

Arizona DUI Consequences & How a DUI Conviction Can Affect Your Driver's License

JacksonWhite, P.C.

It's easy to take driving for granted. People hop in their cars and drive wherever they want to go without thinking twice. As a result, some people are devastated when they find out that their DUI charge and/or conviction might affect their driver's license.

Not only does an individual faced with a DUI charge have to go through criminal proceedings, they are also subjected to administrative proceedings. This means that the MVD can suspend or revoke a person's license in addition to the possible consequences included in the judge's sentence. In some instances, a person's license could be taken away for up to a year. This can cause a lot of stress for anyone living in a huge sprawling city like Phoenix, AZ.

Ultimately, the consequences of a DUI can limit a person's independence, and the thought of not being able to drive might place an extra burden on an already difficult situation.
