JUDGMENTS

Victoria

15 March 2016 - Inquest into the death of Reginald Johns Brooks - On 20 December 2013, Mr Brooks, a 99 year old male, fell and fractured his femur while admitted at South Eastern Private Hospital. He was advised that the only way to avoid persistent pain would be to undergo surgical repair. Mr Brooks agreed to the surgery being scheduled for the afternoon of 31 December 2013. Written consent was obtained by the orthopaedic surgeon prior to operating. Following the surgery, Mr Brooks' Power of Attorney (PoA) expressed concern over not being consulted prior to it occurring. The Coroner considered this at inquest. Mr Brooks died of unrelated causes a week later.

The Coroner considered that notifying a PoA is only necessary when the giver of that PoA is incompetent to make decisions due to incapacity. In this instance, Mr Brooks' cognition appeared to fluctuate day to day. The Coroner agreed with submissions that this would not preclude someone from providing informed consent at a particular time. Medical records leading up to the day of surgery described him variously as "confused", "alert", "disoriented" and "oriented". Importantly however, the nurse who undertook the pre-operative checklist shortly before consent was obtained by the orthopaedic surgeon gave evidence that Mr Brooks was able to provide correct answers to a series of questions and "did not appear to be confused". The surgeon maintained that Mr Brooks was capable of and gave a formal informed consent. The Coroner concluded that Mr Brooks, although confused at times, had the capacity to consent to surgery at the relevant time.

New South Wales

16 March 2016 - [Smith v Hunter New England Health District \[2016\] NSWSC 248](#) - The plaintiff is the wife of the deceased who committed suicide three days after being discharged from a psychiatric hospital. The statement of claim was filed almost 12 years after the alleged negligence occurred. The plaintiff sought a declaration that the cause of action commenced within the limitation period. To succeed, the plaintiff needed to demonstrate that the claim was made within three years of discovering both: that an action could be brought, and that there was available an expert opinion to support her claim.

Following her husband's death, the plaintiff met with hospital staff on numerous occasions. She also requested a coronial inquest, and filed a complaint to the Health Care Complaints Commission. The hospital maintained its treatment was appropriate; her request for an inquest was refused; and the complaint to the HCCC had not resulted in any action. At this point, the plaintiff considered she had exhausted all options available to her. She returned to work to support her children.

Some years later, she was advised for the first time that she could take legal action against the hospital. The plaintiff then engaged a solicitor. She subsequently read an expert report that supported her argument. It was argued that this is when the limitation period began. The defendant contended that the plaintiff failed to take 'all reasonable steps' to discover that an action could be brought prior to this. The court found in favour of the plaintiff, declaring that these proceedings were commenced within the limitation period.

18 March 2016 - Diabetic Retinal Screening, Grading, Monitoring and Referral Guidance - New Zealand already has a variety of local diabetic retinopathy screening services, some of which are very effective. The updated standards for grading, referral and monitoring set out in this guidance document recognise that some established programmes will have to adjust their processes and also that technology is quickly evolving. As a result this guidance aims to promote further convergence of regional services thereby reducing variation and providing a national benchmark.

The guidance outlines the key components of an organised diabetic retinal screening service so that high-quality, equitable screening can be provided for all those at risk of diabetic eye disease. It represents a statement of best practice, based on stakeholder consultation, evidence and is intended to guide the delivery of a nationally consistent programme.

Australian Medical Association (AuMA)

17 March 2016 - Genuine collaboration needed to make big advanced in closing the gap On National Close the Gap Day, AuMA President, Professor Brian Owler, said that Australia needs to see an era of genuine collaboration between all political parties to close the Indigenous health gap.

17 March 2016 - Know your product - AuMA message to consumers about private health insurance - The AuMA today released its Private Health Insurance Report Card 2016, the first report of its kind, with a clear message to consumers – know your product. AuMA President, Professor Brian Owler, said the aim of the Report Card is to provide Australian families – who contribute a substantial proportion of their household income towards private health insurance – with clear, simple information about how health insurance really works.

10 March 2016 - The human cost of Commonwealth cuts to public hospital funding – Federal Government must act - AuMA President, Professor Brian Owler, said today that public hospitals, doctors, other health workers, and patients are under increasing pressure as a result of reduced capacity – and things will only get worse without a massive injection of long-term funding from the Federal Government in the May Budget.

7 March 2016 - Media release AuMA puts spotlight on the benefits of a career in general practice - The AMA launched the new AuMA Vision for General Practice in Training 2016 at the annual AMA Trainee Forum, which was conducted in Melbourne over the weekend.
