If you have been injured on the job, you may think that the only compensation you have coming is from your employer's workers' compensation insurance. While this may be true in some instances, there are other situations in which you may be able to pursue a Florida personal injury claim, including:

If your injury was caused by a third party, i.e., the driver of an automobile, you may be able to file a personal injury claim against them;

If a defective product caused your injury, you may be able to file a product liability claim against that product's manufacturer;

If a toxic substance caused your injury, you may be able to file a toxic claim against the substance's manufacturer;

If your injury was the result of intentional or outrageous conduct by your employer, you may be able to file a personal injury claim against the employer.

If your employer doesn't have workers compensation insurance, you still may be able to sue for damages. A Tampa personal injury attorney can help you understand what your rights are outside workers' compensation – for example, to ensure you are properly compensated for temporary or permanent disability or even pain and suffering. You may even be able to pursue punitive damages if your employer did not maintain safe working conditions.
