If an individual is arrested for driving under the influence, and a child under the age of 15 was in the car at the time of the arrest, that individual could face charges for aggravated DUI. Under Arizona law, an aggravated DUI can be charged as a class 6 felony. While a regular DUI would usually be charged as a misdemeanor, the punishment for DUI is enhanced if a child under 15 was also in vehicle.

As a possible punishment, the judge might revoke the defendant's Arizona driver's license for up to 3 years and impose restrictions on the defendant's driving privileges. Some of the other consequences of an aggravated DUI conviction can include up to 5 years of probation and hefty fines. In addition, the defendant may also be required to use an ignition interlock device.
