variety of factors, such as the privilege and discovery rules of a particular foreign country, the parties' intentions and expectations that the communications would be protected, the foreign countries' interests in protecting the communications, the patent agents' functions in representing clients, and the nature of the communications with the patent agents. When litigating this issue, it is important to note how the particular jurisdiction approaches the issue as well as how courts generally have ruled regarding the communications of patent agents from a particular country.

In the past, some courts have applied a strict rule that the communications of foreign patent agents not acting under the direction of a United States attorney are not protected by the attorney-client privilege. In Status Time Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 95 F.R.D. 27 (S.D.N.Y. 1982), defendant filed a motion to compel plaintiff to produce documents regarding plaintiff's foreign patent applications. The court took the view that the attorney-client privilege did not apply, noting that the foreign patent agents were neither licensed U.S. attorneys nor agents of U.S. attorneys. Id. at 33. The court declined to recognize the foreign patent agent communications as privileged, analogizing patent agents to professionals such as accountants, bankers, and investment advisors, and stating that "the necessity for 'unrestricted and unbounded confidence' between a client and his attorney which justifies the uniquely restrictive attorney-client privilege simply does not exist in the other relationships." Id.; see also Novamont N. Am. Inc. v. Warner-Lambert Co., No. 91 Civ. 6482 (DNE), 1992 WL 114507, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. May 6, 1992) (refusing to recognize privilege for foreign patent agent communications).

Today, the majority of courts apply some variation of a choice-of-law/comity analysis to determine whether communications with a foreign patent agent are privileged. A majority of courts follow the "touching base" approach that originated in Duplan Corp. v. Deering Milliken, Inc., 397 F. Supp. 1146, 1169-70 (D.S.C. 1974). Under this approach, the court first determines whether the communication involves, or "touches base" with, U.S. or foreign law, and then examines the applicable law for privilege. See, e.g., In re IPCom GmbH & Co., KG, 428 F. App'x 984, 985-86 (Fed. Cir. 2011) (applying U.S. privilege law because (i) patentee failed to show that a conflict existed between German and United States law, and (ii) the patentee could not use German discovery laws to shield itself from the potential consequences of inequitable conduct allegations by protecting otherwise discoverable documents "under the guise of international comity"); Gucci Am., Inc. v. Guess?, Inc., 271 F.R.D. 58, 66, 68 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (applying U.S. privilege law because (1) the communications at issue "touch[ed] base," that is, had a "more than incidental connection," with the United States, and (2) application of foreign law absent definitive evidence that the foreign country recognized an analogous privilege scheme would violate the forum's public policy); In re Rivastigmine Patent Litig., 239 F.R.D. 351, 356 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) ("Where, as here, a communication with a foreign patent agent or attorney involves a foreign patent application, as a matter of comity, courts look to the law of the country where the patent application is pending to examine whether that country's law provides a privilege comparable to U.S. attorney-client privilege. That country's law will be followed unless doing so offends U.S. policy considerations.") (citations omitted); Golden Trade, S.r.L. v. Lee Apparel Co., 143 F.R.D. 514, 520 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) ("[A]ny communications touching base with the United States will be governed by the federal discovery rules while any communications related to matters solely involving [a foreign country] will be governed by the applicable foreign statute.") (citation omitted); Burroughs Wellcome Co. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 143 F.R.D. 611, 616-17 (E.D.N.C. 1992) ("[T]he privilege may extend to communications with foreign patent agents related to foreign patent activities if the privilege would apply under the law of the foreign country and that law is not contrary to the law of this forum.") (emphasis in original) (citations omitted). See generally Daiske Yoshida, The Applicability of the Attorney-Client Privilege to Communications with Foreign Legal Professionals, 66 FORDHAM L. REV. 209 (1997).

This approach requires an examination of which country has the most direct, compelling interest in preserving the privilege of a particular communication. "Such interest will be determined after considering the parties to and the substance of the communication, the place where the relationship was centered at the time of the communication, the needs of the international system, and whether the application of foreign privilege law would be clearly inconsistent with important policies embedded in federal law." VLT Corp. v. Unitrode Corp., 194 F.R.D. 8, 16 (D. Mass. 2000) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted) (finding that communications with foreign patent agents were privileged under Japanese and British laws). The party asserting the privilege bears the burden of providing the court with proof of the applicable foreign laws and showing that the laws create a privilege that protects the discovery at issue. See, e.g., McCook, 192 F.R.D. at 257 (ordering that because defendant failed to meet its burden, it would have to produce documents "unless [it] furnishes to the Court within twenty-one days an English translation of the document, if applicable, and an affidavit of a licensed attorney learned in the laws of the country at issue stating the law of attorney-client privilege of that country and supporting the privilege asserted").

If the communication involves U.S. patent law, then the court applies U.S. privilege law. See, e.g., Glaxo, Inc. v. Novopharm Ltd., 148 F.R.D. 535, 539 (E.D.N.C. 1993) (applying U.S. privilege law when foreign patent agent communication dealt with U.S. patent application); Chubb Integrated Sys. Ltd. v. Nat'l Bank, 103 F.R.D. 52, 65 (D.D.C. 1984) (applying U.S. privilege law because communications touched base with U.S. law). See also AstraZeneca LP v. Breath Ltd., No. 08-1512, 2011 WL 1421800, at *5 (D.N.J. Mar. 31, 2011) (court rejected the argument that there is a "special relationship" between U.S. patent applications and foreign priority applications such that the relationship alone passes the test that the communications "touch base" with the United States).

The court applies the foreign country's laws if the communication at issue touches base with foreign patent matters. See, e.g., Cadence Pharm., Inc. v. Fresenius Kabi USA, LLC, 996 F. Supp. 2d 1015, 1021 (S.D. Cal. 2014) (applying touch base approach and holding that communications with a German patent agent were protected under German law and not subject to discovery in the U.S.); AstraZeneca LP v. Breath Ltd., Civil No. 008-1512 (RMB/AMD), 2011 WL 1421800, at *4 (D.N.J. Clements Walker PLLC, No. 08 CVS 4333, 2010 WL 877508, at *8 (N.C. Super. Ct. Mar. 9, 2010) (finding absence of “federal patent law” because ownership of the patent in question was an issue in a foreign country, and applying law of foreign jurisdiction), reversed on other grounds by 744 S.E.2d 130 (N.C. App. 2013). In a case where foreign law is applied, the court determines whether the communication would be considered privileged under the foreign law. If the communication would be privileged under the foreign law, then the U.S. court will recognize the privilege in the interest of judicial comity. See, e.g., Willemijn Houdstermaatschaap BV v. Apollo Computer Inc., 707 F. Supp. 1429, 1444, 1447-48 (D. Del. 1989) (applying foreign privilege law to documents dealing with matters of foreign patent law and ordering that documents be provided for in camera inspection along with information regarding foreign privilege laws); In re Ampicillin Antitrust Litig., 81 F.R.D. 377, 391 (D.D.C. 1978) (“[B]ecause the United States has a strong interest in regulating activities that involve its own patent laws, all communications relating to patent activities in the United States will be governed by the American rule [regarding attorney-client privilege]. However, the United States has no such strong interest for patent agent communications relating to patent activities in Great Britain, so that deference will be given to the British rule.”).

Many countries do not have liberal discovery rules like those in the United States. Consequently, those countries often are less likely to have any laws or judicial opinions regarding privilege for patent agents. This reality can be misunderstood by U.S. courts and may result in the disclosure of materials that would never have been discoverable in the foreign country. For example, in Alpex Computer Corp. v. Nintendo Co., No. 86 Civ. 1749 (KMW), 1992 WL 51534 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 10, 1992), the court affirmed the magistrate judge’s decision that Nintendo’s communications with a Japanese patent agent must be disclosed. The court found that the Japanese rule stating that patent agents could not testify regarding confidential information was not equivalent to United States attorney-client privilege and therefore the documents were discoverable. Id. at *2-3. But see Astra Aktiebolag v. Andrx Pharm. Inc., 208 F.R.D. 92, 101-02 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (communications that touched base with Korean law were protected because, although Korea has no attorney-client privilege statute, Korea does not have liberal discovery rules and the document would not have been discoverable under Korean law).

Instead of applying the choice-of-law approach, some courts apply a “functional” or “comity-functionalism” approach. See, e.g., In SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Apotex Corp., No. 98 C 3952, 2000 WL 1310668, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 13, 2000). Under this minority approach, a court determines whether the foreign patent agent performed a function equivalent to that of an attorney. See id. at *4. If the agent’s role is not the functional equivalent, then the analysis ends with a determination that privilege does not apply.

In Vernitron Medical Products, Inc. v. Baxter Laboratories, Inc., 186 U.S.P.Q. 324, 325-26 (D.N.J. 1975), the court found that documents containing communications with patent agents, including foreign agents, were privileged. The court stated: “[t]he substance of the function [of the patent agent], rather than the label given to the individual registered with the Patent Office, controls the determination here.” Id. at 325. In SmithKline Beecham, the district court affirmed the magistrate judge’s rulings, stating that “it would vitiate principles of comity and predictability of the privilege to extend that denial [of the privilege] blindly to foreign ‘patent agents’ without reference to either the function they serve in their native system or the expectations created under their local law.” 2000 WL 1310668, at *3 (citation omitted). The district court determined that the agent did not have to be the “full equivalent of an American attorney before his native protections may be recognized by a U.S. court,” and stated that “courts have looked to whether, with respect to a particular communication, the patent agent was engaged in the ‘substantive lawyering process.’” Id. at *4 (citations omitted). See SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Apotex Corp., 193 F.R.D. 530, 535-36 (N.D. Ill. 2000) (magistrate judge first looked to foreign country’s law to determine whether privilege applied, then examined whether patent agents functioned as attorneys); see also Heidelberg Harris, Inc. v. Mitsubishi Heavy Indus., Ltd., No. 95 C 0673, 1996 WL 732522, at *10 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 9, 1996) (finding that German patent agent was functional equivalent of attorney and stating that “[c]ourts have held that, where a foreign patent agent is engaged in the ‘substantive lawyering process’ and communicates with a United States attorney, the communication is privileged to the same extent as a communication between American co-counsel on the subject of their joint representation”) (citations omitted).

Generally, the communications of foreign patent agents acting under the direction of U.S. attorneys are protected by attorney-client privilege under United States law. See McCook Metals, 192 F.R.D. at 256 (“If the foreign patent agent was primarily a functionary of the attorney, the communication is privileged to the same extent as any communication between an attorney and a non-lawyer working under his supervision”) (citation omitted). See, e.g., Glaxo, 148 F.R.D. at 539 (“[C]ommunications between a foreign patent agent and a United States attorney concerning a United States patent application are not privileged unless the agent either registered with the United States patent office or is acting at the direction and under the control of an attorney.”) (emphasis added); Baxter Travenol Labs., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., No. 84 C 5103, 1987 WL 12919, at *8 (N.D. Ill. June 19, 1987) (“If the foreign patent agent was primarily a functionary of the attorney, the communication is privileged to the same extent as any communication between an attorney and a non-lawyer working under his supervision. If the foreign patent agent is engaged in the lawyering process, the communication is privileged to the same extent as any communication between co-counsel.”) (citation omitted).

Disclosure of work product to a foreign patent agent may not waive work product protection. The determining factor is whether disclosure to a foreign patent agent is likely to substantially increase the likelihood of opponents or adversaries gaining access to the work product. See, e.g., Skynet Elec. Co., Ltd v. Flextronics Int’l, Ltd., No. C 12-06317, at WHA, *3 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 16, 2013) (disclosure of work product to Taiwanese patent agent did not waive work product protection; the disclosure did not substantially increase the likelihood that defendants would gain access to protected material because Taiwanese patent agents are bound by law from disclosing their clients’ confidential work product).

E. THE COMMON INTEREST DOCTRINE IN THE PATENT CONTEXT

The Federal Circuit has held that the common interest doctrine applies with regard to patent rights. In re Regents of Univ. of Cal., 101 F.3d 1386, 1389 (Fed. Cir. 1996). See also Flo Pac, LLC v. NuTech, LLC, No. WDQ-09-510, 2010 WL 5125447, at *11 (D. Md. Dec. 9, 2010) (reiterating that “circumstances in which parties share a common legal interest [that is, share an “identical” legal interest] occur with considerable frequency in the area of patent law” because “[o]ften, more than one party has an interest in some patent”) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). For purposes of privilege, joint legal claims or defenses, common contemporaneous ownership, or a licensing arrangement as part of a joint venture constitute a “common interest” in a patent, but a common interest in a patent does not automatically exist between a prior and current owner of a patent. See In re IPCom GmbH & Co., KG, 428 F. App’x 984, 986 (Fed. Cir. 2011); Regents, 101 F.3d at 1389.

In Regents, the court found that Eli Lilly and the University of California shared a common legal interest in the advancement of certain patent applications because the University was the patent applicant and Lilly was a potential licensee of the patent. Id. Although the purpose of the parties’ joint venture was commercial, the court held that in situations where commercial and legal interests are intertwined, the legal interest is sufficient to establish the legal requisite community of interest. Id.

In comparison, in In re IPCom, the court denied a writ of mandamus petition and found that the district court had not erred in holding that the common interest doctrine did not apply. In re IPCom GmbH & Co., KG, 428 F. App’x at 986. The patentee had purchased its patents from another company that had filed applications for the patents in Germany, Japan, and the United States. Id. at 985. The accused infringer sought patent prosecution documents created by the prior owner’s employees in Germany and communications between the prior owner’s in-house counsel in Germany and outside patent counsel in Japan and the United States. Id. The patentee asserted the attorney-client privilege, but the district court held that the prior owner waived the privilege when it sold the documents and patents to the patentee. Id. The Federal Circuit held that the district court did not err in finding no common interest “because ‘[the prior owner] sold the Patents and all documents relating to the Patent to [the patentee]; [the prior owner] did not share this information as part of a joint legal claim or defense.’” Id. at 986.

Compare:

Prowess, Inc. v. Raysearch Labs. AB, No. 11-1357, 2013 WL 509021 (D. Md. Feb. 11, 2013). Common interest doctrine did not apply where plaintiff failed to demonstrate a common legal interest between inventors and patent-owner, a common interest doctrine was not signed until after the communications occurred, and the document did not state when the common interest arrangement began.

Shukh v. Seagate Tech., LLC, 872 F. Supp. 2d 851, 856 (D. Minn. 2012). Neither common interest nor joint representation privilege applied to an employee-inventor in a dispute over inventorship with his former company.

Trading Techs. Int’l, Inc. v. GL Consultants, Inc., Nos. 05-4120, 05-C-5164, 2012 WL 874322, at *2-5 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 14, 2012). Rejecting common interest between inventor and subsequent purchaser of the patent.

Genentech, Inc. v. Trs. of Univ. of Pa., No. C 10-2037, 2011 WL 5079531, at *1-3 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 24, 2011). The court declined to apply the common interest doctrine to emails between the CEO of a pharmaceutical company and the lead inventor of the patent-at-issue at a university where discussions related to no more than the presentation of a business case to the board of directors rather than to issues of patentability or the prosecution of the patent.

Int'l Mezzo Techs., Inc. v. Frontline Aerospace, Inc., No. 10-397-SCR, 2011 WL 4527409, at *2 (M.D. La. Sept. 28, 2011). Rejecting application of the common interest doctrine to communications between patentee and its licensee because plaintiff failed to identify what interests plaintiff and its licensee had in common related to the parties' claims and defenses in the case.

Elan Microelectronics Corp. v. Apple, Inc., No. C 09-01531, 2011 WL 3443923, at *1-4 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 08, 2011). The common interest doctrine did not apply to sales presentations between the accused infringer and its customers that contained information about infringement lawsuits and the patents-in-suit.

LG Elecs., Inc. v. Motorola Inc., No. 10 CV 3179, 2010 WL 4513722, at *3-4 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 2, 2010). Former owner of patent could not assert privilege because former owner was not a party to the litigation and did not have a stake in the litigation related to the patents.

With:

Crane Sec. Techs., Inc. v. Rolling Optics, AB, 230 F. Supp. 3d 10, 21-22 (D. Mass. 2017). Court held broadly that communications between a prospective patent licensee/purchaser and the owner of the patent technology were privileged.

William F. Shea, LLC v. Bonutti Research, Inc., No. 10-615, 2013 WL 1386005, at *2 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 4, 2013). The court applied a broad approach to the common interest doctrine and held that it protected communications regarding potential infringement issues between a patent holder and a patent acquirer because both parties "had an interest in the strength and scope of the patents that were the subject of the negotiations."

Xerox Corp. v. Google Inc., 801 F. Supp. 2d 293 (D. Del. 2011). The common interest doctrine applied between patentee and a patent licensing company that helped patentee to commercialize its patent portfolios. The court held that patentee and its licensing company had an "allied, uniform, agency relationship" that was "sufficiently imbued with common legal interests" plainly related to the present litigation.

Dura Global Techs., Inc. v. Magna Donnelly Corp., No. 07-CV-10945-DT, 2008 WL 2217682 (E.D. Mich. May 27, 2008). The common interest doctrine prevented waiver where patent opinion letters were shown to a potential acquirer, Toyota. Although the letters specifically stated that they were being provided pursuant to a joint defense privilege and requested that Toyota give notice before disclosing the opinion letters to a third party, Toyota produced the letters in subsequent litigation without prior notice. The court held that the common interest doctrine protected the communications, and there was no waiver. The court found it significant that the letters were sent between counsel and not between non-attorneys, stated that they were subject to a joint privilege, requested prior notice for any disclosure, and were written predominantly for a common legal purpose (avoiding infringement liability), rather than merely for a common commercial purpose.

Trading Techs. Int'l, Inc. v. eSpeed, Inc., No. 04 C 5312, 2007 WL 1521136, at *1 (N.D. Ill. May 17, 2007) (internal citations omitted). In a dispute over document production relating to patent-in-suit and prior art, the common interest doctrine applied to communications both "in anticipation of [and] in order to avoid litigation."

Fresenius Med. Care Holdings, Inc. v. Roxane Labs., Inc., No. 2:05-cv-0889, 2007 WL 895059 (S.D. Ohio Mar. 21, 2007). Where party acquired product line and related patents pursuant to an asset purchase agreement, and received seller's privileged communications with its patent counsel, privilege was not waived because acquirer and seller shared the legal interest of "obtaining a strong and enforceable patent," and although sharing the communications furthered a commercial transaction, that did not detract from the legal nature of the communications or the legal purpose of sharing them with the acquirer.

APPENDIX A - JOINT/COMMON DEFENSE AGREEMENT

The Parties have concluded that they have interests in common relating to the proceeding and wish to cooperate in the pursuit of their common interest. The Parties have determined it to be in their individual and common interests for them to share information relating to common interests and common issues, including certain privileged communications, work product, and discovery planning with each other in order to facilitate representation and anticipated defense in the matter.

The Parties recognize that the exchange of information will further their common interest and wish to avoid waiving any applicable privileges. The Parties also desire to retain certain industry and other (hereinafter "Consultants") and to share the use, benefit, and expense of said Consultants, while preserving to the maximum extent allowed by law all privileges available to them.

Accordingly, it is the Parties' intention and understanding that:

1. Communications between and among the Parties and the results of such communications and of joint interviews of prospective witnesses in connection with the proceeding are confidential and are protected from disclosure to any third party by the attorney-client privilege, the work product doctrine, and by other applicable rules or rules of law.
2. All documents, including but not limited to memoranda of law, debriefing memoranda, factual summaries, transcript digests, and other written materials which would otherwise be protected from disclosure to third parties and which are exchanged among any of the Parties in connection with the proceeding will remain confidential and protected from disclosure to any third party by the attorney-client privilege, the work product doctrine, and by any other applicable rules or rules of law.
3. Nothing in this Agreement shall be construed to require any of the Parties to disclose any privileged or work product documents or information which any of the Parties, in their sole discretion, shall determine not to disclose.
4. Any disclosure or exchange of information by the Parties in connection with the proceeding has been and shall be accomplished pursuant to the doctrine referred to as the "common interest" or "joint-defense doctrine" as recognized by numerous authorities and to the maximum extent recognized by law. Any counsel who receives information as a result of this Agreement may disclose the same to their client and to those individuals assisting counsel in the preparation and defense of this case. However, none of the information obtained by any of the undersigned counsel as a result of this Agreement shall be disclosed to anyone by their client and those individuals assisting them in the preparation or defense of this case without the consent of the Party who first furnished the privileged information. In addition, no client who receives information as a result of this Agreement may disclose the information to anyone but their counsel and those individuals assisting their counsel in the preparation and defense of his case, without the consent of the Party who first furnished the privileged information. In the event that a motion is filed in any court or forum seeking to compel disclosure by any of the Parties of information obtained as the result of this Agreement, the Party shall notify the other Parties hereto in time sufficient to permit them to intervene or otherwise protect their interest.

5. All tangible materials exchanged pursuant to this Agreement (including all copies thereof), including but not limited to all documents and any other tangible thing on or in which information is recorded, shall be deemed to be “on loan” while they are in the hands of any person other than the producing Party. All originals of such materials shall be returned upon request at any time to the Party who furnished them, and all copies thereof shall be destroyed at that time. Original materials also shall be returned promptly to the Party who furnished them and all copies thereof shall be destroyed in the event either of the undersigned counsel or each of their clients determine that the Parties no longer share a common interest in the litigation or if, for any reason, the joint-defense effort or this Agreement is terminated. The obligations imposed by this Agreement shall remain in effect with respect to all privileged or work product information obtained by a withdrawing Party prior to such withdrawal. At the conclusion of the litigation, all original tangible materials exchanged pursuant to this Agreement shall be returned to the Party who furnished them, and all copies thereof shall be destroyed.
6. Nothing contained in this Agreement shall obligate any Party to consult or agree with any other Party on any specific decision or strategy. Likewise, nothing in this Agreement obligates any Party to exchange or share any information that such Party concludes should not be disclosed.
7. Information exchanged under this Agreement shall be used only in connection with asserting common claims and defenses against plaintiffs in the subject litigation and conducting such other activities that are necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of this Agreement.
8. Each Party agrees that they will not use and hereby waives any right to use any and all information which has been provided to them pursuant to this Agreement in any forum or manner in any way adverse to the interests of the other Parties.
9. Any Party may withdraw from the joint-defense group and this Agreement by providing written notice of that intention to the remaining Parties. As to any tangible materials already obtained under this Agreement, any Party that withdraws from this Agreement shall, not more than ten days after providing notice, return the originals of all tangible materials to the Party who furnished them and destroy all copies thereof, and turn over the originals of all tangible work product of any Consultant to counsel for the remaining clients and destroy all copies thereof. A Party’s withdrawal from the joint-defense group and this Agreement shall not affect the duty of confidentiality which that Party has undertaken by virtue of having entered into this Agreement and such Party shall remain obligated to preserve the privileges and confidentiality of all information exchanged pursuant to this Agreement.

10. In the event any client settles with the plaintiffs and/or is dismissed from the subject litigation, said dismissed client shall be deemed to withdraw from the joint-defense group and from this Agreement and shall, not more than ten days thereafter, comply with the terms of paragraph 9. A client's settlement and/or dismissal from the subject litigation shall not affect the duty of confidentiality which that client has undertaken by virtue of having entered into this Agreement and such client shall remain obligated to preserve the privileges and confidentiality of all information exchanged pursuant to this Agreement.
11. This Agreement shall be binding upon and inure to the benefit of the Parties and their respective representatives, successors and assigns.
12. This Agreement contains the entire understanding of the Parties relating to its subject matter, and all prior or contemporaneous agreements, understandings, representations, and statements, whether oral or written, are merged herein.
13. No breach of any provision of this Agreement can be waived unless in writing. Waiver of any one breach shall not be deemed to be a waiver of any other breach of the same or any other provision hereof.
14. All notices and demands under this Agreement shall be sent by registered or certified mail, postage prepaid, to the applicable counsel at the addresses set forth below. Notices shall be deemed given and demands made when received by addressee.
15. If any provision of this Agreement is deemed invalid or unenforceable, the balance of this Agreement shall remain in full force and effect.
16. This Agreement may be executed in counterparts and will become effective and binding upon the Parties at such time as all of the signatories hereto have signed a counterpart hereof. All counterparts so executed shall constitute one Agreement binding on all Parties.
17. This Agreement may be modified only by a writing executed by the Parties.

APPENDIX C – SPECIFIC STEPS TO PROTECT PRIVILEGES

- Use Legal Titles – Identify Who Acts As A Lawyer.

Use legal titles for in-house attorneys who provide legal advice to the company, including those who work outside the Legal Department. Include these titles in the company's organization chart or other corporate structure documents. Identify internally which legally trained employees are not authorized or expected to act in a legal capacity on behalf of the company.

- IDENTIFY WHEN ACTING AS A LAWYER.

State in written legal communications that in-house counsel is providing legal advice or is requesting information to enable counsel to provide legal advice to the company.

- LIMIT COMMUNICATIONS TO THOSE WITH A NEED-TO-KNOW.

Limit distribution of privileged communications to those with a need-to-know legal advice. Broader distribution to non-legal personnel may increase the risk that a court may find waiver. Email communications present heightened risk, because recipients can forward communications to recipients who are not within the privilege.

- AVOID MIXING LEGAL AND BUSINESS ADVICE.

In-house counsel with both legal and business roles face the challenge of demonstrating that communications were made primarily for a legal purpose. Where possible, draft separate documents relating to business and legal advice. Where a single document includes both business and legal advice, where possible, separate the legal portion and indicate that it is legal in nature. Where presentations include some slides that are privileged, label those slides as privileged rather than the entire presentation as appropriate.

- LABEL PRIVILEGED DOCUMENTS.

Label documents as privileged, distinguishing between attorney-client privilege and work product protections as appropriate. For example: "Privileged and Confidential: Protected by the Attorney-Client Privilege [And As [Attorney] Work Product]; or "Attorney-Client Privilege/[Protected Work Product.]"

- CLEARLY IDENTIFY WHEN AN INVESTIGATION IS PRIVILEGED.

At the outset of a privileged investigation, communicate to the team that it is privileged and that: (1) in-house counsel will direct and supervise the investigation; and (2) work product will be provided directly to counsel, who may then decide how to distribute it to others in the company.

- ESTABLISH PROCEDURES TO CHANNEL APPROPRIATE ISSUES TO LEGAL DEPARTMENT.

Implement processes to triage between matters that should be brought to the attention of the Legal Department for possible privileged investigation and those that may be handled on a non-privileged basis. Provide direction to non-legal investigation teams regarding what developments in an investigation should be brought to the attention of the Legal Department for evaluation and potentially proceeding with a privileged investigation.

INVESTIGATIONS

- CONSIDER BOTH ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE AND WORK PRODUCT PROTECTIONS.

When reviewing documents for production, consider the attorney-client privilege and work product protections separately. Where the attorney-client privilege may have been waived, the work product doctrine may protect those communications from discovery. The attorney-client privilege is absolute, but easily waived. The work product protection is qualified, but more robust. Note: opinion work product is almost absolutely protected.

- CONSIDER FEDERAL RULE OF EVIDENCE 502(A) AND STATE ANALOGS.

FRE 502(a) limits the scope of waiver with respect to privileged documents disclosed in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency. The rule eliminates subject matter waiver for inadvertent disclosures. An increasing number of states have enacted similar rules of evidence for state proceedings.

- PROVIDE UPJOHN WARNINGS TO COMPANY EMPLOYEES.

Where counsel interviews company employees during the course of a privileged investigation, provide the following information: (1) counsel is conducting an investigation to enable counsel to provide legal advice to the company; (2) the interview is privileged; (3) but it is the company's privilege not the employees; (4) the company may assert or waive privilege in its sole discretion; and (5) the employee should keep the substance of the interview confidential.

LITIGATION

- PROVIDE DETAILED DECLARATIONS/AFFIDAVITS TO ESTABLISH PRIVILEGE.

When in-house counsel communications are challenged, be prepared to provide detailed submissions to the court that establish the elements of privilege as to each communication or group of communications. Courts typically require in-house counsel to make a "clear showing" that they were acting in a legal capacity.

- USE FEDERAL RULE OF EVIDENCE 502(D) ORDERS.

A FRE 502(d) order is a powerful tool: Where the court rules that a disclosure does not result in waiver, that ruling is binding on all other state and federal proceedings currently pending or initiated in the future. Consider state analogs.

EMPLOYEE TRAINING

- TRAIN EMPLOYEES TO REQUEST LEGAL ADVICE AND MAINTAIN CONFIDENTIALITY.

Train employees when contacting in-house counsel to state, where applicable, that they are seeking legal advice. Train employees regarding the significance of maintaining confidentiality.

- TRAIN EMPLOYEES REGARDING EMAIL “HYGIENE.”

Provide training regarding best practices when using the company’s email system.
